Poor Prints Ruin Good Pictures!

¶ What shall it profit a manufacturer to produce good pictures if his positive is poorly developed and printed? The best picture loses its entertainment value if the positive is defective—and time and money are wasted. ¶ The Spoor-Thompson method of processing film by automatic machinery positively does away with over or under development and inequality in printing. ¶ This machine does not vary as does human judgment, but insures a high grade quality, uniform throughout, and at a price that none can equal. Talk to our sales manager, Mr. Charles F. Stark, in regard to service.

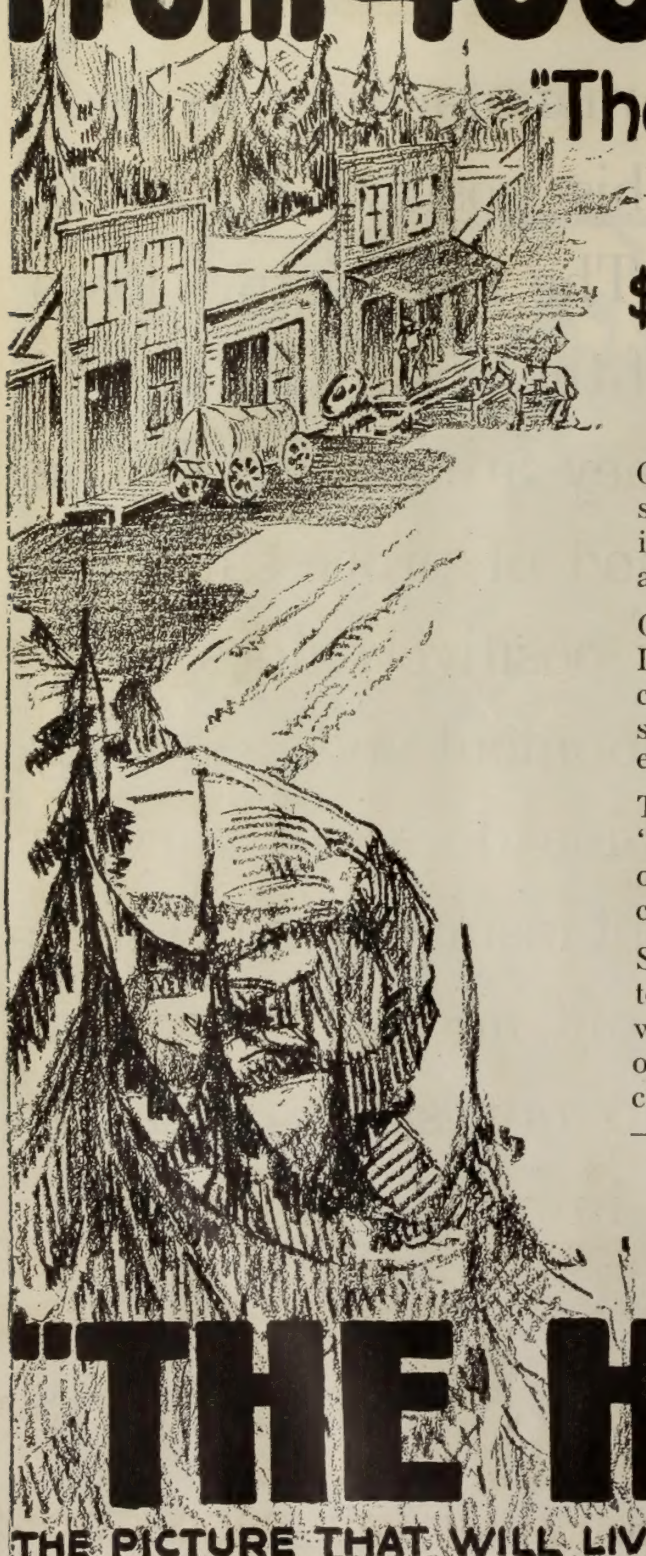
From 400 Population

"The Heart of Humanity"



$487.00 from 400 people

Out of all our mass of testimonials—out of thousands of letters, telegrams and newspaper opinions we pick just two to make our point in this advertisement.

One comes from the very small town of Driggs, Idaho—a hamlet of only 400 people. The other comes from Marcus Loew—owner of more than seventy theatres—New York's most successful exhibitor.

The Cozy Theatre in Driggs took in $486.80 on "The Heart of Humanity" from a population of only 400—or $1.21 for every man, woman and child in the place.

So much for what a small town—a hamlet — can do with this picture. Now read on the other page what Marcus Loew—the big city man —says.

"THE HEART

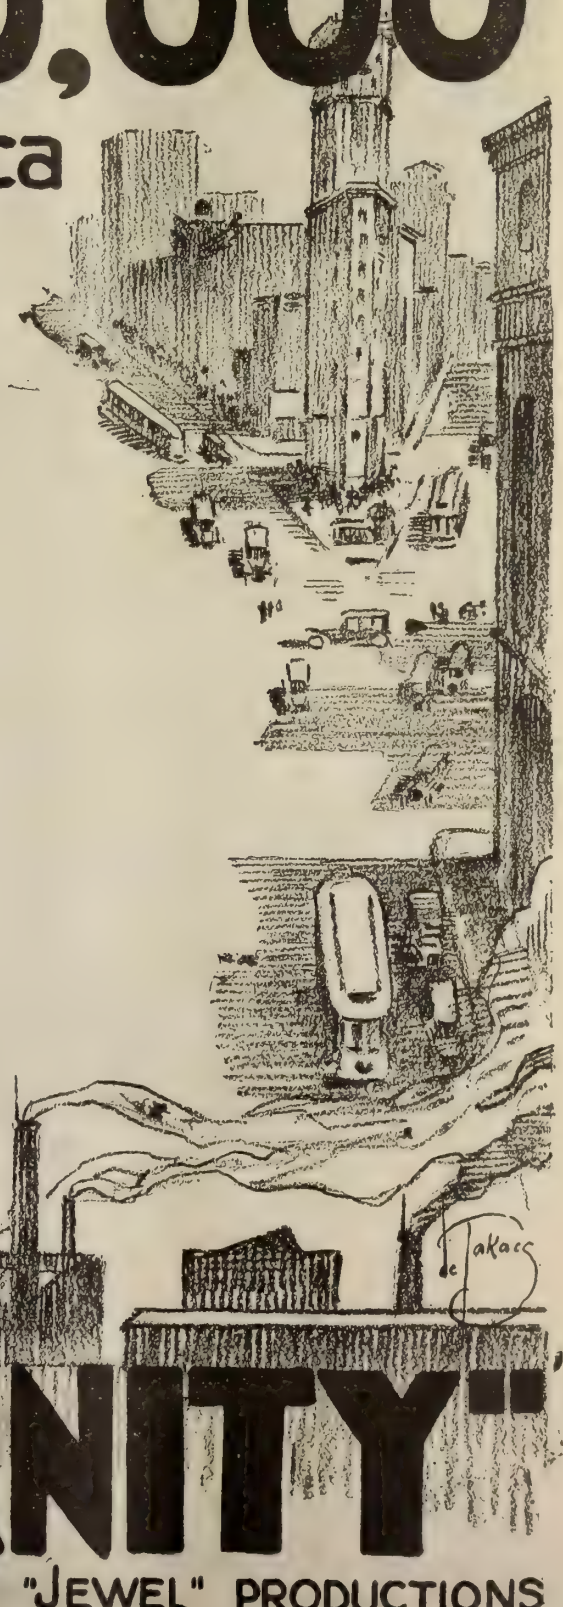
is sweeping America



Marcus Loew says:

"I cannot refrain from writing you of the most remarkable picture I have ever seen, that is, your picture, 'The Heart of Humanity.'

"It is absolutely breaking records everywhere.

"I have not heard one adverse criticism from all the people who have seen it at our theatres, which run into the millions.

"I can honestly say that I have never seen anything that ever approached it."

Book this picture to-day. Show it as soon as you can. It will be a long, long time before you can do as well again by your people or yourself.

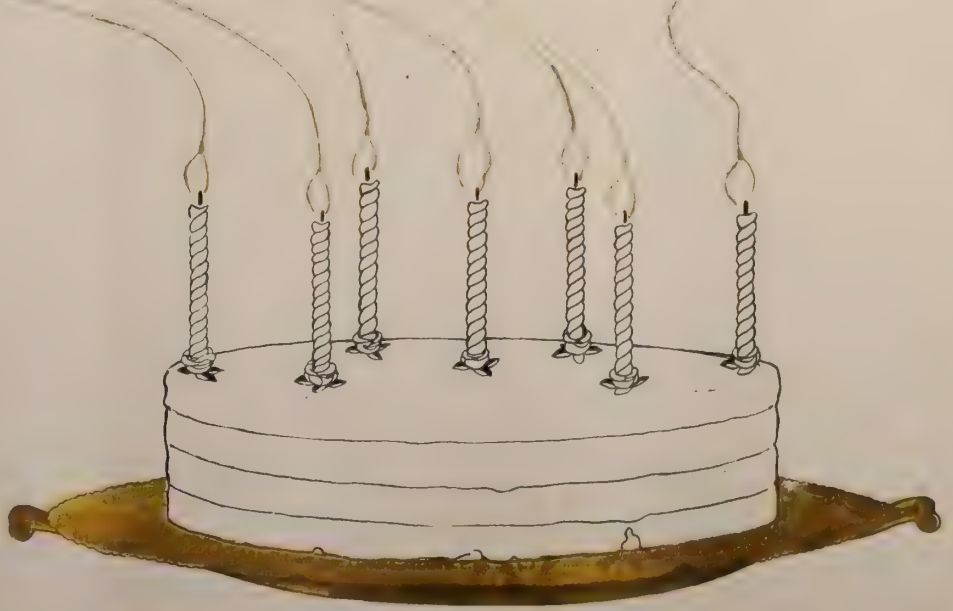
Will you come to our party?



Will you come to our party?

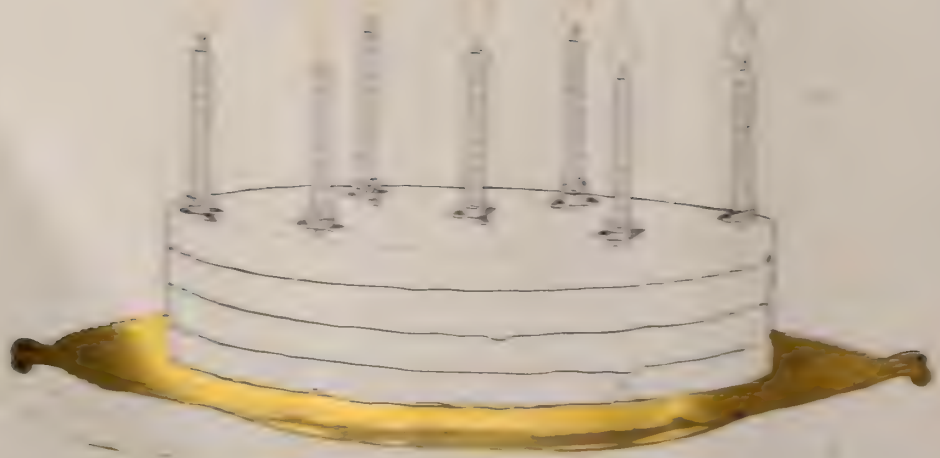
We are seven years old. That makes us the oldest producing and distributing child in the film business in the United States.

So we want you to celebrate with us.

If you are using any of the Universal product, you need no further invitation. But to those theatres which have not been using Universal pictures of late, we wish to say just this—Join our celebration by running as many Universal pictures as you have room for during June, our Anniversary Month.

If you are all booked up, squeeze in at least one Universal picture, so we can say that every theatre in the land attended our party.

Celebrate the fact that the Universal has always been a never-failing source of supply: a source you could always come to when you found disappointment elsewhere.



Celebrate the fact that there is one company in the business which has never sky-rocketed, but has shown a sure and steady improvement in quality.

Celebrate the fact that the Universal has never participated in smooth schemes to "do" the other fellow, and is always doing its level best to check the rapid rise in picture costs.

Celebrate the fact that the Universal has never had time nor inclination for stock-jobbing, cut-throat business methods or other misbegotten ideas which have been a curse on the whole industry----but that we have spent all our time, money and energy on improving, improving, improving our pictures.

We believe our Jewels and our Universal Special Attractions are the finest pictures on the market. We believe there is no comparison between the news-reels we handle and any other news-reels. We believe our serials show the result of long years of experience and study. We believe our comedies are unsurpassable. We believe our whole product is the best that the best theatres can find and we believe our ideas of prices are reasonable and fair.

The Universal in all its seven years never made such good pictures as it is making today. And it never had more youthful pep than it has today, even though it is the oldest and staunchest of all companies.

We hope every theatre in the country will run at least one Universal picture during Universal Anniversary Month, whether it happens to be a feature subject or a short subject.

We hope you will come to our party, Universal

In the literature of comedy as in the literature of drama, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation steadily maintains its policy of picking the best for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

"The Final Close-up" is one of the greatest light-comedy yarns that ever appeared in The Red Book Magazine.

How your sides ached over the pickle Nora got in at Winchester-by-the-Sea!

She, bargain-basement ingenue, ruffling it with the country club set—and caught with the goods.

"THE MONEY CORRAL"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

Money-Talk

MOST folks won't take another's word as to the value of a picture. But when reviewers say this sort of thing about "The Money Corral," they'll go see for themselves. There's a reason. Use these reviews in your ads. They sell the picture to your patrons:

"The picture never wants for action. Naturally it carries a big suspensive value, for everything is arranged to get the most of every scene. The humorous and sentimental touches give the picture tone and quality. Hart's resourcefulness is brought out with unerring skill. Jane Novak is appealing as the girl."—Motion Picture News.

"The story offers Mr. Hart excellent opportunity of the heroic sort that has made him famous, and is a decidedly agreeable vehicle."—N. Y. American.

"An interesting amount of comedy, an unhackneyed story and originality of locale, like all Hart films, it is admirably staged. No star on the screen is more expert at gauging his own type or works with more certain technique. Most audiences will like the picture immensely."—N. Y. Telegraph.

"One of the best productions Hart has put out. It has action galore, atmosphere in plenty, and a really appealing touch of sentiment. Not only correct in atmosphere, but moves with a snap right from the opening scenes and never permits the interest to wander."—Wid's.

"Fits the star to perfection. Moves at a rapid pace and embraces all sorts of exciting fights, tense moments and brisk by-play."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"A change from the ordinary, a complete and satisfactory performance in lead, support, directing and nature of story."—Moving Picture World.

"A good, thrilling Hart movie."—N. Y. Sun.

"A flock of punches. The star has every opportunity to display his prowess with his gun and in horsemanship. Thrills shot into the action make it well worth while."—Variety.

"Good entertainment, with Hart at his best."—N. Y. Times.

The Critics' Chorus

"FOR BETTER FOR WORSE should convince any doubters that may be left that Cecil B. DeMille is a great producer. It is one of the greatest pictures that has appeared on the Artcraft program."—Exhibitor's Herald.

"New in theme, action, plot, development, it is the sort of a picture that will add patrons to your list, get your theatre talked about and do excellent business whenever and wherever shown."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"Technically very nearly flawless, one of the most significant productions of recent months."—Wids.

"Another one of the perfectly human dramas that DeMille produces. Never once does he disappoint."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Rich in matter that lies close to the heart of today."—Moving Picture World.

"Times are almost innumerable when the skill of the director fairly makes the heart cry out."—Motion Picture News.

SOME EXCELLENT ADVICE FROM P.S. HARRISON

IN THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS of MAY 17, PAGE 3266

"Oh You Women"—Emerson-Loos Production

YOU will actually be at a loss what to admire the most, the excellent entertaining qualities of the picture, or the brains that conceived and executed it. As far as the writer is concerned, the credit goes to the brains. You all undoubtedly know who Anita Loos and John Emerson are; for the benefit of those who might be newcomers into the ranks of the exhibitors, however, it may be stated that the former is the one who, through the ingenious construction of the subtitles in most of the pictures of the old Triangle days, featuring Douglas Fairbanks, assisted that star's inherent, unique screen qualities to come forward at breakneck speed; the latter, an experienced stage as well as screen actor, who, as a director of several Mary Pickford and other pictures, alone and in collaboration with Miss Loos, has given ample proofs of his directorial skill. This much for the brains.

Now for the picture, as an artistic production as well as an entertainment: Have you ever dreamt of a picture that would, from the first to the very last scene unfold itself with ease, without giving you a "kick in the ribs," that is, without containing such situations as would make you feel as having received such a sensation (a sensation present in the majority of the pictures released, that jars and jolts and shocks a blunt-nerved, shock-proof spectator); a picture in which the characters act and talk as regular human beings would; a picture which will not make you sit on the edge of your seat, nor hold you spellbound, but will put every particle of your body in harmony with your good senses, in harmony with the thought of the story and every situation of it; a picture that will make you laugh so heartily that it will make you hang your hands down and give up in despair any further efforts at laughing? Well, "Oh, You Women" is the one.

You have all heard, I presume, of the "Third Sex," product of this war. This picture is a satire on that sex, and on suffragism in general. Since the production of "When Women Vote," in the happy old single reel days, some twelve years ago, pictures ridiculing suffragism have been produced aplenty; but this one is the most intelligent of them all—it drives the point home more forcefully. The authors have used irony, sarcasm, persuasion, appeal to the common sense of women, all with delicacy and force.

If you have the production of better pictures at heart, make room for more days for this picture on your program; encourage this conscientious pair of producers, as by so doing, not only you further the better picture cause, but also you automatically help shut out some inferior ones. Released through Paramount. Length, 5 reels.

The Two-Gun Girl From Flatbush

Tell that to the loyal legions of Madge Kennedy admirers in your city and what will be the answer?

A "Filler" That Fills

Almost any short subject can "fill" your program. There is only one that can fill your house—can put people in those few empty seats that mean the difference between failure and success.

The Ford Educational Weekly can do this by bringing you new patrons.

Not just people your competitor has had. If you can take them away from him, he can do the same to you.

NEW patrons—100 per cent new. People who don't ordinarily go to picture theatres. That is what you need and what the whole industry needs.

You can get these patrons with just one thing—the sort of film the newcomer likes and remembers and talks about—the scenic and industrial pictures of the Ford Educational Weekly.

The pre-eminence of the Ford product in its field is granted by every exhibitor who applies those two vital standards—quality and drawing power. The new patron recognizes this quality and becomes "a regular."

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS in 1907

CALIFORNIA ADDS TO BUILDING BOOM

San Francisco District Shows Healthy Growth— Small Towns Respond to Expanding Movement

MORE new moving picture theatres are being planned in the San Francisco field than ever before in the history of the industry, and work is now under way on a number of large houses that will be opened in the fall. Exhibitors express the opinion that this branch of the amusement business has never been more promising and every effort is being made to get new houses ready, or old ones enlarged, at the earliest possible date. Equipment houses are booking large orders and service is being booked farther in advance than for a long time.

Plans are being rapidly perfected for the new theatre of P. J. Hanlon, at Vallejo, Cal., and this will be one of the finest houses in northern California. It will represent an investment of about $150,000 and will be erected on property purchased outright by this exhibitor. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,400.

Small Towns Busy Also.

Albert Gattman, manager of the Novelty theatre, Martinez, Cal., has acquired the theatre building and has announced his intention of making extensive alterations. A gallery having a seating capacity of 250 will be added and a heating and ventilating system will be installed.

A. A. Richards, who conducts a fine house at Lodi, Cal., is preparing to erect a 1,000-seat theatre at Turlock, Cal., and expects to have work commenced on this at an early date.

Gus Gemanis, of the Crystal theatre, Porterville, Cal., has announced a plan for the remodeling and enlargement of this house before the summer season commences.

A. L. Hildebrand, manager of the Star theatre, Colusa, Cal., has purchased a site on Market street, where he will shortly open an elaborate open air theatre.

Brown Brothers are preparing to erect a large theatre at Salinas, Cal., on a central site on Main street. Frank Vesely will be manager.

Woman Building $2,500 House.

Mrs. Hartmann, of Healdsburg, Cal., is preparing to have work commenced shortly on a moving picture house to cost $25,000. H. G. S. Tucker is the lessee. The house will seat about 800.

The San Mateo Theatres Company has secured an extension of its lease on the Regent Theatre on Griffity avenue, San Mateo, Cal., and plans to make extensive alterations and improvements.

The new moving picture house to be erected at Benicia, Cal., by Walter B. Crooks, will cover a lot 50 by 100 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 600. It will cost approximately $35,000, and a $10,000 pipe organ will be a part of the equipment.

An amusement project known as the White City has been launched at Honolulu, T. H., and a moving picture theatre to cost $30,000 is planned. Frank E. Thompson is secretary of the Board of Trustees of the promoting organization.

Show May Advertise Church; Church May Advertise Show

ADVERTISING a motion picture theatre in a church and advertising a church in a motion picture theatre may become a reality.

The theatre men of Washington, D. C., have regretted apparent enmity on the part of ministers. They have always co-operated with them to the utmost and have held open their screen for publicity purposes, and have shown a willingness to run special shows for church and Sunday School benefits. This was particularly true at the Crandall string of theatres.

Harry M. Crandall, head of this string of houses, was approached by the pastor of a nearby church with the request that a slide be run after the first show each Sunday evening, stating that services were about to commence at that church. The show is out at about 7:45—the services will run between the hours of 8 and 9. Mr. Crandall has agreed to that, and in turn, made a counter-proposition to the pastor that he take advantage of a similar opportunity by running in his advertisements and notices in the daily papers and on the church bulletin board that Sunday night services would terminate in time for the members of the congregation to avail themselves of the amusement offered by the motion picture theatres and to take in the last show of the evening.

Ralph Ince to Produce for Selznick Pictures

MYRON SELZNICK announces that he has just closed a contract whereby Ralph Ince will produce for the Selznick Pictures Corporation. The first of the Ralph Ince productions will be Eugene O'Brien's debut as a Selznick star, "The Perfect Lover."

This is not Mr. Ince's first connection with Selznick productions. It was he who directed Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case," one of the first Selznick productions, when Lewis J. Selznick launched his open booking campaign. Following this big success, Mr. Ince placed to his credit a long list of big photodramas, notable among which were "To-day" and "The Co-respondent." Among the stars he has directed with distinction are Anita Stewart, Florence Reed, Olga Petrova, Robert Warwick, Elaine Hammerstein, and others.

Mr. Ince will begin work immediately upon the Eugene O'Brien picture, "The Perfect Lover."

Work on this first of the Ralph Ince productions for Selznick will begin at the Biograph studio in a few days. Part of this big plant has been leased for Selznick productions, and shortly the Olive Thomas and Elaine Hammerstein companies will begin work there also.

Northwest Exhibitors to Hold Big Convention

W. J. DRUMMOND, who has been appointed general director of the Seattle convention by the Northwest Film Board of Trade, has sent out an announcement for the first convention and ball of the allied motion picture interests of the Pacific Northwest to be held July 16-17-18-19.

The convention will consume the first three days in business and sightseeing, and on the night of the fourth day the big movie ball will take place. There will be nationally known movie stars in attendance. The convention is being held under the auspices of the Northwest Film Board of Trade and its associate members and will be the biggest affair of its kind ever attempted in the West.

Motion picture exhibitors from the four Northwest States, namely, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, will be in attendance.

There will be showings of the latest embellishments and presentation of motion pictures and of musical instruments.

There will be many novel and attractive features during the convention that will be of interest to the public and to the visiting exhibitors. The executive committee having in charge the convention and ball are: L. O. Lukan, chairman; W. A. Mead, J. Q. Clemmer, John Rantz, John Hamrick, J. A. Koerpel, H. C. Arthur, Jr., Peter David, W. J. Drummond, director general.

Picture Theatres Helping Service Men to Get Jobs

THE motion picture theatres of the country are doing a great work in finding employment for discharged soldiers and sailors, according to Colonel Arthur Woods, assistant to the Secretary of War, who is in charge of the task of placing returned men in industry.

Managers of theatres throughout the United States were recently requested by Colonel Woods to assist in this work. As a result of this request, the motion picture house managers are responding with patriotic enthusiasm, it is declared, and it is estimated that slides are now being thrown on the screen before audiences aggregating 20,000,000 people.

MODEL SUNDAY ORDINANCE PREPARED

New York State Conference of Mayors Drafts Law Providing for Local Regulation or Censorship

IN response to numerous inquiries from cities in New York as to just what other cities in the United States are doing along local censorship lines, the New York State Conference of Mayors, the headquarters of which is located in Albany, has just completed a draft of a model ordinance providing for local regulation or censorship in whatever city is desirous of adopting it. Ever since Governor Alfred E. Smith signed the bill which leaves Sunday motion picture shows in New York up to the localities themselves to decide, the State Conference of Mayors has been flooded with all sorts of requests for information. The letters indicate that more than one city proposes to censor the films that will be shown on Sundays.

Much Information Received.

W. P. Capes, secretary of the Conference, has secured a mass of information from such cities as San Francisco, Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis and Rochester, where there is more or less local censorship of film. This information has now been issued by the State Conference and is being sent to all cities throughout New York state, and contains a model ordinance which can be adopted by any city in case it should desire to exercise the regulatory powers that have been conferred on it by the passage of the recent bill in the Legislature.

The ordinance, as adopted by the State Conference of Mayors, suggests a commission of five members, serving without pay and which shall not contain any person who is interested financially in any branch of the motion picture business. This commission is to be given the power of free access to all motion picture houses, and where violations are discovered, of reporting the same to the chief of police. Pictures that have not been passed by the National Board of Review can be exhibited if they meet with the approval of the local censorship body. In case of protest of a film that has been passed by the National Board, the local commission can review the same and render a decision.

Suggest Local Review Board.

In explaining this, Secretary Capes said that there were some pictures, such as "The Birth of a Nation," which while they might be acceptable in one locality, might not be so in another. In case any exhibitor desires to show a picture which had not been approved by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, the proposed ordinance gives that person the right of at least three days before the picture is to be shown to file with the commission a written notice of his intention, together with the name of the picture, the manufacturer, the general character, as well as the date and place of display. The commission will then review the picture, or any one member is given the power to review and to approve or prohibit either in its entirety or in part any pictures so shown. In case of grievance on the part of an exhibitor he is given the right to call for a review of the picture before at least three members of the commission.

The ordinance, while effective for all seven days of the week, is really intended to regulate pictures to be shown on Sundays. Judging from some of the letters which have been received by the State Conference of Mayors recently, there will be absolutely nothing but the kindest feelings shown to exhibitors providing they do not go to work now and show on Sunday lurid pictures or pictures of a more or less sensational nature, and which bear sensational or possibly rather suggestive titles.

Some Towns May Have Censors.

The majority of the cities in this state, according to Mr. Capes, will take action in the very near future, through their board of aldermen, in determining whether or not Sunday shows are to prevail in their respective localities. In some places it is evident that the city fathers will take no chances on sensational pictures being shown on Sunday and that the local censorship commission will be formed at once.

The Mayors' Conference is also receiving many inquiries as to the amount of license fees which is being charged in other cities both in this and adjoining states where Sunday movies prevail. This information is now being compiled by Mr. Capes. GRANT.

Indianapolis Pastors Renew Fight for Sunday Closing

APPARENTLY not contented with the fact that the Indiana State Legislature failed to take any definite action on the Sunday motion picture question, the ministers of Indianapolis are going to renew their efforts to close theatres in Indianapolis on Sundays.

Members of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, at a meeting on Monday, May 5, voted to ask the Church Federation of Indianapolis to canvass the Sunday commercialized amusement situation and at once take steps to bring about a strict enforcement of the law. The federation will be requested to report back to the Ministerial Association on the action taken.

It was also proposed by the Ministerial Association that action be taken toward constructive, free, recreational measures "looking toward what would be considered a rational observance" of the Sabbath. Announcement was made at the meeting that a committee from the organization would confer with the city administration on the matter.

Utica Managers Fighting to Legalize Sunday Shows

UTICA'S (N. Y.) fight for Sunday pictures is now on in earnest, but the manner in which the exhibitors of the city are carrying on the fight is most unusual. Every day there appears in the daily papers a protest from some organization in the city while the exhibitors are gathering in signed petitions from those who want Sunday shows. Before Utica can have Sunday pictures a bill permitting them must be passed by the Common Council composed of representatives from every ward in the city. If it is passed, the bill then goes to the Mayor's hands, who will either pass or veto it. The council met Wednesday evening, May 6, and it was thought at that time that some sort of action would take place. But the council decided to give the matter more consideration before acting. However, there was received protests from two ministers of the city, one representing his church and the other a group of local preachers.

Previous to the decision made by Governor Smith in regard to the bill a large number of petitions were signed in favor of Sunday pictures and these are being augmented to a great extent by more petition blanks which patrons of the theatres have filled out.

There is an overwhelming majority of persons in Utica in favor of Sunday motion pictures, but they have not been given sufficient chance to present them and until this opportunity is possible, those opposed will control the speech in the matter.

Referendum on Sunday Shows.

Whether or not Auburn, N. Y., will have Sunday pictures depends to a great extent upon the result of a canvass being made by the Chamber of Commerce of that city at this time. A special committee representing the Chamber has sent questionnaires to all members with a request that they indicate their opinion and return the paper. The result is yet unknown.

Little Falls Legalizes Sunday Shows.

Little Falls, N. Y., will be allowed to have Sunday motion pictures from 2.30 to 5 and from 8.30 to 10.30 p. m., commencing as soon as the managers decide to open, according to a bill passed by the city fathers at their meeting on Tuesday, May 6. In Little Falls there is a theatre just across the Barge Canal that has been running on Sundays for a long time while the two houses in the city proper were not allowed to operate. The passing of the law now makes it possible for all to operate on Sunday.

Oswego May Have Sunday Shows.

At its session Monday night, April 28, the Common Council of Oswego, N. Y., ordered a public hearing for Friday, May 9, on the Sunday picture proposition. Only one alderman stated that he had received requests to oppose Sunday entertainments. Indications at this time point to the permitting of Sunday pictures in Oswego.

Council Fails to Legalize Sunday Shows.

The proposition to have the Common Council of Syracuse, N. Y., pass an ordinance on Monday, April 28, legalizing Sunday pictures was sidetracked by Corporation Counsel Stewart Hancock, who ruled that the ordinance was unnecessary as the Syracuse theatres right along had been operating on Sunday under a license issued by the city.

Jamestown 2 to 1 for Sunday Shows.

The biggest vote ever cast in any election in Jamestown, N. Y., showed that that municipality was 2 to 1 for Sunday picture shows. Tabulations on the returns from the special election held Saturday, May 10, showed 6,250 were for and 3,050 against.

ASSOCIATION GOES AFTER "FIT TO WIN"

National Industry Body Terms Film Improper for Public Showing—Hygiene Worker Takes Exception

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has fired another gun at the film called "Fit to Win."

This picture was produced for the United States Army by the American Social Hygiene Association and other co-operating agencies and was used with very beneficial results in the various cantonments of this country and Europe in the campaign against venereal diseases. Since then, however, it has fallen into the hands of private individuals who are alleged to be exhibiting it to mixed audiences composed of men and women and boys and girls.

In addition to the effect of this picture on the minds of young people, there is this serious condition to contend with: If pictures like "Fit to Win" are permitted to be exhibited, the obvious result will be that it will incite unscrupulous persons to show other pictures built along the same lines.

Association "Cleaning House."

The National Association recently started a nation wide campaign to "clean house," as far as the showing of suggestive or salacious pictures is concerned. It was with this end in view that a recent ultimatum was issued to the thousands of exhibitors in every state in the Union to the effect that they must either stop showing indecent pictures or find themselves blacklisted by every producer and distributor represented in the National Association—which means 95 per cent of the producers and distributors of the country. Thus, an exhibitor who shows a film condemned by the National Association will find himself unable to secure any other films and he will therefore be compelled to close his theatre.

This drastic action met with the immediate commendation of the press and clergy of the country, and considerable indignation is now voiced over the fact that the Public Health Service of the United States Government is the first opponent to the movement to give the public clean pictures and nothing but clean pictures.

Determined to Carry on Fight.

The association, however, is determined to carry its fight to the last ditch until pictures like "Fit to Win" are barred from public exhibition, and, acting through the chairman of the Censorship Committee, Gabriel L. Hess has sent the following wire to Surgeon-General Blue. Mr. Hess is now awaiting the action of the Public Health Service before making the next move in his campaign:

"The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been co-operating with various Government departments for the furtherance of their propaganda during the war. It desires to continue this co-operation during the reconstruction period. The association is, however, unalterably opposed to the commercial distribution of the photoplay, 'Fit to Win,' originally produced for exhibition to selected audiences.

"If the Division of Venereal Diseases of the Treasury Department believes the propaganda important and desires the co-operation of the motion picture industry in placing it before the public, you may feel sure of our assistance, provided, first, that the picture is not distributed through commercial channels for profit; second, that it is exhibited directly under the auspices of local boards of health or public health associations co-operating with the Surgeon-General's office; third, that young people be not allowed to attend the theatre; fourth, that the financial returns from the exhibition received from admittance fees be devoted to some public purpose and not to the profit of a commercial organization.

"If you will agree to the above, canceling your arrangement with present commercial distributors, the association will secure the co-operation of local theatres for exhibition without expense.

"In the absence of your co-operation the association feels compelled to use every means at its disposal to prohibit the commercial distribution and exhibition of the picture as calculated to create controversy and reflect serious criticism on the motion picture as a clean form of amusement.

"To this end producing and distributing members of the National Association will publicly announce their refusal to furnish their product to any exhibitor who exhibits 'Fit to Win' for an admittance fee. This will automatically debar the picture from the leading theatres of the United States."

Hygiene Association Takes Exception.

The American Social Hygiene Association has taken exception to the action of the National Association as outlined in Mr. Hess' telegram to Surgeon-General Blue. In a long letter to Mr. Hess, William H. Zinsser, director of the department of public information of the Hygiene Association, states that the National Association's objections to the public showing of the film "constitute a deliberate and reprehensible attempt, for reasons not necessary to go into, to crush at its beginning one of the most effective means for education on the vitally important subject of venereal disease," and that the views reveal "a striking lack of information on the part of your association of the whole subject, and of the picture in question."

Continuing, Mr. Zinsser takes up the proposal made by the motion picture interests, and emphasizes the point that there is no intention of showing the picture in regular motion picture theatres.

Held for Showing "Fit to Win."

Another highlight in the "Fit to Win" controversy was struck on Monday, May 12, when the New York police arrested Alfred D. Harsten, manager of the Gotham Theatre, and Isaac Slutzer, a distributor, in connection with the showing of the picture.

When the case came up in Harlem Court on Wednesday, May 14, Magistrate Blau adjourned it for a week at the request of the attorney for the defendants, and pending a decision in the Supreme Court. Both men were released on $1,000 bail.

General Blue Agrees to Confer.

In refutation of charges made by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that the film, "Fit to Win," is unfit to show, Surgeon-General Rupert Blue, of the United States Public Health Service, has sent a telegram to the censorship committee of the association declaring the picture to be highly educational, and screened with the fullest authority and indorsement of the Federal Government.

General Blue agrees to confer with the National Association on its offer to exhibit "Fit to Win" free of charge, provided such exhibition is made at the usual hours that moving picture theatres are open and that the association also provide all necessary advertising accessories.

Picture Is Complete Show.

As the screening of the picture consumes more than an hour and a quarter of time, being a complete and lengthy program in itself, it is difficult to understand how an exhibition arrangement such as the Surgeon-General requires can be planned. Public Health Films, under official designation by the United States Public Health Service, is now exhibiting the film commercially as a complete attraction and paying for all advertising accessories.

Foster Engaged By New England Metro.

The American Feature Film Company has engaged Walter Foster to travel through Rhode Island and a portion of the Massachusetts territory in the interests of Metro. Preparatory to the big drive on "The Red Lantern" a general reorganization of the salesmen's zones is in progress.

PERCY L. WATERS SCREENS "COME BACK"

Becomes President and General Manager of Both Triangle Producing and Distributing Organizations

PERCY L. WATERS has again entered moving picture activities. By vote of Triangle's boards of directors, both the Film Corporation and the Distribution Corporation, he became president and general manager of those organizations on Friday, May 9. Mr. Waters has been associated with Triangle in an advisory capacity for more than a year, and now takes active command.

Interests represented by S. A. Lynch, Fred Kent and Y. F. Freeman, who have been financially concerned in Triangle for some time, were taken over by the stockholders of the two corporations and the Lynch faction has been eliminated. Mr. Waters said to a Moving Picture World reporter that the Lynch interests have from the first been only a matter of financing the distributing organization, which now returns to the control of Triangle.

Aitken President of Board.

Harry E. Aitken, who have been president of Triangle, became chairman of the board of directors of Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Waters was elected to the office vacated by Mr. Aitken and was also chosen general manager. Later the directors of the Triangle Distributing Corporation elected Mr. Waters president and general manager of the exchange system.

The return of Percy Waters to film activities will be of great interest to the trade in general. From the time the Edison interest came into moving pictures, Mr. Waters has been active in the business, save for about two years following his retirement from active participation in the General Film Company. Two years was enough of retirement for Mr. Waters, and he interested himself in Triangle March 23, 1918. Now he takes full charge of both the producing and distributing organizations.

Hedda Nova to Play Title Role in Big Universal Film

HEDDA NOVA has been engaged by the Universal company to play the title role in "The Spitfire of Seville," Joseph Franklin Poland's latest photoplay, which has been purchased by the Universal for a super-production. Priscilla Dean, who was scheduled to play the title role, is ill with pneumonia, and Mlle. Nova has been chosen to take her place in the production.

Mlle. Nova has been starred in Vitagraph serial productions and has already become known to American picture patrons. Born in Odessa, Russia, and educated in Berlin, Mlle. Nova was for several years a stage and screen favorite on the European continent.

She scored her first American hit in "The Barrier," with Mitchell Lewis, which Selig produced from the novel by Rex Beach. She has since appeared in such productions as "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invisible." She was cast in one of the leading roles in the filmization of the Cyrus Townsend Brady novel, "A Matter of Mere Education," which was produced under the title of "Why the World Forgot."

Thurston Hall will be Mlle. Nova's leading man. George Seigmann will direct the star.

JUNE TO BE BIG UNIVERSAL MONTH

Every Department of Organization Working at Top Speed to Make Seventh Anniversary Real Success

UNIVERSAL is working as it never worked before. With the celebration month rapidly approaching, every department is teeming with activity, with the one purpose of making the anniversary month a banner one. Universal celebrates its seventh anniversary during the month of June. The company is proud of its record, and every effort is being made to celebrate the next month in a fitting manner.

Unusual plans are being made by the Universal sales department. This department is planning on making the month of June the biggest in the history of the sales department.

Universal Wants 100 Per Cent. Month.

Every effort is to be made to have every theatre in America run at least one Universal picture during June. Universal wants a perfect score of 100 per cent. for the booking of pictures during that month. Every poster that will be used by an exhibitor during the anniversary month will carry a sticker with the words "Universal Anniversary."

In addition to the sales department Universal's advertising is planning some novel effects and a large amount of additional advertising will be issued during the campaign.

Universal promises the exhibitor some of the best pictures ever produced for release, and it is said these pictures will do as much as any other thing to add to the success of the celebration month and the beginning of Universal's eighth year.

Two Popular Stars Put Their Heads Together.

Jack Richardson and little Ben Alexander are solving big problems in Triangle's "The Mayor of Filbert."

Harvey Gates Added to Goldwyn's Scenario Staff

EXTENSIVE plans for additional scenario output at the Goldwyn studios are being made by J. G. Hawks, managing editor. Negotiations for several important works of friction are now under way, and the staff of writers at the Culver City studios are working on a number of new adaptations.

The newest addition to the scenario force is Harvey Gates, a leading screen author, who comes backed by a long record of cinema successes, dating from the days of the Biograph company, for which he wrote his first screen story. His most notable achievements perhaps are "Hell Morgan's Girl" and "The Wildcat of Paris." In addition, Mr. Gates adapted Harry Carey's first big feature, "The Three Godfathers" from a Peter B. Kyne story. Before his affiliation with Goldwyn as a staff writer, Mr. Gates was a newspaper man, reviewer and special writer for the Dramatic Mirror, publicity director for a big motion picture concern, and free-lance scenario writer. During the latter period he wrote for the Essanay and Morosco companies. At the Goldwyn studios he is at work on a vehicle for Pauline Frederick.

Thompson Buchanan, the American author, another recent Goldwyn acquisition, is working on an original story for Madge Kennedy.

MONOPOLY IMPOSSIBLE, SAYS PATHE

Pioneer Producer-Distributor Believes Lack of Specialization in Scenarios a Menace to Business—Better Stories Would Reduce Production Profitably

CHARLES PATHE, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and director of the great international organization which bears his name, seldom speaks for the press, but when he does so his voice has the weight of authority, and what he says has its origin in ripe deliberation, a broad experience, and knowledge enlarged by personal observation in most of the civilized countries of the world. Mr. Pathe is the real pioneer of the motion picture business. He has been part, and an important part, of the industry since its inception; he has seen the motion picture transform itself from a toy to a great instrument of education and amusement; he has seen it become great and hopes for it to become even greater. He has seen individuals, one after the other, endeavor to secure a monopoly of the business and has refused to be a party to their attempts.

Monopoly of Business Impossible.

"No individual, no organization, can hope to control the motion picture business," said Mr. Pathe when seen at his office at 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York, a short time after his arrival to this country. "Creative skill is not given to one person or a few. The history of the business proves that exhibitors desire to present good pictures to their patrons without regard to the trademarks which they bear. Good films do not depend so much upon their stars as they do upon the stories which they depict, and their directors. There can be no monopoly of the imagination which creates the story, or that which realizes it before the motion picture camera.

"The independent producer who has a good story, adaptable to the screen, and who produces it adequately (and there will always be such producers) will have no difficulty in finding a distributor for his film. Monopoly in our industry would have the effect of impeding its progress; there would be no encouragement toward constant improvement in quality. Competition inevitably insures progress. We may all hope for better pictures and a satisfactory growth in business as long as the door is open to individual effort—and I fail to see how it can be closed.

Lack of Care in Scenarios a Menace.

"The most serious menace to the motion picture business is the lack of specialization in the making of scenarios. At the time of my last visit to this country I noticed that this branch of the industry did not receive the attention which it deserved; that the most important in a film of the first quality is a story of the first quality, and that the story must take precedence of the star in the production of pictures. It would seem that the main defect in the lack of quality in pictures being known, it should be easy to find a remedy, and having found it to apply it; but unfortunately such is not the case.

"Future dividends depend upon those who write, or will write, for the screen. Our writers do not sufficiently develop their ideas. Their desire, and this is natural under the conditions, seems to be to turn out as many stories which are marketable as possible. This tendency should be curbed.

Study Would Reduce Production.

"The production of negatives would be immediately reduced (and everyone will admit that this is desirable) if such producer understood the vital importance of studying with the greatest possible care each of the hundreds of scenes which compose a five or six reel feature. Were this done many stories which are insufficiently developed and are lacking in the essentials, but which under present conditions are put into pictures, would never be produced and this would be to the good of all; of the stars who through such pictures lose their popularity; of the producers and distributors who through such pictures lose money and prestige.

"Furthermore, such action would result in a very definite improvement in quality in the pictures which were produced, and therefore would be to the financial betterment of all connected with the industry. No producer should accept a story unless he is convinced of its future success as a picture. Even if he were to err in his judgment the picture at any rate would not be a triviality. In confining the production of pictures to stories which meet with the real appreciation of those competent to judge the returns from each negative would naturally be increased, and that to a pronounced degree.

Charles Pathe.

Scenarios Should Receive Care.

"The scenario should be most carefully worked out and the details well developed. Owing to the fact that a feature picture demands more situations than are necessary in a play written for the stage, I believe that the story for the screen will always profit by the collaboration of several authors, rather than by the work of one person only. Each of us has had occasion to make justified criticism of various scenes which were part of a production justly known as a masterpiece in its entirety. This would prove that the author has left too large a margin to the director who has been intrusted with the adequate interpretation of his ideas.

"Nothing should be left to the initiative of the director except to adequately carry out the ideas of the author. It would be to the advantage of the producer and the motion picture business in general if the director and the author, by means of royalties, were interested in the final success of the picture. They would thus have the necessary encouragement to give to the film the care and attention it deserves.

High Prices Illustrate Demand.

"The high prices which are paid for stories of good quality, either books or stage successes, illustrate the demand which exists for really good material. It would seem that in view of these high prices the screen should possess authors who are as capable as their colleagues of the printed book. That the number of good screen authors is as small as it is, is sufficient proof that our present methods of paying for their services are bad.

"I have observed with interest during the last twelve months the success with which Pathe Exchange, Inc., has distributed pictures under the so-called open booking plan, a policy which, it seems, is now receiving the serious attention of every important American distributor. It has given us most excellent results, with the inevitable result that there has been a reduction in the number of pictures which we have released, and a corresponding increase in the average quality. I had occasion to remark the last time that I was here, upon the serious error which is committed in making good productions stand the losses upon negatives of little or no value. Open booking tends to eliminate, or at least mitigate, this trouble, since each film is booked upon its individual merits. In this way the tendency is to produce well, instead of producing much, which, as Shakespeare says, 'is a consummation devoutly to be wished.'

Duty Is To Improve.

"That the motion picture business is good at the present, and that this condition prevails in most of the countries of the world, is a source of gratification with us all. But we should not lose sight of the fact that we should strive to retain the approval of the public now that we have gained it; that we should progress and not stand still; that we should deserve rather than demand or beg. Our duty is clear; to improve and to continue to improve. No business can prosper unless it renders a real service. And it is our duty to see that we render such service.

"You will pardon me if I express here the pleasure I have experienced in finding the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in so excellent a condition. Mr. Brunet has understood and applied the absolute principle in our industry, that success and prestige cannot be obtained by quantity, but only by quality. I have found the organization united and working as one, filled with enthusiasm, and that which is so rare, animated with the feeling of unity. I am proud of what the organization has accomplished and is accomplishing, and have every confidence in what it will do, working in such harmony."

MANY AIDS FOR NEW BENNISON FILM

Goldwyn Making Intensive Effort to Help Exhibitor Exploit "Road Called Straight"

GOLDWYN is making an intensive effort to help motion picture theatre owners throughout the country put over Louis Bennison's newest Betzwood picture, "The Road Called Straight" in a manner befitting what officials of the distributing company believe is its worth. A special campaign of exploitation, showmanship and advertising has been prepared to aid exhibitors in extracting every ounce of value from what is regarded as an unusually strong production of a star whose popularity is growing.

Exhibitors are advised to have prepared a week or ten days in advance of their showing of the picture, white cards 11x14 or 22x28 printed in red with a black border, reading: "This is 'The Road Called Straight'—Louis Bennison."

These are to be posted conspicuously on every available post or tree, particularly in outlying districts or on roads heavily travelled by motors. They are to be linked up with "teaser" advertising in newspapers or on throwaways, using the same wording and omitting the name of the theatre, the whole stunt to be followed later by the theatre's regular newspaper advertising.

It is suggested that since the production deals with a cowboy who comes East to make a ridiculous debut in society, an interesting and attractive window display could be arranged by combining cowboy togs, a saddle, bridle, heavy pistol and other Western trappings with a Prince Albert coat, silk hat, gloves, stick and other fashionable apparel and accoutrements. Haberdashers, it is pointed out, will be glad to co-operate with the theatres in this, even to the extent of borrowing the "horsey" stuff from the local saddler. Portraits of Louis Bennison should accompany the displays.

A stunt calculated to attract box office interest and at the same time add many names to the theatre's mailing list, is this: Two weeks before "The Road Called Straight" is shown, place a wide-brimmed Stetson hat, preferably of the fawn color popular with cowboys, in the theatre lobby. Below this should be hung a large question mark, cut from Bristol board or heavy paper and colored. Directly beneath should be a line reading: "Whose Hat Is This?"

It is suggested that great stress be laid on direct mail advertising. In a press sheet prepared for the production, Goldwyn's service department outlines a letter or mailing card to be sent to regular patrons.

Over 10,000 Actors Registered with World's Casting Head

WITH the casting of "Phil for Short," the new World Picture now in process of production with Evelyn Greeley as the star, there is recorded on the books of the casting director of World Pictures over 10,000 actors who want to work in pictures.

At the studio at Fort Lee, which the World Pictures owns and where all pictures of this company are made, is kept a registry of actors in the files, which, by the way, is as complete as human ingenuity can create, the name of the actor, what he has done in pictures as well as the spoken drama, his height, colorings, and general physical characteristics are kept. His address, telephone number, salary and, in fact, every available bit of information is registered.

This system was created by R. B. MacIntyre, casting director for the company. In addition, Mr. MacIntyre has a list of all animals that can be secured at a moment's notice, odds and ends, such as pet birds, babies, automobiles, flying machines, boats of all descriptions, and a thousand and one kinds of things that might be used in some production.

Announce Plans for Johnny Dooley Films

DETAILS concerning the launching of the popular comedian, Johnny Dooley, in comedy films, have just been made public by Clarence L. Bach, president of the Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, Inc., with offices in the Longacre Building, New York.

The company will make two reelers, and two comedies have been completed at the Biograph studio, on East 175th street, New York. The third is now being cast, and Director John D. Schulze will begin work on it Monday, May 19.

That Johnny Dooley is all that was expected of him as a film comedian is said to be demonstrated by his first picture. His personality, his unique methods of putting over his fun, his unusual acrobatic ability and his long experience as a pantomimist combine to make him an ideal film comedian.

The Dooley comedies will be released under the general title of "The Office Force," and will be based to a large extent on the comic series of that name which Bide Dudley writes for the New York Evening World. In each one the comedian will be seen as the fresh office boy. Bide Dudley is writing the scenarios.

The cast supporting Mr. Dooley includes Tom Blake, Lillian Hall, Dora Mills Adams, Alice Mann and Walter Lewis.

Martha Mansfield, celebrated beauty of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic, is cast for the principal role opposite Dooley, and to add interest to the occasion, Director John D. Schulze has selected twenty of the prettiest and most vivacious girls of the Frolic as a Dooley Beauty Brigade.

Mr. Bach is not yet ready to announce his plan for the distribution of the Johnny Dooley comedies.

HOW THOMAS OF OMAHA DOES THINGS

Manager of Rialto, in Nebraska's Metropolis, Very Busy Person, and He's Getting the Rocks—Has Public Pulse Always at His Finger-ends

By Walter K. Hill

AMONG the many picture showmen who came to town for the first screening of the Rothapfel Unit Program was H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto, Omaha, who lingered for a full week hereabout to see the shows and refresh his ideas on showmanship. When the Moving Picture World man found Mr. Thomas at the Hotel Astor the Nebraskan was in a pleasantly communicative mood and for more than two hours the interview rambled through all phases of theatricals.

The impression still sticks that Mr. Thomas is a picture showman of acute understanding—a live wire, full-charged with the voltage of enterprising showmanship. He talked on many angles of the game from the way he "puts a picture over" to the psychology of advertising effects on the theatre-going public. Thomas, in short, knows his game and plays it as he knows it.

"We have lately finished off a three months' fight against proposed censorship legislation," said Mr. Thomas, "and Nebraska will have none of it. Most of the three months the Legislature was in session I lived in Lincoln, camping on the trail of every possible enemy of censorship for pictures. We beat the measure 18 for to 64 against."

Believes Producers Should Control.

"This despite the continual distribution (just when the Legislature was in session and the feeling was hottest) of pictures that never should be released—pictures with sensational and suggestive titles and subject matter just as bad as their titles. Out in Nebraska we hear that the producers are going to be their own censors and watch production. If this is done the fight against censorship will be won in every state where the 'reformers' go against the picture man. Control should be at the source; producers should control each other's desire for 'tainted money' that comes from salacious pictures."

Asked about the matter of Sunday opening out his way, Mr. Thomas said that various cities throughout the state were working for local option measures. Shows on Sunday have been permitted, under state law, for many years, but it has been only recently that the several towns have started in for local sanction to show on the first day of the week.

An interesting condition developed in Fremont, where the public wanted Sunday shows. The rival candidates for mayor were both against the proposition.

"Dark Horse" Won Sunday Race.

Someone secretly "filed" the nomination of an independent who favored liberal Sunday measures and "sprung" him as a surprise on the day before election. It was necessary for voters to write the name of the "dark horse" in ink on every ballot that was cast for him—and he carried the election by more than 400 majority.

"Sunday opening in other Nebraska cities," said Mr. Thomas, "will hurt our business on that day in Omaha—for the habit has been formed by hundreds who come to our town for the week end because Sunday is too dull for them at home. The automobile is working wonders out our way. Practically every farmer in Nebraska owns a machine and goes where he wants to whenever he chooses."

Says Broadway Is in a Rut.

Asked how the big New York picture theatres compared with those in other cities, Mr. Thomas declared that Broadway screen managers are in a rut and decline to get out of it.

"The three big houses look to me exactly as they did when I was here a year ago," he said. "Out in the theatre I manage we change our setting for every picture; we advertise in wholesale lots, pull 'stunts' and keep our house before the public in every way we can devise. We have a scenic artist on the weekly payroll who paints sets for both of the A. H. Blank houses in Omaha—the Strand and the Rialto. We get a flash at the picture and paint a set that properly frames the photoplay; we build a set that represents some location or some specific element in the story."

Sneaked Away the Rocks.

"To cite an instance," Mr. Thomas continued: "When we played Nazimova in 'Out of the Fog' we hauled twenty loads of sand and spread it on the stage to give the seashore effect that was essential to the subject. They were excavating for a sewer half a block from the Rialto and great hunks of rock were piled high in the street. In the dead of night we 'borrowed' the rock and placed them on the stage to complete our seashore.' The contractor looked all over the neighborhood to solve the mysterious disappearance of his rocks. He was telling me the story while he stood with me at the back of the house and gazed upon the objects of his search—but the sand saved the rocks. When the week was over we hauled away the sand and took the rocks back to the sewer contractor."

Suburban Houses Give Opposition.

Asked about business conditions Mr. Thomas said that while there were four other theatres of good size in the downtown districts the Strand and Rialto got their stiffest opposition from the 35 picture houses scattered throughout the various 'neighborhoods' and in the suburbs.

"Five years ago," said Mr. Thomas, "there were 45 of these houses running, but the big houses down town have put ten of them out of business. There are still enough left to keep us on our toes to attract our people. While we can't always depend upon such good attendance, an idea of what can be done in the Rialto may be gathered from our showings of 'Don't Change Your Husband.' We played to 50,000 admissions—one fifth of Omaha's total population. And that's why De Mille is my favorite director."

Mr. Blank's organization, owning houses in Des Moines as well as the Strand and Rialto in Omaha, is made up of representative citizens of those communities. The Omaha concern has as directors an ex-governor, a U. S. Senator and a Democratic National Committeeman. "With such men as these interested in pictures," said Mr. Thomas, "we can get along pretty well in political issues and we have the respect and confidence of the entire community.

High Class Men Own Theatres.

"It is my opinion that in all of the large cities in the West and Middle West the type of men who have financed and who control the big picture theatres are representative of the best class of business men. Pictures are attracting the big men of commerce—the producers should consider this when they are trying to kill the goose that lays the golden egg by producing improper pictures."

The Omaha showman cited numerous incidents where pictures have been "put over" in the Rialto by advertising. He told of one show that had fallen down for Mr. Blank in Des Moines, while in Omaha it "cleaned up." Mr. Thomas writes his own advertisements and keeps tabs on his press agent to see that the publicity is of the style and kind to best exploit the picture they are working on.

Strong for Little Mary and "Long Legs."

"I am anxious for the date to come when we play Mary Pickford, in 'Daddy Long Legs,'" said Mr. Thomas. "There is the picture of the year—because it has every element that pictures may possess to best appeal to the women. We bank on women in our theatre and I use a peculiar method to find out how the picture we have is going to go over.

"We have an 11 a. m. run of the new picture and at that time there are not many people through the gate. My ushers give me an opinion that I can almost invariably bank on; they seem to have about the right condition of mind to judge the audience value of a show. The rest of us are too mature in our opinions and showmanship—we seem to be too critical and lose the real 'slant' that makes or breaks a picture with the women."

Educating the Foreigners.

There was much more said during the World man's conversation with Mr. Thomas that would make corking good "copy"—but there is a limit to space. One thing more: Mrs. Thomas is interested in settlement work among the foreign element in South Omaha, where the packing houses and stock yards are. She showed pictures recently as an entertainment for children of foreign birth who were 10 to 15 years old. These children were amazed at what they saw on the screen. They asked Mrs. Thomas if the "people" they gazed upon were real, and some of the youngsters would not be convinced unless they could touch with their fingers the figures that moved before their eyes.

Not everyone, it would seem, has seen too much of pictures.

But it seems certain that everybody in Omaha and vicinity will know all about photoplays before Mr. Thomas finishes with them.

Famous Players-Lasky to Star Elliott Dexter

ELLIOTT DEXTER, a popular leading man, is to be starred under the Famous Players-Lasky banner. This announcement was made this week by Jesse L. Lasky, Mr. Dexter's signed contract, covering a period of years, having just been received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Dexter has just started work at the Lasky studio in Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft picturization of Sir James M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton," in which, as in most of the recent DeMille productions, he is featured in the leading male role. Following the completion of this picture, he will begin his first starring vehicle, under the direction of William C. DeMille. The title of the production is "Don't Change Your Wife," and as may be inferred, it is a sequel or companion picture to Cecil B. DeMille's "Don't Change Your Husband," in which Mr. Dexter played the leading male role.

"Of Mr. Dexter it may be truthfully said that he has well won and richly deserved the honor which elevation to stardom entails," said Mr. Lasky in commenting upon Mr. Dexter's experience and fitness. "It is hardly necessary for me to point out that he has ever attribute essential to success as a star. He is versatile, conscientious, thoroughly appreciative of the mission of the screen in furthering the highest dramatic art, and withal a fine gentleman. Moreover, he is handsome and of splendid physique and at all times acts with a fine understanding of the requirements of the character he is portraying."

A. H. Sawyer Guest of Honor.

Arthur H. Sawyer, a member of S-L Pictures, was the guest of honor at the annual reunion of the Criterion Club, held in Boston last week. This organization, one of the most famous amateur theatrical clubs in Massachusetts, held its annual reunion at the Hotel Bellevue, at which were present five of the original twenty-five members. Many prominent men attended the dinner. Mr. Sawyer was one of the speakers. He discussed the changes which have occurred during the past five years in the drama of the stage and screen.

Champion Jess Willard to Star in Big Production

JESS WILLARD, heavyweight champion of the world, will soon be seen in a seven-reel production, "The Challenge of Chance," which the Continental Pictures Corporation of Chicago, is making. Fred L. Wilks, a business man of Chicago, is president of the company. The offices of the organization are in the Continental and Commercial Bank Building, Chicago, and the New York offices are in the Fitzgerald Building. Arline Pretty is playing opposite the champion in the principal feminine role. The production is being made under the direction of Harry Revier.

Work on the production was started several weeks ago in Chicago, and Willard, with his supporting company, is now in Los Angeles completing it. Interiors are being made at the Brunton studio, but as the picture is almost entirely an out-of-doors product, the greater part of Willard's work is being done in the open.

The story of the play is being kept a secret, but the statement is made that it is a big subject with massive scenes, 3,000 persons being employed throughout the production. Willard plays the role of a wholesome, big-hearted Westerner. The prize ring has no part in the picture, although Willard is called upon to put up several hand battles in a series of thrilling adventures. He does a great deal of riding in the picture, living over again his days as a cowpuncher.

The Continental company makes announcement that this production will be handled on a big scale. An organization of advertising and sales experts, with a special exhibitor service department, has been retained to map out a compaign of exploitation.

No definite date has been set for the release of the feature, but it is understood that it will be given the public some time before the date of the championship battle, which is set for July the Fourth in Toledo.

Garson's "Hushed Hour" Gets Detroit Premiere

HARRY GARSON, who has just scored one bull's-eye with "The Unpardonable Sin," is going to let fly with his other barrel Sunday, May 18, when his second Blanche Sweet production, "The Hushed Hour," will be given its first public presentation in Detroit at the Broadway-Strand—the scene of "The Unpardonable Sin" triumph.

Mr. Garson is sanguine he will duplicate his success with the latter, and points with a great deal of pride to the cast, which is a real all-star cast, and the fact that the story is different from the usual run of screen offerings.

In the cast are: Milton Sills, Mary Anderson, Harry Northrup, Gloria Hope, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Wyndham Standing, Lydia Knott, Winter Hall, Bennie Alexander, Edward M. Kimball, Norman Selby (Kid McCoy) and Blanche Sweet.

ROTHAPFEL INITIAL UNIT PROGRAM

First Showing at the Rialto Theatre, New York, on May 9 Attracts Spectators from Many Points Who Are Liberal in Expressing Faith in the New Enterprise

By Edward Weitzel

BLAZING a trail for an untried enterprise requires courage—especially in the moving picture business. The boldness with which Samuel Rothapfel entered upon the promotion and direction of his Unit Program proves he has the courage of his convictions. Friday morning, May 9, at the Rialto Theatre, New York, there were many spectators who followed the first showing of the initial Rothapfel Unit Program with close attention and were liberal in their applause and in their expression of faith in the new enterprise.

Known heretofore only as an exhibitor, the man who led the way in bringing the showing of moving pictures to its present high standing has fearlessly challenged the leaders in the field of production and under his own direction, assisted by Wally Van, has produced a program which embraces a climax for a news or magazine reel, a one-reel novelty prelude, a five-part feature, a pictured epigram, and a one-reel comedy. An appropriate overture and a complete musical setting accompanies the program.

Some contract to be finished in six weeks! That this method of supplying the moving picture theatres with eight or ten programs a year is going to completely revolutionize the old way of doing things is not foreshadowed by the initial Unit Program. Its most impressive feature is the promise it gives of what may be accomplished in this direction. Taken on its own merits alone the first Unit shows that its comedy numbers outclass the feature and the prelude.

For downright cleverness the pictured epigram, "A Thought of Equity," leads the bill. The George V. Hobart new idea comedy, "Wild Flowers," also is uncommonly amusing. "False Gods," the feature, which has been cut and much improved since the first showing, will be generally liked. It will break no artistic records, but it is sufficiently well done to court comparison with the average program feature. The prelude, "The Last Hour," is the weakest number of the first Unit. The most difficult form of screen composition, its production is a respectable achievement, but it does not awe with its beauty as would have been the case had the full possibilities of the theme been realized.

Without previous practice as a producer and director, Samuel Rothapfel set himself a task that well might stagger a staff of specialists. He has acquitted himself so well under the circumstances that his quickness to grasp the right way of doing things and his resolution and untiring energy in putting his newly acquired knowledge into effect will show itself in the marked improvement of his next Unit Program.

"The Wood of Fair Water."

A tall, straight tree riddled with bullet holes is the most striking feature in the news reel climax, "The Wood of Fair Water." It is called "An Immortalization of the Famous Achievement of the Marines in Belleau Wood." Taken from official pictures of Belleau Wood, all the harrowing details of battle are absent, but enough evidence remains to tell of what had happened there and to impress the beholder with the same feeling with which he looks upon "ancient and holy things." At the Rialto presentation the number was given atmosphere by a guard of Marines drawn up on each side of the proscenium, and a quartet of male voices that sang appropriate numbers.

"The Last Hour."

"Elegie, The Last Hour," with J. H. Gilmore; a "Novelty Prelude Presenting Music," is the full quotation from the program. It is a picturization of Massenet's famous Elegie, and shows an elderly man in his last hour living over his life and its wasted opportunities. There are several scenes of a symbolic nature, during which young girls in flowing draperies are dimly seen dancing in the background. J. H. Gilmore acts the dying man excellently. There are no gruesome details in the picture. Its tone is subdued but not depressing. The playing of the Elegie by the orchestra, of course, accompanies the number.

"False Gods."

E. Lloyd Sheldon is the author of the five-part feature, "False Gods." It is the story of a young architect and his wife, Lila, who are happy in their modest little home until a number of valuable contracts bring them in contact with society and the pair almost wreck their lives when tempted to flirt and to gamble. Cecil Andrews attracts the attention of a handsome widow, who pretends she wants him to draw the plans of a new house for her. Lila is besieged by two admirers, Stephen Whitney and Randolph Hastings. She also falls into the trap set for her by Mrs. Van Orden, when she loses heavily at cards to that expert player, and is pressed for the money.

Believing that her husband is carrying on a flirtation with the widow, and strengthened in her belief by Whitney, she turns to him when a scheme to raise money on her jewels comes to naught. He offers to lend Lila the amount she needs if she will come to his home that night. She foolishly accepts and finds the price she is expected to pay for the supposed kindness involves the sacrifice of her honor. Andrews, who loves his wife as much as ever, learns where she has gone, and follows. While Lila is struggling to escape from Whitney a shot is fired through an open window and the owner of the house is killed.

Convinced that her husband is guilty of the murder, Lila declares that she did it. At the coroner's inquest that official cleverly traps the real murderer, Randolph Hastings, and husband and wife are only too pleased to cut loose from their dangerous society friends and live for each other in the future.

There is a praiseworthy endeavor to give the picture the benefit of adequate settings. The cast, although it contains no star, is uniformly acceptable. Grace Darling, Hugh Thompson, Florence Billings, Harry Mestayer, Ida Darling, Alfred Hickman, Hattie Delaro, Macy Harlan and Leo Delaney are the players.

"Wild Flowers."

George V. Hobart supplied the material for the comedy. It permits an intimate view of the high spirits and high jinks of two wise women, who find that an unprotected female can get along very nicely in New York, if she picks her gentlemen friends with an eye to their bankroll. There is no offense in the one-reeler and many laughs, the comedy being helped by the titles and a series of animated cartoons that carry out the comic spirit of the theme most amusingly.

The direction of this number is excellent. It has alertness, variety of business, brisk action and is dexterously acted by Yvonne Shelton, Templar Saxe, A. J. Herbert, Helen Weer, Walter McEwen and Eugene Acker.

"A Thought of Equity."

The thought which animates this epigrammatic cartoon is the trick nature has of letting one form of life feed on the other. Not a cheerful thought, apparently; but the inventor of the picture has found a way to make it amazingly funny. It is very short, but tells a whole reelful with unexpected humor.

Famous Players Clears $350,000 for Victory Loan

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the only motion picture company to conduct a consistent campaign in New York City in behalf of the Victory Loan, closed its drive in front of the Aeolian Building with Paramount-Briggs players, the well-known artist himself appearing and making the largest sale since the opening of the campaign there. Mr. Briggs' motion picture troupe, consisting chiefly of children who enact his famous "Skinay" characters on the screen, proved a distinct novelty to the film fans who are always looking for an opportunity to see how pictures are made.

Under the direction of John J. Harvey, the little players appeared in a number of scenes for the "When a Feller Needs a Friend" series, while Mr. Briggs made sketches of them, which were auctioned off, one sketch of little Rosemary alone bringing $2,500.

At the Aeolian window, where a complete motion picture set was built, including lights, cameras, properties, etc., the Famous Players-Lasky organization took in $150,000 in Victory Note subscriptions.

At the Famous Players-Lasky home office and among other eastern offices of the company, $50,000 was subscribed by the employes, this outside of what the stars and executives took which, it is estimated, figured easily $100,000 more.

Dorothy Dalton's flight to Albany in a hydroaeroplane brought $50,000 worth of subscriptions. It is estimated the New York members of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are responsible for $350,000 worth of subscriptions in the last loan.

Lucy Cotton, Broadway Star, Signed by Gerald Bacon

GERALD BACON, who formed, recently, his own producing company, announces that he has signed Lucy Cotton, stage star, for his first production, a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner," retitled "Sunup," the production of which will be started next week at the Bacon-Backer studio. It was previously announced that Mr. Bacon had titled the Marcin play "At Sunrise," but it was learned that a stage play is now under production by Smith & Golden, bearing the same title.

Miss Cotton, the star of the first Bacon production to be released by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, is a popular stage favorite, her latest successes in the spoken drama being "Turn to the Right" and "Up in Mabel's Room." She was born in Texas and has been called one of the most beautiful actresses on the American stage. The story which Mr. Bacon has chosen for the first of a series of eighteen feature productions to be released by Independent Sales is said to be one of the best works of Max Marcin.

Mr. Bacon will announce the supporting cast within the next week. Oliver D. Bailey will direct under the personal supervision of Mr. Bacon. Basil Dickey wrote the scenario.

Exhibitor Backs His Pictures.

R. J. Reef, of the Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa, says that for seven years he has been building up a steady patronage by giving to his patrons his personal guarantee of the quality of the subjects he books. He has shown all the First National attractions, he says.

"I go out on the stage and tell my patrons such and such a picture is coming," said Mr. Reef. "Of course, I make a thorough investigation of the picture before I give it such announcement. After many such talks from the stage, together with liberal space in the local newspaper and in the papers in nearby towns, I can always feel confident that a picture will go over as it should."

Puts Stewart Picture Over with Photograph Stunt

BECAUSE Anita Stewart has a gorgeous wardrobe, and because she has many photographs of herself in all sorts and description of gowns, "Midnight Romance" received a lot of advertising during the four days of its run at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Fred W. Herman, manager of the Savoy Theatre, at which Miss Stewart's picture was to play in Wilkes-Barre, saw in her beautiful gowns an opportunity to invade the exclusive woman's shops with his advertising. Selecting a score or more of reproductions of Miss Stewart's photographs, he had them mounted, as cabinet photographs are mounted.

Then for the upper left-hand corner of each he had printed a small, triangular "slipon"—nothing more nor less than the corner of an envelope. This said: "Savoy, Charming Anita Stewart in 'A Midnight Romance,' Monday-Thursday—April 21-24."

The words "Savoy" and the date were left purposely small and inconspicuous. The name of Miss Stewart and the title of the photoplay were convincing to a merchant who ordinarily would have been horror stricken with the thought of placing an advertising poster right along side a $100 hat. That is exactly what happened. Mr. Hermann presented a mounted photograph of Miss Stewart to an exclusive millinery shop. When the window was trimmed that night there was placed therein three beautiful hat models and Miss Stewart's photograph.

It so happened that next door was a high class jewelry shop. There the proprietor actually sent to Mr. Herrman for a similar photograph that he, too, might use it in the window. There was not a woman's shop in Wilkes-Barre that did not display one or more of Miss Stewart's photographs, so prepared, during the four days "A Midnight Romance" played there.

Bloxbe Corporation Formed to Make One-Reel Comedies

THE place that one-reel pictures have won on the screen is responsible for the formation of the Bloxbe Film Corporation, which, on June 15, will begin the release of a series of twenty-eight one-reel comedy dramas.

A uniqueness of subject matter is claimed by the Bloxbe company as its paramount feature. The twenty-eight productions, each a thousand feet in length, will be released as the first series. The stories are separate and distinct, but one principle will be seen underlying the entire product. The old adage, "truth is stranger than fiction," is said by the officials of the corporation to be on its way to receive a full vindication through the stories. Were it not for the fact that the incidents and characters portrayed are well known, the whole series would be considered excellent fiction.

The scenarios have been prepared by Philip Van Loan and Dr. Oscar I. Lamberger. Mr. Van Loan is also in charge of the direction. The Bloxbe company is located at 1547 Broadway.

ANNOUNCE NEW ERA IN FILM RENTAL

United Artists' Corporation Issues Noteworthy Statement Outlining Plans for Early Release of Pickford-Chaplin-Fairbanks-Griffith Productions

RICH in possibilities for the immediate realization of the long-awaited reforms in oppressive and out-of-date rental systems is the initial announcement of United Artists Corporation.

Outstanding is the fact that the pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, which will be marketed by the United Artists Corporation, will be released and rented solely by the individual picture. The announcement of the "Big Four" is refreshing in its clear-cut and straight-from-the-shoulder stand on this all-important point. The statement leaves no doubt whatever regarding the company's policies. It is committed unalterably to open booking of the purest sort and discards once and for all any sales plan that looks like open booking, but that is merely another form of program or star series releasing, sugar-coated.

First Release September 1.

United Artists Corporation will release four pictures a year for Mary Pickford, four for Charlie Chaplin, four for Douglas Fairbanks and four for D. W. Griffith. The first release is scheduled for September 1, and will be a Fairbanks picture.

The company's statement, which bears the signatures of Oscar A. Price, president and Hiram Abrams, General Manager, throws down a challenge to old line distribution that cannot be mistaken.

"United Artists Corporation will deal with exhibitors by the single picture only," says the announcement. "The booking of each release of each of the four producing units will constitute a separate and distinct transaction, so that at no time will there be any obligation that will prevent an exhibitor from running his own affairs in his own way, free from the dictates of those whose sole business it should be to serve him."

Genuine Open Booking Is Plan.

In a supplementary statement, Hiram Abrams emphasized the fact that while open booking has been talked about for years and so-called open booking plans have been tried and tried again, genuine open booking had not been attempted on a broad scale heretofore because producers and distributors lacked confidence in their product.

"During the last year and a half," said Mr. Abrams, "I have personally made five trips that have carried me over the entire country for the purpose of sounding out exhibitors on every phase of film rental. To every one with whom I have discussed the matter it is so obvious that the program system and the star series system are for the sole purpose of protecting the 'weak sisters' on release lists, that I marvel that producers and distributors persist in these practices when the entire trade knows why they exist.

Program System Unsound Business.

"It is unsound business to force weaker attractions on to an exhibitor's program as a premium on the rental of a good attraction. Exhibitors should not be obliged to play inferior shows as part of the price of getting superior films, nor should big stars be penalized by making them carry the load of lesser attractions.

"We intend to market the pictures of the United Artists individually, picture for picture, each production on its own merits. We will not contract for more than one picture at a time, and no exhibitor will be obligated to run one set of pictures in order to procure the releases of another artist.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that we will deal in single pictures only. We will not sell in any other way.

Exhibitors Assure Support.

"Hundreds of exhibitors, of all classes, have assured us that our plan is what they have been waiting for these many months. We believe that the exhibitors of the country are business men first, and we are going to deal with them on a sound business basis. They will be able to come to us as independent buyers, take what they want, and pass up what they do not want.

"It will be our task to make every production so superlatively good that each will find its ready market. If we do not make pictures of the highest quality, we will suffer the loss, not the exhibitors who, under the program or star series systems, are obliged to take the poor with the good, to their own loss.

System Will Have Wholesome Influence.

"Right here let me point out the wholesome influence our system will have over the entire picture business, from production to exhibition. Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mr. Griffith knows that each of their offerings must be marketed individually and that each and every picture must therefore be the very best their art makes possible. In realization of this, the United Artists have surrounded themselves with conditions that make for perfect production. They will have ample time in the making of each picture and they will produce with their whole heart in the work. Thus is every production guaranteed to be as good as the artist can make it. If the entire industry produced on such a basis programs and star series systems would be unnecessary.

"And there is the further thought that this system of production and our system of releasing would soon kill off the over-production that is sapping the industry's energies and resources. It would be solely 'the survival of the fittest' and not the everlasting supporting of the weak and the self-appointed.

Equipped for Real Business.

"We are coming into the field, then, one hundred per cent equipped for real business. From this day forward, the Pickford pictures, the Chaplin pictures, the Fairbanks pictures and the Griffith pictures that we will release, supreme attractions of the screen, will give to every exhibitor the greatest possible volume of profits. Truly, a new era in the motion picture industry has begun."

United Artists Corporation has opened executive offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. The announcement of the first Fairbanks release is already bringing a tremendous volume of business into the new offices, and bookings are being recorded as rapidly as received and in the order of their acceptance.

UNIT OVERSEAS FOR ROBERTSON-COLE

Organization Takes Over Entire Foreign Rights to Rothapfel Program—Expects Big Foreign Demand

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY, ever eager to obtain the finest product on the motion picture market for foreign distribution, has taken over the entire rights to the Rothapfel Unit outside of the United States and Canada. This deal was concluded by representatives of Robertson-Cole and Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation and vice-president of the Rothapfel Pictures Corporation immediately after the showing of the initial unit at the Rialto Theatre last Friday.

Robertson-Cole already has concluded arrangements whereby Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., whom they represent in the United States, will take over the distribution of the Rothapfel Programs through the British Isles.

Jury's Robertson-Cole Agents.

Under a recent arrangement Jury's distribute in the British Isles all the Robertson-Cole motion picture products, and in addition will buy for Robertson-Cole the foremost European productions for American distribution. Robertson-Cole, as Jury's American representatives, have already closed several important deals for their British associates, not the least of which was the recent purchase of Maurice Tourneur's "The White Heather."

In the cinema halls of the British Isles, music has always had a dominant appeal for audiences, and always constitutes a prominent part of the program. For this reason, if for no other, the Rothapfel Program appears certain to find wide favor in Britain. But, in addition, the Unit is just what exhibitors of Britain, as well as those of France and practically every other country in Europe, desire.

France Likes Unit Programs.

Robertson-Cole has been feeling the pulse of foreign exhibitors for some time, and its observations led to the deal whereby it takes over the initial six Rothapfel Units, which are in demand in many foreign countries. France in particular is anxious to obtain the Rothapfel Unit. There it is customary to book an entire program, and with the embellishments which accompany the Rothapfel Unit, such as music and effects, French exhibitors are expected to create a big demand for the Rothapfel Unit.

St. Paul Showmen Fighting Tax on Music Compositions

ST. PAUL exhibitors, at a recent meeting, passed a resolution condemning the royalty tax on the compositions of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers as unfair.

The St. Paul exhibitors have inaugurated a campaign against this tax. It is understood that many of the exhibitors have definitely decided to refuse to pay the tax. Another meeting of the St. Paul exhibitors to discuss this issue will take place at the Casino room of the St. Paul Hotel, May 23, when, it is expected, representatives of interested organizations will attend.

Back of the movement to defeat the tax in St. Paul is the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of that city. In a letter to fellow exhibitors Theodore L. Hays, manager of the St. Paul New Garrick and president of the association, says:

"Owing to a supreme court decision, any exhibitors permitting the use of music controlled by members of that society, is liable to prosecution and a fine, unless he signs up a contract to pay a certain amount annually, based upon the seating capacity of his theatre.

"Finkelstein and Ruben have refused the demand of said society and have decided to use only the music of the independent publishers and composers, quite a large selection of which is available.

"It is the duty of every exhibitor to be on hand at this meeting. United action regarding this matter should be taken and taken at once."

Dayton Exhibitors Will Not Pay Royalty Music Tax

ACCORDING to all the information that can be gleaned at this time, Dayton exhibitors who are members of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League will not respond readily to the next tax that is to be imposed upon them by the music publishers. It is said that the three largest firms that do the greatest per cent. of business with the film houses are G. Schirmer, Inc., Carl Fisher and The Sam Fox Company. None of these firms are members of the association that want to collect the tax.

One of the leading officials of the Dayton League stated that exhibitors all over the state would combine and not play the music furnished by members of the publishers' association. A meeting will be held for discussion of the matter by the league within the next week.

He also worked under Phillip Smalley and was recently a member of the company directed by Dick Stanton at the Fox Studios.

HODKINSON PRIMES SOME DYNAMITE

Founder of Program System Indicts Producers for Murder of Exhibitors—Plans to Startle Industry with Radical Idea for Distribution of Pictures

By William J. Reilly

THEY threatened to crush W. W. Hodkinson at one time because they thought he was too dangerous a dreamer to be at large in the undreaming film industry. But he dreamed so scientifically and so well that instead of crushing him, they were forced to follow him. "They" is the term Mr. Hodkinson applies in blanket form to the producers.

And today W. W. Hodkinson, president of the film corporation bearing his name, is "dreaming" again. Once more the mind which bored its way into the future years ahead of its contemporaries is at its tricks. The man who fashioned the idea of the program system of distributing pictures and who put the idea into operation through Paramount is once more taking current conditions into consideration and framing a course of selling that will take the exhibitor from under the screws.

Hodkinson Bringer of Fire and Radium.

W. W. Hodkinson, who may be called a father of the program, started a ripple in the industry recently when he announced that he was done with that method of distribution, that he was discarding it, that he intended to sell pictures on individual merit.

But an interview with the man proved that he has something up his mental sleeve other than the open market policy of selling pictures. Just as in the days of the formation of the program, when that idea was a radical departure from custom, so today W. W. Hodkinson is plotting new curves and drawing new diagrams, preparing for another revelation.

The coming of fire to primitive man utterly reformed his scheme of life and marked an era in his development. Hodkinson was the fire bringer of the film industry. The institution of his ideas marked a new epoch in the history of the business. Now he essays the role of the radium bringer. The discovery of radium started the world on a new day, just as millions of years ago fire did the same for the mankind which peopled it.

Just what his motion picture radium is, Hodkinson, although about ready to release it on the trade, would not divulge the details to the Moving Picture World man who called to interview him as to his plans.

Facing Nationalization of Theatres.

"Picture the setting of 'The Thirteenth Chair'," F. B. Warren, general manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, said on introducing the World man to Mr. Hodkinson. "We accuse the motion picture producers of murder—murder of the exhibitors—and now we've got to go behind the scene and produce our evidence."

And W. W. Hodkinson threw his hat in the ring, pulled off his glove and tossed it at the feet of the producers as an unmistakable and open challenge. "I just want them to take exception to what I say," he said. "What they say and what I say in return would make interesting reading.

"The moving picture industry today," he continued, "is facing the nationalization of theatres. The whole trend of affairs in the selling game points to the ownership of the motion picture theatres by probably three of the big producing companies. There is nothing radically wrong with such a condition, but these three companies are totally undeserving of and unfitted for the control of the theatres, because their methods of conducting business have been against all natural and moral laws.

"Why do I say that the situation points to the ownership of the theatres by the producers? Because they have never been satisfied that the exhibitor make a decent living. They have always lived on the life blood of the showman. And by their film prices, brought on by enormous overhead, greed and the payment of huge star and directorial salaries, they have clamped the screws down on the exhibitor until the only way out for him will be to sell his house. And the producers are showing no inclination to change their policies."

Producers Ever Unsatisfied with Profit.

Mr. Hodkinson went on to insert another count in his indictment of the producers. "It's quite like the banking business," he stated. "Just imagine Jones and Brown, each the president of his own bank. Jones isn't satisfied with a legitimate 6 per cent. banking business. He 'jimmies' open the safe in a polite way, and in a short time he owns a palatial house, a yacht, and several motor cars. Brown isn't content to see his rival prosper so, and he adds a presidential jimmy and dark lantern to his banking equipment, and he, too, joins the Yacht Club.

"The same idea prevails in the producing end of the motion picture business," Mr. Hodkinson stated with emphasis. "They are never satisfied with a legitimate percentage of profit. In my own connections I have seen them satisfied not only to reap every dollar possible from the exhibitor harvest, but I have seen them so greedy they would even eat the seed I had planted for the future.

Game Not New to Him.

"I've been through the mill several times," said Mr. Hodkinson, "and I know intimately a great many persons influential in the producing game. I know how they think. I know the fallacy of their reasoning because I've had to meet it time and time again.

"They know me, too," he went on with a twinkle in his eye. "They told me I was a dreamer when I was going about through the country converting the exhibitors to my program idea. They said they would crush me if I tried to put it over. But I put it over and they followed just as fast as they could."

And although he would give no details, Mr. Hodkinson pulled out from his desk a mysterious booklet in the last stage of composition, and indicated that it would give the trade something to talk about, particularly the exhibitors.

To Give Exhibitor Way Out.

"I'm going to put natural laws to work for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation," he said. "The producers today are working against the current and wasting tremendous energy doing so. We are preparing to take the exhibitor from under the screws of the big producing companies. We are blazing a new trail, taking into consideration all the intricacies of contemporary conditions. We are giving the exhibitor a way out, so that he may live and succeed instead of being forced to sell out to the producers who are gouging him for every penny he makes.

"The Hodkinson Corporation," he went on, "is perfecting an organization whereby it will be as a lake with an inlet and an outlet, always freshened, always letting go the stale product. It will not be like the producing companies which might be compared to bodies of standing water, without means of elimination of the unfit product, or without the continual inpour of clear water."

Mr. Hodkinson is preparing to take the exhibitor out of his troubles, and according to Mr. Hodkinson, if any producer thinks the exhibitor is not in trouble and doesn't need to be taken out of it he is cordially invited to express himself in public.

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL

The Rambler.

"Give a Thought To Broadway."

MONDAY of this week posters "broke" along Main Street carrying the slogan quoted above. They are in strip form, and say nothing more than we quote. Where the elevated crosses Broadway at Fifty-third Street the expression is attached to the structure in the form of a painted sign. Shop-windows display the slogan—and most of us wonder what it is all about.

Very likely it is the "teaser" heralding a campaign to influence President Wilson into the opinion that when our soldiers are in France, or making the Rhine safe from Democracy, they are demobilized. Surely the phrase has nothing to do with the picture business—so we pounce upon it for present uses.

There is no element in American commerce that gives so much thought to Broadway as do our movie producers. Every film they make seems to be directed, titled and sub-titled for Broadway and Broadway alone. If the thoughts that are given to Broadway in the picture business were directed, occasionally, toward Clinton, Miss., or Fremont, Neb., the many millions who live west of the Hudson and above Mott Haven would like their pictures better, patronize them more liberally and "lay off" the censorship thing.

Give a thought to elsewhere than Broadway, say we.

SUNDAY SHOWS MARK OPPORTUNITIES

By Displaying Only Best Pictures, Exhibitors Have Chance to Make Friends of Opponents

OPPORTUNITIES are full of possibilities. Many proverbs have been well and wisely written upon the great gain underlying the rightful use of opportunities. Some say that opportunities are shy, and, when once slighted, seldom return. Others say that opportunities are golden moments; all these are pregnant with truth and should be observed.

New York moving picture exhibitors recently have had a great opportunity thrust upon them in the Sunday opening local option bill. Will they use it wisely and well? Let us hope so. At any rate here is a word of encouragement: Make good, live up to all the good things said about you, vindicate those who have spoken in your favor and behalf, convince opponents of their mistakes, and take the poison out of their criticisms.

Put your very best and most suitable pictures on the Sunday program. Do not follow the glaring indiscretion of a certain exhibitor who last Sunday put on a picture which was still the subject of debate as to its suitability at any time. He provoked the authorities to stop the picture and brought the Sunday exhibition into bad repute. A more glaring indiscretion it is hard to imagine.

Your house will be full on Sunday. There is therefore no need of extravagant advertising or glaring posters. You will succeed without them besides saving money. The more quietly and orderly you conduct your Sunday program the more friends you will win from your former opponents. Aim to please, to win, and to gain friends, so that if you have to fight the battle again your record will be your best argument. A wonderful opportunity is now in your hands. Treat it as a golden one for yourselves, and you will find it will return in like measure for your future. It is easy to please your friends, it is possible to please your enemies. Go in and do it, this is your opportunity.

C. W. Midgley Making Auto Tour.

C. W. Midgley, of the American theatre, Oakland, Cal., and secretary of the United Theatres Association of Northern California, Inc., has left on an automobile tour of the country that will take him across the continent. While away he will visit producers, distributors and exhibitors and make a careful study of the moving picture business. He will also explain the plan of the new San Francisco organization, which is attracting wide attention, and which is being followed by exhibitors in Los Angeles and Seattle.

"Unpardonable Sin" Breaks Records in Waukegan, Ill.

THE "Unpardonable Sin" opened on Monday, May 5, at the Academy Theatre, Waukegan, Ill., to the largest Monday attendance record up to the present time. The number of fans who saw this remarkable Harry Garson production on the above day was over 150 more than witnessed "Hearts of the World" on its first day in this city, which also was Monday. The price of admission for the main floor was 25 cents in the afternoon and 50 cents at night, the loges selling for one dollar. The gross receipts ran extremely close to four figures for the day.

On the second day the matinee was even better than that of Monday and the three-day run broke all Waukegan picture records in both attendance and profits. Jones, Linick & Schaefer took over the theatre and went into this town and put the picture over themselves to prove to a few doubting ones that they acquired a great thing when they bought the Illinois rights.

Ned Holmes, manager, and John J. Jones, sales manager, were personally on the ground during the entire run and superintended the advertising and operation of the theatre in conjunction with Walter Spoor, the owner of the theatre. Holmes and Jones have opened elaborate offices at 110 South State street, Chicago, and already have the first show routed for five solid weeks.

$300,000 Theatre Will Be Erected in South Boston

ONE of the largest and most important real estate transfers in South Boston during several years took place recently when eleven parcels of property on West Broadway were bought by Owen F. Farley, James H. Doyle and James F. Powers for the construction of a new motion picture theatre.

The entire property has an assessed value of $119,800, but the price paid is said to have exceeded the total rating. The new house will seat 2,800 and will cost $300,000 above the price paid for the property.

The structures occupying the site at present will be razed soon and work started on the building of the new theatre. The buildings are frame and brick structures, being numbered 418 to 428 West Broadway, running through to 353 to 361 Athens street.

The new building will contain several stores on the front. The theatre proper has been leased for a long term to the Broadway Amusement Company. The plans by Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore show that the house will be a splendid addition to South Boston, with all the numerous comforts and facilities of the modern photoplay theatre.

Dismiss "Arsene Lupin" Suit Against Vitagraph

THE suit filed in the United States District Court against the Vitagraph Company of America by Lieutenant Francis de Croisset and Maurice Leblanc and the Société des Films Mennchen, to recover $150,000 damages for alleged infringement of the drama entitled "Arsene Lupin," has been dismissed by Judge Charles M. Hough.

The complaint was dismissed on the ground that it embraced an improper misjoinder of actions, as the suit was based on two copyrights issued at different times to different parties, and while the dismissal is final as to the 1909 copyright, another action may be instituted under the 1916 copyright.

The play "Arsene Lupine" was originally produced in Paris and was subsequently produced in America by Charles Frohman and proved a success financially and artistically.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Mrs. D. Rumor, Well Known in Film and Sewing Circles, Claims Studios Plan New York Move

By Giebler

A LARGE robust rumor is rumbling around Filmland. Of course that is nothing new. As a rumor incubator, Filmland can be matched against any other community in the world with a certainty of winning all bets.

We pay little attention to rumors, as a rule, but this rumor is disturbing us—is shaking our fair city from its stem to its stern.

Here is the rumor:

The studios are going back to New York.

Who says so? Why, everybody—that is, almost everybody says so. It must be admitted that with many the wish is apparent to the prediction. There are many people in the colony who do not like the Coast; many who pine with a great pining for dear old Broadway; many who cannot find anything fit to eat, drink, or wear anywhere west of Grant's tomb.

Rumor Looks Like The Goods.

But if we leave these people out of the argument there are still enough left to make the rumor look like good dope.

Everybody knows what P. A. Powers said about the Coast, and Myron Selznick's remarks are too well known to need repetition. These straws in the wind have other straws floating along with them.

We have the news that the Famous Players are building a big studio in Long Island City; they say that D. W. Griffith, who has been here so long that he is almost a native son, has his eye on Gotham as a location for his future activities.

Of course, the film people will not all pack up and take the same train. It may be a year or more before the gophers are digging their tunnels and frisking here and there among the wild mustard in the deserted studio lots. And there may be many who will never leave because of an unfeeling attitude on the part of the railroads in regard to transportation charges.

Broadway Beckons Alluringly.

But say what you will, many brains are busy with the thoughts of Broadway; many faces are turned hopefully to the East.

The climate has a great deal to do with the dissatisfaction, and right here is a good place to speak a few well chosen words to the weather bureau.

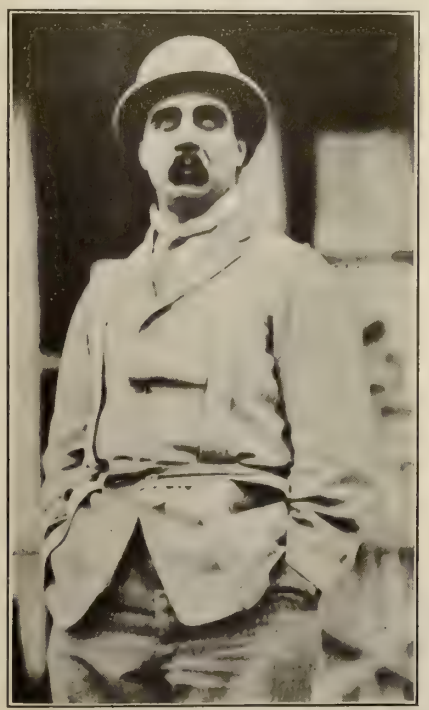
If our weather does not behave, it is going to lose its reputation. It must not think that now, since it has got the movies out here, it can keep them without delivering some of the same kind of goods it used as a sample.

Take this spring, for instance. The rainy season is supposed to be over, and yet it still rains. Of course it is all right to credit all of the rain that falls after the season has been officially closed to next year's precipitation, but it is hard to make a camera understand the system. A camera doesn't care a cent for seasons; it demands a certain amount of light, and if the sun is not on the job the camera has to be taken onto a dark stage and the juice turned on, before it will function.

Fogs Might Be Mist in East.

Then there are our fogs. One can scarcely speak with any degree of calmness about our fogs. The fogs are supposed to be sort of blessings in disguise. They are intended to act as diffusers for the sun, and temper the sun's rays so that we will get enough light to shoot pictures and heat to warm us without raising any perspiration—and heretofore it has been that way (see any booster literature about this)—but this year some one has been monkeying with the fogs and turned them on too full, or something.

Instead of stretching themselves out in fleecy layers between us and the sun, they gather up in great dark, damp, juicy gobs and stick around all day. We have just had twelve days all in a row this spring, with practically no sunshine at all, and on two or three of these days the fogs turned into rain.



Jimmie Aubrey
Looking as soulful as he can under the circumstances.

Rubbernecker Busy Victory Loaning.

It really is discouraging, when the native sons and the boosters are doing all they can to make people satisfied with our climate, to have the weather act up in this manner.

It has been a busy week for Rubbernecking, however.

I have been down to the Ship in Pershing Square every night, watching Harry Leonhardt's comedians and comediennes; the Christie players; Clara Kimball Young, Frank Keenan and company, Charlie Murray and the Mack Sennett bunch, the Universalites, and Charlie Chaplin help Uncle Sam sell bonds.

One day I was out to the Goldwyn studio and saw Harry Beaumont make a big masque ball scene for "Lord and Lady Algy" with Tom Moore and Naomi Childers in the title parts, and Naomi with a most magnificent gown, and Tom and Jack Duffy giving a good imitation of slightly inebriated gentlemen ascending a staircase.

Another day was spent on the Vitagraph lot, and one night I was among the happy dogs used as a try-out audience for Chaplin's new comedy, "Sunnyside." And in between all this I got both profit and pleasure in reading Bill Hart's book, "Pinto Ben."

Duncan Working on New Serial.

Out at Vitagraph, Bill Duncan, who is his own director, was making the first episode for his new serial, which will not be called "Daredevil Dick," although that is the working title of the play as it now stands.

I saw a sight here that is very rare, the manager of a studio working in a picture.

Bill had the big boss, W. S. Smith, doing a part in the action. Mr. Smith was in a scene with Edith Johnson, the leading lady of the piece. He handed her a gun and told her that he hoped she would not have to use it on anybody, just as naturally as if he did that in his office every day of the week.

Duncan says there are two reasons for using the boss in the serial. First, he's a pretty good player, and second, he's a kind of a mascot. He did a small part in Bill's previous serial, and as that serial was a success, it put Manager Smith in the rabbit's foot class.

After this scene was over I went out on the lot and watched Jimmie Aubrey and Babe Hardy, the hefty heavy of Vitagraph comedies, do breakaway stuff for a new piece they were working on.

Deep Hole in Touching Scene.

They made a very touching little scene with a deep hole that was all covered over with sod and camouflaged to look like a nice place to walk.

Jimmie got on this, and a big rock was dropped on his head, and he went down, down, down. Of course it was a property rock, but it was as big as a cook stove, and I thought Jimmie was never coming up, and when he did, I said goodbye before they did something else to him that would necessitate sending flowers with my farewell, and went over on the dark stages where Antonio Moreno was making episode eight of "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," with Carol Holloway as his leading lady, and W. J. Baumann as director.

They had a big set representing the interior of a Hindoo temple. It was very fine. The room was filled with rich-looking Oriental furniture, rugs, carpets and draperies, one of the tallest colored men I have ever seen—honest, that coon must be eight feet high—and the perfume of half a dozen incense burners going at full blast.

Moreno Sits in Uncomfortable Chair.

I watched them make a scene where Antonio Moreno goes into the temple, sits down in a chair, and then presto!

Vaudeville and Movies Meet Off Stage and Screen.
Bill Duncan and Edith Johnson, Vitagraph stars, were entertaining Chick and Tiny Harvey, vaudevillians.

the arms of the chair come to life, reach out and hug Tony, and the legs of the arm chair wake up and clasp him around the knees, and there he is hard and fast in the toils of the villain, until episode nine, which gets him out of that predicament, and into another.

There is a good cast to "Thunder Mountain." Kate Price is in the list. A. Reigner and Jack Waltemeyer are the heavies; Merrill McCormack and Charles Wheelock are Hindoos; Tote Du Crow is a servant, and George Kuwa, the Japanese actor, has a good part. Jack Pierce is assistant director, and Ernest Smith and Bert Longnecker are taking care of the camera work.

I did not get to see Montgomery and Rock, who were at the beach doing wave stuff, and I also missed Larry Semon and his gang, who were between pictures, and I stuck around the studio for more than an hour, hoping that Bessie Love, who was out on location, would come back, but Bessie never did show up, so I had to come away without seeing just about one-half of the Vitagraphers.

Lovett Is the Efficiency Expert of Olneyville, R. I.

IT'S worth while taking the trolley ride from Providence to Olneyville, R. I. On the Olneyville Square is the Royal Theatre, managed by J. Fred Lovett, and an hour or so spent with him will convince you that he has several devices for systematically running his house that you should incorporate in your scheme of things.

The Royal has a seating capacity of 1,000, and is known as a second run house. Mr. Lovett keeps a strictly up-to-date card system by which he can tell at a glance whether or not a film salesman or any other representative of the trade is giving him the correct information on any picture, particularly photoplays that have been run in Providence.

The weekly report sheet of the Royal is a model of neatness and clarity in form. It has a column for salaries and another for trade bills, including everything from postage to advertising. The receipt column lists the sums taken in at every afternoon and evening performance together with the name of the feature attraction. A box shows the daily bank deposits, another the weekly and another the monthly profits. It is a convenient and comprehensive statement.

At a recent evening showing the electric light company had a breakdown and the lights in the theatre went out. Fearing a crush and a riot Mr. Lovett had his music play at top speed, opened all exits, rushed out, procured four automobiles and flashed their headlights down the aisles. Not a single injury was noted.

GRIFFITH OPENS HIS REPERTORY SEASON

First New York Showing of "Broken Blossoms" Is a Great Artistic Triumph for the Famous Director

AT George M. Cohan's Theatre, Tuesday evening, May 13, D. W. Griffith set up another milestone on the moving picture's road to full recognition as an art second to none. He also established something new in the commercial standing of the screen by opening a repertory season during which three pictures will be shown in succession, each one affording a complete bill. "Broken Blossoms," inaugurated the season. The showing was attended by representatives of the social and artistic life of the city and by nearly every prominent moving picture star, director and producer of the metropolis. Hundreds of the general public were turned away.

Inside the theatre the spectator was greeted with a Chinese atmoshphere in the decorations and the costumes of the ushers. The first note of the music, composed by Louis Gottschalk and D. W. Griffith, struck the same atmospheric theme and during the entire production kept to a high order of merit. The curtain went up on a full stage, seen dimly as grey draperies parted slowly and the weird Chinese wail of the orchestra kept up its subdued tones. Then followed a series of beautiful light effects that were novel and in harmony with the story to follow.

A shrine to Buddha came slowly into view on the right; next, a couch upon which lay a young girl. At the back, a distant view of buildings that came and went as if by magic crept out of the darkness and as mysteriously crept back again. On the right, to the sound of Chinese musical instruments, a suggestion of the Orient made itself felt rather than seen. Most of the lighting came from tall candles that seemed never to glow and to die out as inexplicably as they appeared. The air of brooding mystery to the tableaux was a fitting prelude to the tragic story of "Broken Blossoms."

Of the feature itself but one opinion was heard as the spectators were leaving the theatre: "Broken Blossoms" marks the highest altitude ever achieved by a moving picture. Adapted from a story by Thomas Burke, "The Chink and the Child," in his "Limehouse Nights" tales, it takes rank with the class of literature that endures because of its truth and its clear insight into the soul of its subject. It is a tragedy as profound and relentless as ever has been written, and D. W. Griffith's direction gives it a wondrous beauty by showing the flame of pure passion that burns in the midst of evil surroundings and lifts a little starved and beaten girl and a gentle heathen above the power of suffering and sin.

The entire daily press of New York unite in this opinion.

The Times: "A screen tragedy—not a movie melodrama with an unhappy ending—but a sincere human tragedy—that is what D. W. Griffith has had the courage and the capacity to produce. . . . This bare narration of the story cannot hope even to suggest the power and truth of the tragedy that Mr. Griffith has pictured. All of his mastery of picture-making, the technique which is preeminently his by invention and control, the skill and subletly with which he can unfold a story—all of the Griffith ability has gone into the making of 'Broken Blossoms.' Many of the pictures surpass anything hitherto seen on the screen in beauty and dramatic force."

The Mail: "All of the fine skill of Mr. Griffith's technique, all of the subtlety of his art, have answered his commands in the building of his picture drama. His story moves forward with the force and suspense of a Greek tragedy. 'Broken Blossoms' is the art of the photoplay revealed at the hand of the master of that art. It is Mr. Griffith's greatest triumph."

Long continued applause brought the director in front o fthe curtain at the close of the showing. After thanking the spectators for their signs of approval he informed them that for the first time in their careers Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmass and Donald Crisp, the creators of the three leading characters, had come to New York to watch the premiere of a production in which they had taken part, and were out in front.

A detailed review of "Broken Blossoms" will be printed next week.

EDWARD WEITZEL.

MARY AND HER "DADDY LONG LEGS"

First National's Initial Pickford Release Is by Far the Best Picture the Star Has Had for Many a Moon and Is Made Eloquent by Mary's Talking Feet

By Edward Weitzel

EVERYONE has seen conversation carried on through using the hands. In "Daddy Long Legs" Mary Pickford talks with her feet. At first glance this may look like carrying atmosphere, local color, mood and all that to extremes, but the way it is done in the final scene is one of the delightful moments of the picture—and "Daddy Long Legs" is full of them. To put it concisely: First National's initial Pickford release is by far the best picture Mary has had for many a moon. Showmanship is mixed with every stage of its making and crops out in every detail connected with the transference of Jean Webster's celebrated story and play to the screen. Not one of the thousands of readers of the book or spectators of the stage version are going to be disappointed at the story in its new form. Agnes C. Johnson's scenario and the direction by Marshall Neilan have furnished Mary Pickford with every possible aid to the display of her talents, and she dominates the picture at all times without leaving the impression that this artistic necessity is in the least overdone.

The Comedy Is All Sure-Fire.

There is never a dull moment in "Daddy Long Legs." It has just enough sentiment of the right sort to balance the comedy, which is of a thoroughly entertaining character. Nothing has been left to chance in respect to the laugh getting element of the picture. The comedy is all sure-fire, but handled with such nice discrimination and fitting so neatly to the occasion that it has the effect of novelty, and is an object lesson to the tiresome person who keeps insisting that every author should put nothing but original comic situations and bits of business in his pictures. Bless the tiresome person's innocent soul, the man or woman who could do this has never been born and never will be born. A combination of story, scenario, director and star that can create the waves of laughter which swept over the Strand Theatre at the opening performance of "Daddy Long Legs" is the best evidence that knowing how to do the trick is what screen comedy most needs.

An Ash Can for a Crib.

Judy Abbott, the lovable little orphan of Jean Webster's book, who begins life with a roll of newspapers for her first garments, and an ash can for a crib, and whose early years are spent in the John Greer orphanage, is well-known to the reading public of all ages. All that is required is the assurance that the spirit and charm of the original are to be found in the picture to send Judy's friends trooping to the nearest theatre where the screen version is being shown.

For those who are not acquainted with Judy's history, the following facts will show the desirability of being among those present when Mary and her "Daddy Long Legs" come to town:

From Station House to Orphanage.

Just who put Judy in that ash can and then ran off and left her is never found out. It is better to have this point settled on the start, because the end is much nicer than having her turn out to be the daughter of one of the characters in the story who showers her with money, which is the usual ending for fiction of this class. From the ash can Judy is escorted to the station house by a policeman, and then taken to the orphanage. When she is next seen she has grown into a wistful-eyed girl of twelve, whose love of fun cannot be subdued even by the systematic cruelty of the matron, Mrs. Semple. Her side partner and companion in all her defying of rules and attempts at overreaching the common enemy, the matron, is a snub-nosed boy who has more freckles to the square inch than any youngster who has so far aspired to be a movie actor.

The Great Prune Strike.

There is a series of comic incidents that begin with a prune strike, incited by Judy, and lead to the agitator and her faithful lieutenant being given the hunger treatment. While seated on a bench in the yard and praying for something to still the gnawing in their tummies, a box of lunch and a jug of cider are thrown over the wall. The children partake innocently but copiously of the juice of the apple when it stingeth like many swallows of fire water. Wild hilarity follows. A well, the meanest orphan of the bunch, a dog which laps up enough of the cider to send him reeling on his way, and the efforts of Judy and her chum to get the full benefit of their joyous state of mind, all take part. The skill used in its handling makes it one of the funniest comedy scenes of the screen.

Mary Pickford's Finest Acting.

Serious interest is put into the story when Judy is sent to college by a mysterious trustee of the orphanage whom the girl has never seen and who never lays eyes on the object of his bounty, until she has changed into a beautiful and accomplished young woman. His name is Jarvis Pendleton; but Judy, who caught sight of his shadow, calls him "Daddy Long Legs," and writes to him by the name she invented for him. As in all well-made plots, after the correct number of misunderstandings and attempts of another chap to take the heroine away from the man she loves but will not marry for fear he will not relish the facts about her birth, the two most interesting characters in the story find the right answer to their romance.

It is in this scene that Mary Pickford does some of the finest acting of her career. It is also where she talks with her feet. She has come to Pendleton's house to explain matters. He is seated in a high-backed chair, which is turned from the spectator. When Judy discovers that Jarvis and her "Daddy Long Legs" are one and the same person, and that her secret is known to him, she attempts to leave the room, but is detained by Jarvis. Her play of mixed emotions is beautifully done.

The Comedy of the Talking Feet.

Then comes the comedy of the talking feet. Jarvis draws her into his lap over the arm of the chair until only the heroine's slim ankles and well-shod extremities are to be seen. At first they register great indignation, then indecision, then passive consent, and as the story ends, they are moving like a pair of particularly active semaphores and telling of Judy's complete surrender. This situation brings the picture to an absolute climax which is refreshingly new, and holds the attention of the entire body of spectators to the very end.

Mary Pickford and Wesley Barry Aren't Afraid of a "Jam."
They sandwich in two pleasing smiles in this scene from "Daddy Long Legs."

The growth of Judy's character as her skirts are gradually made longer is denoted by the star with uniform expertness, and at Commencement Day, when all the other girls rush to show their friends and relatives their diplomas, and poor Judy has not one friendly face in the crowd, her pathos touches the right chord.

Marshall A. Neilan's Expert Direction.

Marshall A. Neilan has never surpassed his direction of this picture. There are added bits of pleasantry such as the scenes in Cupid's Court and the intoxicated dog, that are made to fit into the story by force of their cleverness of conception and skill in accomplishment. The atmosphere of the different social grades is always correct, and several exterior scenes are gems.

The cast could hardly be bettered. Mahlon Hamilton as Jarvis Pendleton, Milla Davenport as Mrs. Lippert, Percy Haswell as Miss Prichard, Fay Lemport and Angelina Wyckoff, Director Neilan as Jimmie McBride, and Wesley Barry as Judy's side partner, are the leading members of the support.

"Daddy Long Legs" is in for a long run of popularity.

Sheldon Lewis to Star.

Lewis Meyer has placed Sheldon Lewis under contract as a star, and is to exploit him shortly in a series of feature film of an unusual nature. Mr. Lewis has just finished supporting Virginia Pearson in "The Bishop's Emerald," and the excellence of his work in that production and in some of his former character roles is said to have prompted the offer made to star him on his own account.

"The Monster and the Man," the first Sheldon Lewis picture, has just been finished. It is completed and distribution arrangements are in the course of arrangement. The scenario and continuity were done by Frank Beresford, who did the technical work for "The Bishop's Emeralds." Jack O'Brien did the directing.

Show Ad Slides on Screen.

The American Exhibitors' Association of Pittsburgh has devised a plan which should materially increase the membership of the organization as well as result in the accumulation of a fund which could be used to advantage in fighting adverse legislation and other expenses incident to the maintenance of the body. In lieu of dues the exhibitor is required to run a slide carrying the ad of a local merchant or a national advertiser. Already a large number of exhibitors are running these slides, and the plan looks as if it would prove a big success. Fred Harrington, a member of the association, as well as President Smith and the other officers are boosting the proposition.

Joseph F. Poland Author of Many Screen Plays

JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND, though still in his twenties, has a long list of enduring photoplay stories to his credit and holds high rank among writers for the screen.

Poland is a Brooklynite. Born in the suburb of Flatbush, he was educated at Erasmus Hall High School and Columbia University. He entered the newspaper profession and shortly thereafter sold a scenario to the old Kalem company. Subsequently he joined Kalem's staff and later Vitagraph's; but a year ago he abandoned his desk to become a free lance. Since then he has been turning 'em out with startling speed.

Although Mr. Poland is not on the regular authors' staff of the "Flying A," as was erroneously stated, much of his recent work has been written for the use of the American's stars.

It appears that the Poland typewriter can tap out pathos and humor with equal facility, and his is a name we are bound to see more and more frequently in connection with the better photoplays in months to come.

The Dayton Celebrates Its First Anniversary

THE Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, under the direction of Mark Gates, who was instrumental in building the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, celebrated its first anniversary the week of May 11. The Dayton has been a success from the start owing to the energy of Mark Gates, managing director of the house. It has a seating capacity of 2,500.

The attraction for the anniversary week was Metro's "The Red Lantern," featuring Nazimova. Fitting decorations were employed for the "Red Lantern" week, and the theatre had a distinctively Chinese atmosphere from the lobby throughout the entire place.

In the lobby were thousands of different flowers including many imitation Chinese cherry blossoms which produced a beautiful effect. In addition to this there were hundreds of red lanterns strung about and attractive Chinese parasols. The girls in the box office, as well as the ushers, were clad in brilliant colored kimonas.

Million-Dollar Company Among New Film Firms

A MILLION-DOLLAR film company has been incorporated with New York's Secretary of State Hugo, the directors being Edward W. Wassman, of Kew Gardens; William G. Smart, of Grantwood, N. J., and H. N. Hayt, of Red Bank, N. J. The company takes the name of the Emancipation Film Corporation. Other firms incorporating in New York state during the last few days with the intention of entering the motion picture business include the Hy-Art Film Company, $100,000, John D. Perry, James and Marie Lapsley, all of New York; the Triar Amusement Company, $10,000, Bernard L. Miller, James C. Bradford and Harry Richter, of New York; the Luck Producing Company, $5,000, Henri de Vries, David L. Salmon, John D. Buhrer, of New York; the Jaybee Amusement Company, $5,000, Jacob Belinsky, Henry Altman, Joseph Dubinsky, of Brooklyn; the Modern Comedies, $25,000, Herman Obrock, Jr., Charles Lang and Neil Hickey, of New York.

Fanny Rice, Comedienne, Signed for Blackton Film

J. STUART BLACKTON has persuaded "Jolly" Fanny Rice to "come back," having just signed her for his new and yet unnamed feature which is now in production.

The clever character actress whom yesterday's theatregoers will remember as an internationally popular comedienne of farce, musical comedy and vaudeville fame is to play an important supporting role with Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon, featured leads of the new picture.

For more than twenty-five years Miss Rice was one of the most successful and distinctive stars before the public. She toured the United States and Canada many times and appeared in England, Australia and other foreign countries. She was often called "The Queen of Extravaganza," always signing herself, "Merrily, Cheerily, Verily Yours."

Before retiring a few years ago on account of ill health, Miss Rice toured for many seasons as a headliner on the Orpheum Circuit.

Government Making More Pennies.

Two million pennies a day will be turned out by the United States mints at Denver and Philadelphia in order to meet the great demand for small coins which has resulted from the new taxes now in effect.

The motion picture houses and the drug stores are the greatest users of pennies. The penny trouble began last year, when the taxes on theatre admissions and tobacco went into effect.

Daniel Gilfether Dead.

Daniel Gilfether, one of the grand old men of the films, died at his home in Long Beach on Saturday night, May 3, at the hour of eleven. Mr. Gilfether was born in Boston seventy years ago, but he lived in New York until six years ago, when he came to Southern California to work in pictures. He was unmarried, and is survived by a brother, Thomas Gilfether, of Berkeley, California, and by other relatives in San Francisco. Mr. Gilfether was a member of the New York Elks lodge No. 1, the original American lodge, and his death occurred at what is known as the "mystic hour," the hour set aside by the Elks to pay tribute to members who have died. Funeral services were held by the Elks of Long Beach before the body was shipped to the actor's former home in Boston for burial.

Daniel Gilfether was for many years an actor on the stage, and has appeared in many Shakespearean productions, and with most of the prominent actors and actresses of the dramatic stage of the past fifty years. Of late he had confined himself to working in motion pictures, his last engagement having been with the Balboa and American companies.

FOX EXPANDS ITS EUROPEAN BUSINESS

Establishes a Dozen Additional Exchanges with Paris as the Continental Distribution Center

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, returned from Europe Saturday, May 10. William Fox, with whom Mr. Sheehan left New York, arrived home more than a week ago, unannounced. A result of the trip is the establishment of a dozen additional exchanges, either opened or arranged to be opened.

In Paris, which will serve as the continental European centre of distribution, Abraham Carlos was put in charge. Offices in Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux and Lille were opened, and are in operation. Branches in Italy, it is said, will be Milan, Turin and Naples, with headquarters in Rome. Other branches will be Brussels, for Belgium; Amsterdam, for Holland, and Geneva, for Switzerland. With the exception of Germany and Austria, Fox offices now cover the world.

The Fox Film Corporation has been well represented in Great Britain, Australia, South America, Canada, France, Italy, Spain, Denmark, Russia, Norway, India, Java, China, Japan and Philippine Islands in the past, but will be better represented in the future, since the company prefers to market its own wares. Sydney Abel is abroad now, carrying out the work recently begun by Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan.

To Build Printing Plant in London.

From comparatively small quarters, the Fox London offices were moved into the former headquarters of the Canadian army—the entire building that was occupied by the Canadian War Ministry being taken over. The floor space is about 100,000 feet. A film printing plant will be constructed in London to take charge of the large number of prints held there.

Mr. Sheehan, on arrival, emphasized the point that about 5,000 new theatres are to be built in Europe, now that restrictions on building materials have been removed. A country of 48,000,000 inhabitants, England has only 4,200 picture houses. The government realizes the value of the screen for propaganda and is doing everything possible to help build new theatres. For five years not a theatre has been built; and now that so many thousands of men are being released from the army there will be plenty of labor available.

Picture Houses Scarce in France.

France in this matter is in a condition similar to that of England. There are only 1,200 theatres there now. Some cities of 50,000 have no motion picture theatre. Within the coming year there will be twice as many as now exist. Italy has 1,000 and this number will be doubled.

Mr. Sheehan refused to talk about European productions, stating that there was nothing to be gained by discussing these matters until all arrangements had been completed.

$1,400 Fire in Metro Lunchroom.

The canned and packed goods of the Metro lunchroom, which is maintained for the convenience of the West Coast studio and office forces, as well as the players, were totally destroyed, as well as the entire set in which they were being used, by fire recently. A brand-new late model camera and tripod, with magazines and exposed film, were also lost.

It was a grocery store scene used in Bert Lytell's picture, "The Lion's Den," one of the last scenes in the picture, and according to the script there should be a fire, but it was to have been extinguished promptly.

The damage totaled $1,400.

ROTHAPFEL SHOWS HIS UNIT PROGRAM

Screens His Bill at Rialto and in the Evening Entertains Many Guests at Hotel Astor Banquet

S. L. ROTHAPFEL introduced his Unit Program to exhibitors and newspaper representatives at a special showing, Friday morning, May 9, at the Rialto Theatre. Elsewhere in this issue we present a critical review thereof.

Friday evening, at Hotel Astor, several hundred of Rothapfel's friends gathered on his invitation to attend a reception and banquet given to celebrate Rothapfel's entry into the producing field. Before the guests entered the banquet hall they mingled and gossiped in the reception room until the call came to approach the "feed."

Ashbel P. Fitch, attorney for the Rothapfel Picture Corporation, acted as toastmaster and kept the speechmakers active and oral until past midnight. There was an atmosphere of informality that made the food taste better and the liquids flow faster until, after all had eaten their fill, the honor guest was introduced by Mr. Fitch to tell all about himself and his plans.

"Roxey" Gives 'Em Credit.

Mr. Rothapfel made a good impression, especially when he gave credit to Wally Van, his co-director, and to Frank Hall, his financial backer, for what they had contributed to the first completed program. Mr. Rothapfel announced that as soon as he had taken a short vacation, the second issue of the Unit Program would be put under way. There were many speeches by representative men in the trade, and Miss Parsons, of the Telegraph, upheld the dignity of the women in making a sensible and clever speech when called upon.

Not everybody present is mentioned in the accompanying list. We give the names as contributed by the Rothapfel publicity bureau, adding a compliment for Hopp Hadley, Harry Diggs and Joseph L. Kelley, of the publicity and promotion staff, for the success of their efforts in making the reception and banquet well worth attending.

BRANDT TELLS OF NEW SERIAL PLANS

Universal Executive, En Route to Los Angeles, Will Supervise Work on Three Continued Photoplays

JOE BRANDT, assistant treasurer and all-round expert for Universal, made a brief stopover in Chicago, Thursday, May 8, on his way to Universal City, where he will remain for about three months.

When seen at the Universal offices here, he explained that the object of his trip to the Coast is to start and supervise work on three new serials for his company, each comprising eighteen episodes, of two reels each. Marie Walcamp will be the star of the first, Jim Corbett of another and Eddie Polo of a third. The titles of these serials have not yet been fixed.

Jim Corbett's first serial, "The Midnight Man," is now almost completed and will be released in the near future.

Work on Polo's Serial To Start Soon.

Work on the first episode of Eddie Polo's new serial will be started just as soon as Mr. Brandt arrives and, when it is finished, John P. McGowan, the director, will leave Los Angeles with his company and seek locals for the remaining episodes that are practically inaccessible to the average sightseer. He and his company will be hard at work for about a year in completing the serial, which will be unique from every standpoint—"including the mysterious and the sensational," Mr. Brandt assured the writer. Director McGowan, it will be remembered, had charge of the productions, "The Lure of the Circus" and of "The Red Glove."

Marie Walcamp has scored so heavily in "The Red Glove" that President Carl Laemmle has authorized the purchase of one of the most sensational sellers in the fiction field for her coming serial, the name of which has been withheld for the present.

During his Los Angeles sojourn Mr. Brandt will also supervise the production of "Elmo, the Mighty," in which Elmo Lincoln is being featured. Mr. Lincoln, it will be recalled, was the star in "Tarzan of the Apes," produced by the Western Producing Company. "Elmo, the Mighty" is about half completed now, under the direction of Harry McCrae. Mr. Laemmle purchased this story from the Western Producing Company, and he has made arrangements to purchase the next production of that company, the story of which will be submitted to him for approval before work is begun.

Brandt Shows Serials Are In Demand.

To show the writer that the demand for serials is rapidly growing and that the larger houses are falling in line for this type of sellers, Mr. Brandt stated that on his present trip to Chicago he had met aboard the train Mr. Von Herberg, of Jensen & Von Herberg, who owns a circuit of big theatres in Seattle, Portland, Butte, Walla Walla and other Western cities, and that Mr. Von Herberg assured him that he had come to realize that serials meant a great deal to exhibitors; also that he was convinced some of the large houses will, eventually, let down the barriers and include serials in their programs.

Mr. Brandt furnished further evidence to support his stand by stating that one of the largest theatres in Denver, the Strand, has just started a run of "The Red Glove," while the People's Theatre in Butte had booked the same serial recently. He also named the Orpheum, Seattle, as another instance and informed the writer that Mr. Clune, of Los Angeles, is now seriously considering the booking of "The Midnight Man" in one of his big houses.

Jim Corbett would be a big drawing card there, just as he would be if the same serial were booked in San Francisco. Indeed many other large theatres throughout America, including those of New York and Chicago, might be included for a run of "The Midnight Man;" but everything depends on the lasting powers and the punch, as "Gentleman Jim" well knows.

Fielder Finds Business Excellent.

E. C. Fielder, formerly manager of the Cleveland office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is now district manager of the Middle West for that organization, with headquarters at 220 South State street.

Mr. Fielder was seen last week after a visit to Cleveland, where he conferred with Manager Phillips on the open booking policy of his organization, recently announced to exhibitors. He found business exceptionally good, both in Cleveland and Indianapolis. J. C. Mack is manager of the Indianapolis branch and is much pleased with present conditions and the future outlook.

"As a Man Thinks" has been booked at the Strand Theatre, Cleveland, for a week's run, and numerous inquiries concerning it are being made throughout the Middle West.

Notes on "Bolshevism on Trial."

"Bolshevism on Trial" was booked for a week's run at the Woodlawn, Pantheon and Twentieth Century, beginning Sunday, May 11.

Ben W. Beadell, sales manager of Select's Chicago office, and John C. Ragland, manager of the St. Louis office, made arrangements last week for a private showing of "Bolshevism on Trial" before the Ilinois Legislature at Springfield, Wednesday evening, May 14. Edward Kunz, owner of the Princess Theatre, furnished that house for the showing, which was opened at 11 o'clock at night, when all committee meetings had been closed.

"Knickerbocker Buckaroo" Begins Run.

Walter L. Hill, of the publicity and service department of Famous Players-

In an Instant She Was Up Again. Seizing a Bottle of Priceless Bevo, She Rushed to the Chamber of the Tiger Symbol.
Ruth Roland, in her Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," is busy being the heroine and the tiger woman all in one.

Lasky Corporation, has advised the writer that the Chicago exchange of that organization had a brief visit last week from Albert Parker, director of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, "Knickerbocker Buckaroo." Mr. Parker was accompanied by the proprietor of the Algonquin Hotel, New York, and the wife of the latter. They stopped over for a few hours on their way from Hollywood to New York.

Mr. Parker brought with him the advance print of "Knickerbocker Buckaroo," which began a week's run at Orchestra Hall, Monday, May 12.

Campaign Against Buck Bill Waged Vimfully

ASK Dr. Sam Atkinson, field secretary of the Motion Picture Association of Illinois, if he was busy during the week of Monday, May 5! How he has spared time to eat in the midst of the duties that have found lodgment on his shoulders, in attending to the Illinois state campaign against the Buck censorship bill, has been a conundrum to his friends. But he has never whimpered, while sticking to his job like a limpet to its rock.

No section or corner of the State has been overlooked by Dr. Sam (he doesn't like Samuel) in his fight against Senator Buck's pronunciamento. Booklets, editorials, slides, trailers, blanks for signature, and a dozen other helps have been sent out daily to exhibitors.

But Dr. Atkinson was unwilling to trust everything to proxy. On Sunday, May 11, he left for St. Louis to address exhibitors in the southern end of the State, at the Elks Club, Monday noon, May 12. Advance notices of this meeting were sent to every exhibitor in Southern Illinois, inviting them to be present. At the meeting he will explain the urgent need of the attendance at the Springfield convention of every one of them, so that a solid front, from all parts of the State, may be lined up against the Buck bill on Tuesday, May 20.

Rose Tapley Has Busy Week in Chicago and Evanston

MISS ROSE TAPLEY, special representative of Famous Players-Lasky, for better pictures, came into the city Friday, May 2, from Madison, Wis., where she spoke before the legislative committee on censorship. The pending bill was killed in committee.

Miss Tapley was entertained at an informal luncheon, in the Hotel Morrison, May 5, by Chicago newspaper critics. The censor bill for Illinois was one of the subjects discussed by those present.

Miss Tapley will remain in the city until Tuesday, May 20, when she will attend the convention of film men at Springfield. She has been selected by the Motion Picture Association of Illinois to make a speech before the Judiciary Committee in the House of the day mentioned. In the interim she delivered speeches before various men and women's clubs in Chicago and Evanston, and also addressed the patrons of quite a number of picture theatres in these cities.

Successful Revival of "Peggy."

The revival of "Peggy," the first picture in which Billie Burke starred, is proving a great success in Chicago theatres. Seven prints have been booked solid for two weeks in the city alone, Manager Bradford of Triangle's Chicago office reports.

It will be remembered that Thomas Ince directed the production and that a great all-star cast, including Charles Rae, William Desmond, William H. Thompson and other well known players appeared in it. At the time of writing the demand in Chicago territory was rapidly growing.

Important Rule of F. I. L. M. Association.

It has been learned that all members of the F. I. L. M. Association of Chicago are now placing a stamp on all bills sent out from film exchanges, which reads as follows: "In accordance with F. I. L. M. rules no C. O. D. shipments will be made after May 12, 1919. Payment must be made by check or cash before date of shipment."

This means that if a check or cash is not received in advance for film and advertising matter, no shipments will be made after the date mentioned.

A. A. A. of Chicago Elects Officers for Ensuing Year

A MEETING of the Allied Amusements Association was held at Fraternity Hall, Friday afternoon, May 9, for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year. The following officers were elected after, Peter J. Schaefer had announced that he was not in the field to succeed himself as president: President, M. A. Choynski; vice president, Dr. Sam Atkinson; secretary, Max Hyman, owner of the Avon Theatre, and Robert R. Levy, treasurer.

The A. A. A. voted assistance to the present campaign against state censorship, in a neat sum, after which the meeting was adjourned.

A pleasant rumor is going the rounds in film circles here that Mr. Schaefer will begin a vacation, about the middle of June, which will last for eight months, and that the deliciously devilish little god, Cupid, has a cunning hand in the matter.

Who knows, to a certainty? Ask Mr. Schaefer!

Notes of Sherry Corporation.

George M. Montgomery, Western district manager for William L. Sherry, has appointed Harry E. Strickland manager of the St. Louis office and J. F. Foland manager at Kansas City.

Both these men have been exchange managers in the territory assigned them for some considerable time.

Mr. Montgomery announces that in addition to Mr. Sherry's big star productions now under way, the Burlingham travel pictures will be released at the rate of one a week, beginning May 25.

"The Red Lantern" Makes Records in Runs and Prices

"THE RED LANTERN" was the first feature to score a run of two weeks at the Ziegfeld Theatre, this city, and it also introduced for the first time in that house a scale of admissions at 50, 75 cents and $1.00. The opening day of the second week showed larger receipts than that of the first.

It has also been the only picture shown at the Riviera and the Central Park (owned by Messrs. Balaban & Katz) for an entire week, with the single exception of "Eye for Eye," in which Nazimova also was the star. "The Red Lantern" was shown in both the houses mentioned at increased prices —39 cents at the Riviera and 33 at the Central Park, the raise in prices being the first that has been made since these houses were opened.

Manager C. E. Smith, of Metro's Chicoga office, arranged for an entire window display of toilet articles named after Nazimova, in the Fair department store, for one week, ending Saturday, May 10. He had also displays in three windows, in one of the "Loop" branch offices of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, drawing attention to the fact that the

Ninth Anniversary of Rothacker Celebrated

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, was heartily congratulated by his numerous friends in the city and out of it on the celebration of the ninth anniversary of the founding of the organization which now has its home in the great modern plant on the north side.

It has been a short time, but a remarkably long stride, since the Industrial Film Company was formed in May, 1910. Then the manufacturing of industrial films was solely engaged in and continued, until now the Company has a national reputation with practically no competitors. President Rothacker, for some time past, has extended his operations in the film business until he now does all the laboratory work for the pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Anita Stewart, and other well known stars, and this work is increasing rapidly.

The writer, on behalf of the Moving Picture World, congratulates Mr. Rothacker on his splendid career, which would do credit to the lifetime of any ordinary business man. And yet he is not near his prime, with a long life and still greater successes in store for him. The writer wishes him both these boons.

"Shepherd of the Hills" at Randolph.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have announced that "The Unpardonable Sin" will be succeeded at the Randolph by "The Shepherd of the Hills," based on Harold Bell Wright's well known novel of the same name, the first showing to be made Sunday, May 18.

Chicago's Heroes Vividly Filmed.

International Film Service cameramen, notwithstanding the blinding downpour of rain Thursday, May 8, secured a remarkably good film story of the march of Colonel Reilly's Bucks through the city, on that historic occasion. The great demonstration which marked the return of Chicago's own heroes from the hard-fought fields in France has been so well reproduced in film form that everyone who views it on the screen cannot fail to become enthused and excited to the point of indulging in uproarious applause and yells.

Four hours after the pictures were taken, the people of Chicago were treated to a view of the tumultuous scenes, in various picture theatres, by a Chicago extra of the Hearst International News. Victory Loan workers reported to headquarters that the pictures stirred the people to such a pitch of patriotism that a large sale of Liberty Notes was made in all the theatres where they were shown.

Geraldine Farrar Off to Los Angeles.

Geraldine Farrar, accompanied by Lou Tellegen, her husband, stopped over for a few hours in the city, Saturday, May 10, on their way from New York to the Coast. They will be engaged during the summer in the Goldwyn pictures, in which Geraldine Farrar will be the star and Mr. Tellegen her opposite.

"The End of the Road" to Be Stopped Showing Here

THE End of the Road," which has been showing at the La Salle Theatre for some time past, and concerning which the writer has heard many condemnations, is now meeting with strong opposition from the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry.

On May 8, Lewis F. Jacobson, counsel for the Association, began proceedings against the further showing of the picture. U. S. District Attorney Clyne has been petitioned to bar the film from the mails, express and railroads; Mayor Thompson has been requested to revoke the permit for its showing here, and also the license of the La Salle; States Attorney Hoyne has been called upon to prosecute the offenders, and Attorney General Brundage to stop its exhibition in the State of Illinois.

Attorney Jacobson has given out that the picture was produced as part of the propaganda warning men in the service against the social evil, and that it was exhibited to men in the service until the signing of the armistice, when it was secured from the Government by Meyer Silverman and is now being shown by R. C. Cropper.

The National Association of the Moving Picture Industry has declared the picture morally unfit to be shown to the general public and will prosecute the case to a finish.

P. C. Hoover, who represents R. C. Cropper at the La Salle, denies the charges made against the picture, and declares that two prints are at present being shown to men and women by the Illinois State Hygiene Association. He also states that he holds a "white" permit from the city of Chicago to exhibit the picture.

A Poster that People Watch.

One of the strongest business-getting 24 sheet posters recently designed is that being sent out by First National to advertise "Auction of Souls," the feature which originally was known as "Ravished Armenia," and which tells the story of an Armenian girl who lived through the terrors inflicted by the Turks from 1915 to 1917.

Officials of First National had first hand opportunity, when this poster was put up on New York boards, to observe its effectiveness. At various points in the city they noted the high percentage of pedestrians who stopped to gaze, and who craned their necks to see as long as they were able to make the billboard out.

The poster was designed by C. L. Yearsley, publicity director for First National.

Approve National Association Action.

The action on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry regarding the appointment of a censor board which will act for that body in passing on films and the blacklisting of theatres which show any picture condemned by the representatives of that body has met with the approval of Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway Theatre Company interests, and George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome in Baltimore.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY MEETING OPENS

Next Year's Policy Discussed at Convention of District Managers and Representatives

THE convention of the out-of-town district managers and special Representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's distribution department was opened Monday, May 12, by Walter E. Greene, vice president of the organization, in charge of that department.

After the opening address by Mr. Greene, in which he welcomed the visiting exchange men and spoke most enthusiastically of the past achievements of these men and of the prospects of the future, Al Lichtman, general manager of the distribution department, opened the discussion concerning the policy of the company in handling its 1919-20 product. Although the details of the meetings held thus far are not available at this time, it is understood that the organization is contemplating a radical change in system of distribution for the coming year. The present season will draw to a close on August 31 and, with the beginning of the new season on September 1, it is felt that exhibitors will be able to avail themselves of a new method of booking Paramount and Artcraft pictures which will be a great improvement over present methods.

Detailed Announcement Later.

"We are not in a position to give the details at this time," said Mr. Greene, speaking in connection with the meetings held since Monday. "Our entire new plan is still in a tentative state and it would be premature to make a detailed announcement now."

"I can says, however, that with the new year starting September 1, we will offer the exhibitor a booking proposition unlike any of the present methods and one which, we are sure, he will receive with open arms. Since the beginning of the current season, conditions have brought about a big change and we are rapidly approaching a new era in this industry.

"We hope in the very near future to give a detailed outline of our proposition for the coming year. Conditions throughout the country, as reported by our district managers and special representatives, are most favorable. Our tentative outline of distribution activities has met with the hearty approval of these men in the field now gathered here and everyone is particularly enthusiastic over the outlook for 1919-20."

Men Here from All States.

The out-of-town managers began to arrive in New York late last week and every part of the country is represented. Service to the exhibitor will occupy a great part of the time of these meetings in that it is the ambition of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to assist the exhibitor in putting over his pictures during the coming year, in a manner never before attempted in the business.

The men attending the daily meetings in the New York headquarters of the company on Fifth avenue are Walter E. Greene, Al Lichtman, Charles C. Burr, S. R. Kent, John C. Flinn, Fred Gage, Eugene Zukor, A. G. Whyte, Harry Asher, W. E. Smith, F. V. Chamberlain, C. E. Holcomb, Dan Michalove, J. W. Allen, M. H. Lewis, H. H. Buxbaum, Louis Marcus, Herman Wobber, Mr Jones, of Australia; Louis Loeb, J. W. Toone, B. P. Fineman, J. K. Burger, L. F. Guimond, A. O. Dillenbeck, Jerome Beatty, G. N. Shorey and W. A. Bach.

Methodist Centenary to Use Many Films

ARRANGEMENTS have just been consummated by representatives of several of the large film producers and of the Methodist Missionary Centenary for the use, on a scale far larger than has ever before been attempted by any denomination, of motion pictures as a leading feature of this Protestant body's Centenary Celebration of American Methodist Missions at Columbus, Ohio, June 20 to July 13.

This celebration is in reality a "missionary world's fair." American Methodism is bringing to Columbus exhibits of its missionary activities in more than fifty foreign lands as well as of its many missionary enterprises in the homeland.

At the exhibition grounds in Columbus American Methodism plans "to show the world" what it is doing to advance the Kingdom of God everywhere—and it is going to do this largely through the motion picture. The hundreds of thousands of people who attend the exhibit will see on the screen Methodist medical missionaries healing the sick in Africa, China, Korea, and other far-off lands; they will see heathen on every continent being taught to read and write by Methodist educational missionaries, and finally thousands of native Christians in non-christian portions of the globe will be shown worshipping the God of whom they first heard from American Methodist missionary preachers.

Laemmle Buys a Patterson Novel.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, announces the selection of Joseph Medill Patterson's well-known novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," for a coming Universal Special Attraction. Lynn Reynolds is now selecting the all-star cast for the production, in which Frank Mayo will have the leading juvenile role and which will star J. Barney Sherry in the older masculine role. The two feminine stars, Kathryn Adams and Lillian Leslie, will share equal honors in the picture.

Ottawa Not Represented at Toronto Meet.

Ottawa, Ontario, is the one large city in Eastern Canada which was not represented at the recent annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association at Toronto. The exhibitors of the Canadian Capital are allied with the Retail Merchants' Association and, although the latter association does little or nothing for the moving picture men, the Ottawa theatre men have not seen fit yet to throw in their lot with the exhibitors' organization.

CONFESSIONS OF A SCENARIST

Eve Unsell, Maker of Screen Versions of Many Famous Books and Dramas, Admits Having Been on the Stage and Tells Her Method of Classifying Moving Pictures

By Edward Weitzel

THE touch of the trained dramatist in the scenarios of Eve Unsell lead to this interview with the adaptor of "Are You a Mason?" "The Man from Mexico," "The Second in Command," "The Test of Honor," "Eyes of the Soul," and a hundred other screen versions of more or less famous novels and plays. A conviction that the skill employed in their making could only have been gained by connection with the stage demanded affirmation or the experience of a life time was no safe guide.

Seated opposite Miss Unsell in her office in the scenario department of the Paramount Company, the writer proceeded to settle the matter without any delay:

"Were you ever on the stage, Miss Unsell?"

"Yes, two years."

Which satisfactory reply permitted the interview to continue with feelings of genuine relief on the part of the man who asks the questions.

"Would you mind telling me what preparation you had for a place behind the footlights? Now that you have given the right answer to my first question, I am in the position of the chap who assumes a self-satisfied smile and remarks blandly: 'I knew it,' and am correspondingly ready to be delighted to hear that you have played Little Eva, Topsy, and Lady Macbeth."

Learning Stage Technique from Belasco.

The lady on the other side of the flat-topped desk shook her head.

"I'm not going to confess that I covered any such range of characters in two years," she laughed; "but one of the best parts I played was Florence Reid's role in 'Seven Days'."

"Where did you first receive any direct preparation for your present work?"

"When I graduated from college I took up a post-graduate course in English and American drama at Emerson College, Boston, with the intention of writing for the stage. I also took a drama course at the Summer Extension at Oxford. A short story I wrote while there was dramatized and produced in England. This play brought me to the notice of Mrs. H. C. DeMille and I was given a position in her famous play-brokerage offices in New York. Here I learned the art of plot construction and plot 'detecting,' while play-reader for that concern. I read twenty or thirty plays a week, and 'The Lion and the Mouse,' 'The Third Degree,' 'Seven Days,' and 'Nobody's Widow' were among my selections as possible successes."

"'Picking the Winners' is evidently a game right in your line?"

"I did have unusual good luck, didn't I?"

"And unusual good judgment. What did you do after leaving the De Mille office?"

"Went trouping. But while still a play-reader I met Henry Savage and David Belasco. Mr. Savage gave me the opportunity of studying farce technique at close hand in that convulsing railroad-coach comedy, 'Excuse Me,' and Mr. Belasco granted me the inestimable privilege of attending all the rehearsals of Blanche Bates, Leslie Carter, and of Frances Starr's 'Rose of the Rancho.' Many things of stagecraft learned from the great 'Wizard' have been of immense value in the 'stage business' of my scenarios."

"The Pawnbroker's Daughter."

"What started you on scenario writing?"

"The desire to try something new, I suppose. My first scenario was a melodrama which I sold to Pathe. This was followed by the sale of two to Kalem for Alice Joyce. I had poetically named one 'The Quality of Mercy,' and was horrified to find it advertised as 'The Pawnbroker's Daughter.' After I had sold a few original photoplay ideas, I was engaged as staff reader with the Famous Players, and was advanced to assistant editor and writer of continuity, in which capacity I remained two years. A few months as a free-lance was followed by another two years contract with Famous Players under pleasant circumstances. At present I am still writing for Paramount and Artcraft. My last Artcraft work is the scenario of 'Eyes of the Soul' for wonderful Elsie Ferguson, and which I consider the best of my scenarios; at least it is my best-beloved."

Classifying Screen Fiction.

"If you are not tired of being asked questions, Miss Unsell, will you tell me if you recognize more than one form of screen fiction?"

"Yes, indeed! Among my scenarios at least seventy-five have been vehicles for famous stars, and have been shown at Broadway picture houses. Naturally, most of these have been adaptations of either famous books or famous stage plays, and it is interesting in working out these adaptations to note the degree of difference between the photo-novel and the photo-drama, a differenec often overlooked by writers as well as by producers, and critics."

"How do they differ?"

"The technique of the photo-novel necessarily varies from that of the photo-drama in that the elements of narration and the descriptive title, as well as that of characterization, enter more largely into the photo-story, while in the photo-drama, the subject 'gets over' in situation and action, the introduction, the development and climax varying from that of the narrative film.

"Examples of well handled 'story' pictures are those done by the Triangle a few years ago with Mae Marsh and the Gish girls. Mr. Griffith is a famous exponent of the narrative film-feature, his pictures usually being developed in story form, and with especially excellent narrative titles which point the characterization, the psychology and the humor of the subject.

"C. B. DeMille, on the other hand, exemplifies the photo-drama splendidly, his best pictures being in dramatic form, with most of the titles in dialogue, and with the dramatic situations developed almost exactly as they would be in the stage-play, suffering no loss in vitality in their transference to the screen, and proving that a film subject can be as 'human' as possible, and still contain as much drama and psychology as any stage 'thriller.'

"Another difference between photo-drama and photo-story, is that while the photo-drama is usually achieved by the process of elimination, the photo-story may dwell artistically on the introduction, the character bits, and the linking up, with an even continuity that flows smoothly to its expected and desired end. The photo-drama points the psychology of its characters and plot by means of action, with snappy dialogue titles, and using the 'high lights' only—a series of dramatic situations mounting swiftly that bring the spectator sharply to the unexpected climax, with little 'footage' spent in the detail so often necessary to the photo novel. Thus the construction and climax of the photo-drama are necessarily very similar to that of the stage-play, the latter having the advantage of glossing over weak spots, and more effectively displaying the author's brilliancy of style, by dialogue, and the former, the advantage of important action, which in the stage play too often happens 'of stage,' but which makes for a bigger, more consistent dramatic climax by preparing for it, but the preparation must be in action, not in a narrative or descriptive title."

Designing the Climax.

"What are your ideas on the climax, Miss Unsell?"

"The climax of the photoplay is an interesting and important factor in its construction, a study in itself. So often a big screen feature is blurred and marred by an anti-climax, a development of the subject beyond its logical, its psychological, its artistic end. The scenarist, having achieved what he considers the psychological finish, immediately after the denouement, is horrified and saddened by seeing an aftermath of courting and 'clinching' either in the shade of the timeworn old apple tree, or on the long-suffering sofa in the front parlor, or in the bay-window of the balcony by sunset or moonlight. The sunset clinch and fade-out which lend beauty to the photo story are frequently demoralizing to the photo-drama, weakening the climax proper, by destroying the after effect of the big finish situation, which should punch home the message of the film. The only exceptions are cases in which the finish situation contains a morbid touch that must be obviated to leave a pleasant after-taste."

Mrs. DeMille and Her Wonderful "Boys."

"Amen to all you have said on the two forms of screen fiction, Miss Unsell. The success you have made of your profession and your wide acquaintance among the leaders of the screen and the stage must be very pleasant."

"Yes," was the reply; "my position in the moving picture world is very gratifying, but it is the friendship and encouragement of such as Mary Roberts Rinehart, Mrs. DeMille and her wonderful 'boys,' Beulah Dix, Mr. Belasco, Henry Savage and Daniel Frohman that I count as 'white stones' along the way, as against the slough of despondency into which I am plunged when someone aims outrageous slings and arrows at the despised movie 'crew' of scenario writers."

FEATURES BUILD UP SMALL TOWN HOUSE

Hummelston Star Is Now Open Four Nights a Week Instead of One and Manager Plans Enlargement

HOW to build up a picture business in a village of 2,500 from one show a week on Saturday night to four nights a week has been discovered by Albert B. Adams, manager of the Star Theatre, at Hummelston, Pa. The same process incidentally was one of building up the average receipts from less than $25 a night to something about $60 nightly.

Mr. Adams, who is still in his early twenties, was seized with the ambition to operate a picture show about a year ago in Pittsburgh. At that time he was seeing to it that the long line of celuloid film went in front of the bright light in just the right away. But Adams, the operator, maintaining his vigil in the booth, kept thinking how nice it would be to stand down in front and watch the people come in, and to know that the profits were his.

Takes City Ideas to Village.

So he saved his money. And in due time, with big city ideas, he went out to Hummelstown, and took charge of the Star. There he found that Maurice Costello was a big favorite. Mr. Adams remembered that about ten years ago, when he was in knee trousers, he used to see Maurice in Pittsburgh, and remembered that he was well liked.

But that was ten years ago, and Adams was determined to put Hummelstown on the map of to-day. He knew the pictures which "went" in Pittsburgh, so one of his first acts was to get in touch with the First National offices in Pittsburgh and see about getting "Pershing's Crusaders." The good people of Hummelstown, entranced by a splendid view of what some of their own sons were doing in the world war, flocked in as never before.

Now Hummelstown Wants the Best.

The best support they ever gave a star of the olden days never equalled this. They were thrilled and delighted not only with the picture, but with the reminder that they were seeing something which was "hot stuff" in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and San Francisco—as well as Hummelstown.

So by the time Mr. Adams, who never had any real trouble in finding patrons enough to give four shows a week instead of one, booked "My Four Years in Germany," his second First National picture, the crises was past. The people of Hummelstown were won over to the idea of seeing the best.

To Enlarge Theatre.

This story of how Albert B. Adams solved his problem ends by leaving him with another. Building costs are pretty high right now, and it will cost Mr. Adams a pretty penny to get his picture theatre made over so that it will hold the crowds which he has coming.

But he's going to solve it. He's going to remodel and enlarge, no matter if building costs stay up. For he had profits to back him up, and what's more, the conviction that best pictures win in a village as they do in a city.

Pass Bill for Deputy Censor Board.

Senate Bill 510, providing for the establishment of a deputy censor board in Pittsburgh, has been passed by both of the Pennsylvania's law-making bodies, and the bill only awaits the signature of the Governor to become effective.

This is a matter for which the Pittsburgh film men fought for a long time. The delay incident to the shipping of films to Philadelphia has spoiled many a good booking, and while the deputy will be stationed in Pittsburgh only for emergency purposes the convenience will be greatly appreciated by all concerned. Duplicate seals, which now have to come from Philadelphia, will be furnished by the local office when it is opened.

S. M. Berg, who has for the past ten years been actively demonstrating the necessity of appropriate musical interpretation for the picture, has sold his entire interests and stock holdings in Belwin, Inc., of which he was founder.

How Manager Born Checks Up His Judgment on Films

CHARLES BORN, manager of the Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz., has evolved a unique method for checking up his advance judgment on the drawing power of productions he books for his theatre.

Mr. Born's system is similar to that used for checking up on winners in a horse race. He uses a copy of the house program to carry out his idea, but this is strictly for his private use, and not for circulation in any way.

Listed down the center of the program, on the inside page are the pictures with descriptive program stories, which are to be run for the coming week. A half-inch column at the left contains the date of each picture's showing. Within this half-inch column containing the date, Mr. Born indicates in what order he thinks the picture will finish—whether first, second, third, etc., in box office receipts. At the end of the week he enters next to these figures the actual order in which the pictures finished.

In this way Mr. Born is able to check up his advance judgment. Taking for instance his program for the week of April 13, he is found to have picked Tom Mix in "Treat 'Em Rough" as the best box-office attraction, or Number 1, and another comedy as the second best, or Number 2. The subsequent program entry shows his advance judgment on these to have been correct.

For the week of April 6 he picked "The Caillaux Case" to run behind Norma Talmadge in "The Ghosts of Yesterday," but "The Caillaux Case" ran ahead of the Talmadge production, while Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" finished in the high position predicted by Mr. Born.

Goldwyn Plans Publicity that Will Blanket America

SINCE the return of Samuel Goldwyn from the Culver City studios of Goldwyn to the New York offices, a new publicity policy has been worked out, aiming to reach every important publicity medium in America, in every corner of the country, with material on Goldwyn productions. The new system aims not only to blanket New York with Goldwyn publicity but also to touch every district served by Goldwyn exhibitors.

Two new publicity agents have been added to the Goldwyn staff since the recent engagement of Ralph Block as director of publicity and Kenneth Macgowan as director of advertising. Howard Dietz, known both as a newspaper writer and an advertising writer, is now with the Goldwyn organization. Miss Lucy Huffaker, former publicity writer for the Washington Square Players, and wife of Edward Goodman, their director, joins the Goldwyn publicity staff this week.

The new Goldwyn system contemplates a center of Goldwyn publicity serving every important distribution system in America. Present plans are for representatives in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Denver, Kansas City and New Orleans, with the Pacific Coast served, as it is at present, from the publicity organization at the Culver City studios.

NEW ENGLAND DOING BIG BUSINESS

World Representative Makes Round of Boston Exchanges and Finds Heavy Bookings Reported

By Nat Bregstein

RUNNING around Boston film circles is as pleasant a job as can be imagined. When the writer hit the town of culture he visited the Georgian first. The Georgian is the place where all the boys go to eat and to listen to what the other boys have to say. And now that we have had our fill let's make a tour of the Boston exchanges.

First we'll drop in at the Paramount and have a chat with Harry L. Asher, New England district manager. We find him a very quiet chap. However, things move along at top speed; this is one of the best equipped exchanges in New England. Several of the old timers are Joseph A. McConville, branch manager, and Arnold F. Gilman, assistant manager. John P. McConville, publicity and service manager and also in charge of the accessory, sales and promotion end, says all productions are going big.

Rifkin Old State Rights Buyer.

Right around the corner from Paramount we find Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Features Film Company, Inc. Mr. Rifkin is one of the oldest state rights buyers in New England. He has just purchased the New England rights to the Arrow Film Company's "When the Desert Smiles." This concern has four road men, and Miss Gallagher, formerly of General, has been added to the booking department.

Nearby is the American Feature Film Company, handling Metro productions. This concern is plugging Nazimova day and night and reports that her "Out of the Fog" is breaking box office records. Doc Golden, general manager, is elated over the business done at the Boston Theatre. Preparations are now under way for a big drive on "The Red Lantern," a booking on which has been reported from the smallest theatre in Waltham.

"Heart of Humanity" Road Show.

W. E. Furber, publicity man at the Gordon & Mayer office, states that "The Heart of Humanity" is being put over with six road companies. The plan is to have one company in each New England state. The office is soon to start a big publicity campaign on all of their stars. The old timers there are Tom Spry, manager; George Robinson, sales efficiency, and J. Dunn, sales department.

At the Goldwyn office William H. Jenne, manager, reports good business on "The Brand" and Geraldine Farrar's "The Stronger Vow." D. E. Carlton is setting the pace for the sales department.

Harry Campbell, manager of the Fox office, says "Salome" is no longer being booked as a legitimate attraction, but is now selling on a rental basis. Mr. Campbell is very optimistic on the business outlook in New England.

At 48-50 Piedmont street we have the Federal Feature Film Corporation, and in the same office Rolfe Productions, Inc., Premier Feature Film Corporation and Oliver Films, Inc. Joseph L. Roth is the general manager and reports big business on "The Calvert Case." This concern has just acquired the New England rights to "A Fool's Gold." In the same office is Sam Grant who, Mr. Roth says, is the big boss. Mr. Grant divides his time between New York and the Boston office.

World Branch Largest Exchange.

The Boston World branch is the largest exchange in New England and one of the best equipped in the country. George A. Fecke, manager, reports big business on "The Better 'Ole."

At the Triangle office, W. H. Gardner, manager, reports good business on Olive Thomas reissues.

F. F. Kimmerle, manager of the Mutual branch, states that Sessue Hayakawa's "Turn in the Road" is playing to big business.

Vitagraph office, C. W. Sawin, manager, is doing very well with a new star series, Big V, Special Semon comedies and the serial "Man of Might." It might be well here to recall that Mr. Sawin some tige ago received a loving cup for leading the Vitagraph exchanges throughout the country.

Henry J. Seagle, of Independent Clearing House, says "Wanted for Murder" is going big. Mr. Seagel is considering enlarging his offices very soon.

Pathe Reports Heavy Bookings.

Booking on "Common Clay," "Unknown Love" and the serial "The Tiger's Trail" is very heavy—record breaking, in fact—according to A. M. Hollah, manager of the Pathe exchange. Much new furniture has been added to the equipment of the office lately. Jack Jennings is still on the job as booker.

At the Major Film, Inc., E. J. Farrell is president and general manager. This concern handles all Frohman and Ivan Abramson productions. They also have purchased Elks Photoplay business.

Three Big Winners Here.

Boston Photoplay, through Mr. Murphy, reports good business on "Mickey," "The Unpardonable Sin," and "Hearts of Men."

The writer met Lewis J. Selznick at Select Pictures Corporation office. Mr. Selznick was in Boston on a visit from New York. Dave Selznick is manager of the Boston branch. The office certainly looks nifty. Morris Safier, sales manager, reports big business on all productions.

At the Universal office J. M. Mullen is the general manager. W. B. Morey, sales manager, reports "The Red Glove" is going big throughout New England.

Boston has two supply houses—United Theatre Equipment Corporation, 26-29 Piedmont street and the Simplex branch Boston Motion Picture Supply. R. D. Marson is manager of the former, and Mrs. Asher conducts the latter.

Gold Reports Thrilling Voyage.

A. E. Gold, cameraman of the Gaumont Company, reports a thrilling voyage from New York to Trepassey Bay, Newfoundland, on the "Prairie." The "Prairie" is one of the vessels which the Navy has assigned to the protection of the naval aviators who will pilot the three N-C seaplanes in their attempt to fly across the Atlantic.

Womankind Seems to Have Much Influence on "The Man Who Turned White" and "The Mints of Hell."
And H. B. Warner in the one and William Desmond in the other are glad of the fact in these two productions released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

FOREIGN DEMAND FOR ROBERTSON-COLE

Chester Beecroft, Back from Abroad, Predicts Big Business for American Films in Europe

AN unprecedented season of popularity for American films in Continental Europe is predicted by Chester Beecroft, who represents the Scandinavian Film Agency of Copenhagen in the United States. Mr. Beecroft has just returned from an eleven weeks' business trip abroad, where he went to confer with his firm regarding distribution of the Robertson-Cole pictures.

Before leaving for Europe, Mr. Beecroft, as representative of the Scandanavian Film Agency, purchased the entire Robertson-Cole motion picture production for 1918 and 1919 and in addition a large number of specials handled for foreign rights only by Robertson-Cole. This deal involves nearly a million dollars and was the biggest foreign transaction of the year.

"Every indication points to a record year for Robertson-Cole film," asserted Mr. Beecroft. "The type of production which thus far has been issued by Robertson-Cole fits in ideally with what the continental European motion picture enthusiast regards as the best screen plays.

Scandinavians Like Stars.

"Bessie Barriscale, Billie Rhodes, Alma Rubens, William Desmond, Henry B. Walthall, and Sessue Hayakawa have all met with the approval of the Scandinavians. H. B. Warner is still an unknown quantity, but there is not the slightest doubt but that he will prove the same popular screen hero that he has in the United States. All of the Robertson-Cole specials have been proved attractions of the first water.

"The Scandinavian Film Agency is the first firm to buy films for all of Continental Europe.

"On my trip abroad I visited England, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland and France. The fact that exhibitors of these countries have become converted to an understanding of the drawing powers of certain individual players made it comparatively easy for me to dispose of the Robertson-Cole output.

"In addition to the star series already mentioned the Scandanavian Film Agency purchased the following specials for Continental Europe: 'Nine-Tenths of the Law,' with Mitchell Lewis; 'Her Man,' with Elaine Hammerstein; 'Men,' with Charlotte Walker; 'The Eleventh Commandment,' with Lucile Lee Stewart; 'Those Who Pay,' with Bessie Barriscale; 'Just a Woman,' with Charlotte Walker; 'The Prodigal Wife,' with Mary Boland; 'Devil's Playground,' with Vera Michelena; 'Where Love Is,' with Ann Murdock; 'The $15,000 Mystery,' with Detective William J. Burns, and 'The Pendleton Round-Up.'

"In addition to these the Scandanavian Film Agency bought fifty-two Billie Rhodes comedies, twenty-six Capital Comedies and eighteen of the super series of Jester comedies with Twede Dan."

The house will be used for moving pictures primarily, with some vaudeville. Plans have already been drawn by a prominent architect who specializes in theatre construction. Mr. Black also signed last week the lease of a theatre to be erected on Main street, Bangor, Me., at a cost of $100,000

Kaufman to Write for Selznick.

It is announced at the offices of the Selznick Pictures Corporation that negotiations are under way for securing the services of S. J. Kaufman to write for the Selznick stars. Mr. Kaufman is one of the most widely known newspaper men in the country, gaining much of his prominence through his clever "Round the Town" column in the New York Globe.

Mr. Kaufman has already written one original scenario for Selznick, entitled "Love or Fame?" and which will be used for Elaine Hammerstein's first starring vehicle for Selznick.

Upstate Towns Fighting for Sunday Opening

PETITIONS bearing over 7,000 names of persons residing in Watertown, N. Y., who are anxious to see Sunday motion picture shows in the northern city, have been filed with the city clerk during the past week. The interest which the public is taking in the matter is apparent in the fact that this is the largest number of signers that has ever appeared on any petition circulated in that city.

The city of Cohoes, a few miles from here, through its board of aldermen, and without so much as a single dissenting vote, has signified itself as in favor of Sunday motion picture shows. Troy and Cohoes now have Sunday shows, paving the way to a campaign which will be instituted next fall for shows in the Capital City.

Dignitaries Visit L-Ko Studios.

On a recent Saturday afternoon the L-Ko Studios were the scene of a visit from various dignitaries from abroad. They came to see how comedy pictures are made and were escorted to the lot by Sak Behrend. Among the visitors were Gosta Erik Lagercrantz, the Acting Vice-Consul for Sweden, and C. H. Vogel, representing Mr. Sulzer, the Swiss Minister to the United States. In their party were Messrs. Walters and Ettenger, Directors of the California Theatre in San Francisco.

WANT VANCOUVER CENSOR DISMISSED

War Veterans' Body Demand Removal of Hepburn, Alleging Remarks Harmful to Returned Soldiers

THE Great War Veterans' Association of Vancouver, B. C., has demanded the removal of Walter Hepburn of Vancouver from the position of moving picture censor for the Province of British Columbia. A resolution containing this demand was unanimously adopted at the May meeting of the Vancouver Veterans' Association, and the decision was forwarded to Attorney-General Farris at Victoria, the capital of the Province.

The meeting had before it a communication from Attorney-General Farris in which it was stated that the course of Censor Hepburn was open to criticism in his opinion but that Mr. Hepburn had been incensed at the action of the Moving Picture Operators' Local of Vancouver in having made an arrangement with the Invalided Soldiers' Commission, without his knowledge or consent, for the training of returned veterans as projection machine operators.

Summon Censor to Explain.

The differences between the operators and the censor were aired at the recent session of the Provincial legislature when Censor Hepburn was summoned to the Provincial Capital to explain his stand. Mr. Hepburn had issued a projection machine operator's license to a civilian and the censor is alleged to have made remarks derogatory to returned soldiers during the course of a conference with representatives of the operators' union.

An investigation was ordered by the Attorney-General and the inquiry was carried out by J. Macdonald of Vancouver, a lawyer. His report to the Attorney-General was rather non-committal in the estimation of the Attorney-General, and the Commissioner in charge of the investigation made no recommendation for any action in the matter. No action had been taken by Mr. Farris either, up to the time that the Great War Veterans' Association decided upon its resolution for dismissal of the censor.

Hepburn Comes in for Criticism.

Censor Hepburn was also warmly criticized on the floor of the legislature by several members because of the manner in which pictures were being censored in British Columbia by Mr. Hepburn. The latter has made no move to resign from his position.

Exhibitor Emulates De Mille; He Goes Up in Clouds, Too

NOT to be outdone by Cecil Be De-Mille, who recently made ain airplane trip on the Pacific Coast, E. E. Marsh, proprietor of the State Theatre at Montevideo, Minn., took advantage of the first opportunity that came along to go up in the clouds, too.

His opportunity came when the "Flying Circus," composed of American army aviators, who have been touring the Northwest in behalf of the Victory Loan, visited Montevideo.

Marsh was a passenger in a machine piloted by William Anderson. He rose to a height of 1,000 feet, looped the loop twice and returned to mother earth after a hazardous nose spin.

Mr. Marsh said he didn't get sick or excited during the trip.

Toronto to Get 3,000-Seat Theatre Costing $1,000,000

TORONTO, Ontario, is to have still another great moving picture theatre in the downtown section of the city, according to an announcement made by N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Regal Films, Limited, and subsidiary companies, including the Paramount Theatres, Limited. The new theatre will represent an investment of $1,000,000, the site alone costing $600,000. It will be erected on Victoria street between Shuter and Dundas streets, and will have an entrance on Yonge street, the main thoroughfare of the city. To provide this arrangement, it was necessary to secure a permit from the city for the bridging of O'Keefe's Lane for the entrance.

The total frontage on Victoria street is 182 feet and the Yonge street entrance has a frontage of 25 feet. The latter was acquired by the purchase of the Britnell store at 263 Yonge street. The plans call for a beautiful promenade through the block from Yonge street and the theatre will accommodate upwards of 3,000, making it one of the largest houses in Canada.

The undertaking is being financed by Canadians with Canadian capital, among those behind the project being J. P. Bickell, a Toronto financier, J. B. Tudhope of Orillia, a member of the Canadian Parliament, and W. J. Sheppard, of Waubaushene.

The theatre will have two floors, and the equipment will include a huge concert organ. The work of building the theatre will be started immediately so that the house may be opened in the fall.

Harry Sherman to Produce "The Roundup" for Screen

HARRY SHERMAN spent several days in Minneapolis on his way to the Pacific Coast from New York and summarized his plans for entering film producing. While East he secured the film rights to "The Roundup" from Klaw and Erlanger and will produce it this summer. "The Roundup," with its wholesome story and outdoor scenes, should make a corking photoplay, he says.

Mr. Sherman is trying to secure Maclyn Arbuckle, the original sheriff, to play the same role in the film version. Sherman has disposed of the Lehrman comedies, twenty-four in number, to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He is building a new studio at Culver City, Cal., between the Triangle plant, now leased by the Goldwyn company, and the Ince studio, which has just been completed.

DETROIT DISTRICT DIVIDED ON VIEWS

World Correspondent Finds Variety of Preferences on Distribution Plans—Percentage Booking a Problem

WITH the various producers getting ready to formulate and announce their plans of distribution for the coming year, the Moving Picture World correspondent has been going the rounds of Detroit exhibitors asking which they prefer—program booking, star series or strictly open booking.

We find this condition, summing it up: in the smaller towns, where there is a daily change, they are satisfied to have program booking three or four days a week, because then they know just what to expect each week; others prefer to book on star series plan, but this certainly causes a constant changing of days because so many times the very days that the exhibitor wants days the exchange can't give them. As for open booking, this is favored by the first-run exhibitors in the larger cities because it makes every picture stand on its merits, while even the exhibitors in the smaller towns and the smaller houses like open booking—but not for every day in the week, inasmuch as they are not in a position to see personally every picture. They must rely on the company with whom they are doing business to turn out a consistent weekly product suitable for their patrons.

Percentage Booking a Problem.

Then there is the problem of percentage booking. So many exhibitors refuse to pay $50, $75, or $100 per day for a big special production, not caring to take a losing chance, yet the exchange will say, "all right, I'll play you percentage," and then walk away with $125 or $150 or considerably more than the rental price asked. This is happening every day. There is one exchange, the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, who practically do all booking on percentage. A man goes right with the film, and in this way every picture is handled as a special, and there are no lost days nor lost film. Mr. Hyman believes that this is the best way to handle special productions, as it assures every picture the right kind of exploitation and there are no worries as to whether the film will arrive at the theatres on time. The fact that Mr. Hyman has built up an exchange employing 27 people within a period of 18 months shows that his policy of percentage booking has been successful.

Pennsylvania Has Bill to Protect Exhibitor Deposits

REPRESENTATIVE SOFFEL has introduced a bill in the Pennsylvania Legislature which would insure the safety of deposits made at present by exhibitors to film distributors as security for the faithful performance of contracts entered into between the two. The matter has been agitated by prominent exhibitors for some time as a result of the failure of some film concerns, in which case the exhibitor lost the amount of his deposit.

The bill would make the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors the custodians of the moneys thus placed on deposit, who in turn would be obliged to turn the same over to the State Treasurer. In the event of the failure of the film concern having the money on deposit, the exhibitor would have no trouble in having it refunded.

The bill is not retroactive, and would go into effect January 1, 1920. All moneys now on deposit before the law goes into effect would be subject to present conditions.

Some producers object to the proposition, while others agree that the law would be perfectly justifiable. These latter argue that the object of the deposit is simply to enforce the contract and the proposed law would strengthen the exchangeman's part in the controversy. In case an exhibitor made an attempt to violate his contract the exchangeman would simply refer the matter to the custodians of the deposit money.

Big "U" Continues Relation with Trans-Atlantic Film

IN the wake of the recent departure for Europe of John D. Tippett, it is announced from Universal headquarters that that company's product in Europe will continue to be distributed under the supervision of Mr. Tippett through the Trans-Atlantic Film Company of London, which has been the European distributing center for the entire Universal product for the past six years.

During his recent visit to America, as the result of a series of conferences between Mr. Tippett, Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, and R. H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Company, a satisfactory arrangement was entered into for the indefinite continuation and extension of their relations.

Mr. Tippett, before leaving for Europe, declared that American film product in Europe this year would enjoy greater vogue than ever, but that it would be necessary for American film producers to grant more recognition to London as a film centre than it has in the past.

Service Unit Works Out Combination Program Idea

MAKING use of experience gained during the war, the Service Unit of Boston has worked out a plan for combining in an organized unit program, mass or community singing, motion pictures of constructive or educational character, patriotic features, and civic or social information applicable to current public interests.

Service Unit Programs are for indoor or outdoor occasions when assistance may be given to municipal, industrial or community welfare organizations.

The Service Unit, like the Boston Park Shows which provided the foundation for them, is a civic welfare community service undertaking, and not for commercial or theatre purposes. There never has been any effort or desire to rival theatres, either in the use of films or as to the character of programs arranged. Service Unite Programs are for communities and organizations, and combine in acceptable form public information and profitable recreation, plus a plan and an organization for properly presenting programs. The aim is to render civic, industrial, educational and patriotic service through the medium of a specified type of complete organized programs which are "enjoyable as an entertainment, but always for a serious purpose."

Empey and Director Hurt in Making "Hell on Earth"

FOR three days Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey walked with the aid of a cane, while Assistant Director Phil Quinn nursed two stitches in his left cheek, as the result of a bit of real action during the filming of one of the scenes in Sergeant Empey's coming Select Pictures special attraction, "Hell on Earth."

The big scene in which more than 300 extras were employed, will be known in the finished product as the meeting in Harmony Hall. The action which takes place in the hall is supposed to be a meeting of workingmen. Sergeant Empey is cast in the role of one of the leaders. When he takes the platform to address his fellow workers he launches into an attack on Bolshevism and calls for support.

Ordered Pep and Got It.

At this point Director North megaphoned for pep. Some of the extras had guns which they were supposed to fire. One of them got excited and instead of firing the blank cartridges, he swung the gun around his head and let it go. It struck Assistant Director Quinn in the face. Somebody else threw a table. The table made a fair hit and Sergeant Empey went down under it.

Beach President of Authors' League.

Rex Beach, the Goldwyn author, was elected president of the Authors' League by the Council at their seventh annual meeting. Recently Mr. Beach has produced several thrilling dramas which have been released through the Goldwyn organization. His scenarios, "The Heart of the Sunset," "The Brand" and "The Crimson Gardenia," have increased the popularity of the novelist, who first won recognition with his fighting tales of Alaska.

At present, Mr. Beach is in his summer home at Ardsley-on-the-Hudson, where he is working on a novel and a new scenario which will be released through Goldwyn.

"Minnehaha" in Universal Films.

"Minnehaha," the Indian squaw of the films who is best known for her work in Mabel Normand's "Mic'-ey," plays an important atmospheric role in support of Pete Morrison in one of his two-reel Western dramas, "Hate Everlastin'" for Universal. The picture has just been completed under the direction of George Holt.

Buys Foreign Rights to Calvert Films.

Bech, Van Siclen & Company, Inc., has just purchased the foreign rights to four pictures with Catherine Calvert, who has been engaged recently by the Famous Players as a star.

The pictures acquired are "Marriage," "Out of the Night," "Marriage for Convenience" and "Romance of the Underworld."

"SAHARA" TO BE A HODKINSON RELEASE

Colorful Picture of Desert with Louise Glaum Will Be Offered Exhibitors Under Open Booking

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces that it has obtained the complete North American distribution rights for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s special production, "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum and personally supervised by Allan Dwan, the story being the work of C. Gardiner Sullivan.

This is a production with rich and colorful scenes laid in Paris and Cairo and enveloped in the mystery of the Egyptian desert. It was recently given a New York trade presentation at the Rivoli Theatre under the personal direction of Hugo Reisenfeld, and enthused Mr. Reisenfeld to such a pitch that he wrote for it a musical score in keeping with the atmosphere and beauty of the story.

"Sahara" will be offered to exhibitors under the individual booking policy recently announced by the Hodkinson Corporation, and first pre-leases are scheduled in a dozen cities for June 1.

"'Sahara' represents Miss Glaum's power magnified to a degree that is indescribable until one has seen the picture," says Allan Dwan. "I have never had a theme take hold of me as 'Sahara' did, and with the aid of Mr. Sullivan and the star, and backed by the technical facilities of the studio that Mr. Read placed at my disposal, I am surer of this production than of any other picture I have ever made."

Thirty Changes of Gowns.

Louise Glaum has the best-gowned role of her screen career. She has, in the role of Mignon Stanley, thirty changes of gowns, and was never so beautiful and pictorial before in her life. Every gown is a modern one, and six of them come direct from Paquin in Paris.

"Sahara" is to be continuously exploited in the trade press and backed up with regional publicity in every motion picture zone in the United States and Canada. It is marketed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with the same beautiful color inserts that appear in the trade press localized for use as advance programs or for distribution in advance of the presentations to audiences everywhere. Its lithographs and accessories are probably the most unusual poster aides that have been provided with any picture of the season. There are also provided special musical orchestrations for the benefit of exhibitors everywhere—one by Hugo Reisenfeld and the other by Victor Schertzinger.

Film Stars Aid Triumphant Tour of Veteran Battleship

WHILE a group of popular film stars sold Victory Bonds from the deck of the submarine H-8 and from the dock at San Pedro, Calif., the veteran battleship Oregon, which has been famous since 1898, closed it's triumphant tour along the Pacific Coast as the final feature of the drive for the fifth Victory Loan.

Citizens of the Harbor welcomed the battleship Oregon yesterday, on his Victory Loan journey down the Pacific Coast, and on what will probably be the last official cruise of the famous fighting ship, before the vessel is retired and the name Oregon is given to a new super-dreadnaught.

The submarine H-8, under command of Lieutenant J. B. Cooke, was also moored near the dock and Bobby Vernon, Dorothy DeVore and Ethel Lynne, Christie players, and Gloria Swanson, Lasky leading woman, sold $10,000 worth of Liberty Bonds to the crowd from the deck of the little fighter, after which visitors were admitted to the "Oregon."

Form Company in Seattle to Make Scenic Pictures

THE newly formed Adventures Pictures Company of Seattle has been launched by John Rantz, of Bremerton, H. H. Brownell, and J. G. Sill. The first named is president; Mr. Brownell is general manager and Mr. Sill is production manager. Work has already begun on scenic pictures in the Northwest.

J. G. Sill
Production manager of Adventures Pictures.

In order to join this company, Mr. Sill resigned his position as photographer of the Robert Bruce Scenics, which are released through the Educational Film Corporation of New York City.

Jack Rantz is one of the best known exhibitors in the Pacific Northwest, having opened his first theatre in Bremerton seven years ago. Two years ago he and his partner opened the new Rialto in the Puget Sound Navy Yard town. Mr. Rantz now controls the motion picture business in Bremerton with two theatres, the Rialto and the Dream.

H. H. Brownell resigned the management of the Seattle territory for Exhibitors Mutual in order to become affiliated with the Adventure company as general manager. He will take active part in the producing and photographing of the pictures of the new company. Mr. Brownell is well known on the Pacific Coast as a cameraman, having made several of the Pendleton Round-Ups in the last five years.

L. C. Wingham, former manager of the Portland branch of Exhibitors Mutual, is succeeding Mr. Brownell as manager of the Seattle office.

McClure Starts Production on "The Yellow Eel" Serial

PRODUCTION has been started on "The Yellow Eel," the three-part serial picture, which is being made by McClure Productions with the cooperation of the Government. The director, cast, and members of the McClure staff left early in the week for Bridgeport, Conn., where they are now at work upon the opening scenes of the picture, which is to be released under the subtitle of the "Silver Chevron Series."

"The Yellow Eel" is being directed by Charles H. France, who has done notable work with Selig, Edison, and Keystone productions. The scenario is by Marguerite Aspinwall, a member of the McClure editorial staff.

Alice Mann takes the leading part in the serial. She will be remembered for her appearance in many Paramount, Pathe, and Vitagraph pictures and in support of Taylor Holmes in "A Pair of Sixes." As the heroine of "The Yellow Eel," Miss Mann has the role of the idle daughter of a rich United States Senator who lives a life of indolent ease, until a sudden crisis plunges her into a wild career of adventure that tests her true mettle and enables her to render a valuable and dangerous service to her country.

Supporting her sister, Frances Mann plays the part of a woman secret service agent who assists in the fight against the mysterious "Yellow Eel," a character typical of the under-handed Bolshevistic forces at large in America. Frances Mann's previous appearances were in Vitagraph and Lubin productions and on the stage in "Upstairs and Down," the Hatton comedy that enjoyed an extensive run in New York City.

Henley To Start Soon.

Hobart Henley, Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., announces that he has engaged Warren Fromme, newspaper man, as assistant to him in connection with his executive work of production. Leon D. Britton will be Mr. Henley's assistant director. Phil Rosen is expected on from the Coast, next week, to take charge of Mr. Henley's camera work.

Mr. Henley expects to announce within the next week, the title of one of four stories by prominent screen writers, now under consideration. Following the selection of the story, Mr. Henley will start casting, and expects to start actual production work within the next two weeks.

SINCERITY THE KEYNOTE OF SUCCESS

That Is First Need in Exploiting Pictures, Says Manager Knotts of Los Angeles First National

"NEVER tell an exhibitor how to run his business," says W. E. Knotts, manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Los Angeles. "Never become extravagant in your praise of a picture unless you believe what you are saying. When you know your subject—when you are positive that what you are saying is the truth—then the exhibitor will unconsciously absorb your enthusiasm.

"As you continue to talk—just as you would around your own fireside, or at the club, or anywhere else when not trying to sell a contract—the exhibitor will soon decide that it is the part of wisdom to book the subject in hand.

"Then you have accomplished something. You have told the exhibitor about a picture and sold it to him without appearing to have done so. In other words you have told him how to run his business and at the same time you haven't.

"Having caught your enthusiasm he will begin an advertising campaign that will have a ring of sincerity and truth in every statement or every claim he makes for the picture and then the motion picture fans will 'feel' that what is being advertised is real stuff and no make-believe. They will imbibe the enthusiasm of the exhibitor and then go to see the picture.

Sincerity in Advertising.

"What am I driving at? Sincerity in advertising. Honesty in dealing with the exhibitor and the motion picture fan.

"I believe that an exhibitor should be enthusiastic about every subject he exhibits. There are others who may refute this argument, because they tell you there are pictures that some people like that are not liked by others. I answer this by saying that a good story, good direction and a good star comprising the film, exhibited properly with all the trappings to match, will get over every time and will be universally enjoyed.

"There are pictures, of course, that please some and do not please others. There are classics, there are problem plays, there are comedy dramas—there are many kinds and varieties of productions—all of them built to please somebody. It's up to the exhibitor to make his choice when selecting from such plays.

"I am dealing with the subject of good stories, good direction and a star of acknowledged popularity. It is with such subjects that I advise the exchange manager or the exhibitor deal with frankness and sincerity."

H. Thompson Likes Picture Work More Than the Stage

HUGH THOMPSON, the widely known screen player, who has appeared in many big productions as leading man for Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson, Annette Kellerman, Florence Reed, Emmy Wehlen, Olive Tell, Doris Kenyon and others, who has just completed work as leading man in the five reel picture issued in S. L. Rothapfel's first Unit Program, has been engaged by World Pictures as leading man for Evelyn Greeley in "Phil-for-Short," the first World picture to be produced with Miss Greeley as the sole star. Oscar Apfel is directing this production.

Mr. Thompson, who is one of the screen players with a real purpose and enthusiasm in his work, has had a remarkable career. He has been in pictures for about four years and previous to that time served an exacting apprenticeship in stock company work.

"Motion picture acting," he declares, "is extremely exacting. It is hard work and yet I love it. I love the effort and technique it requires. I like tremendously the brain work and skill involved in playing a big scene the way it should be played so that it will have the punch and effectiveness of real life and register with an audience the way it should. I like motion pictures much more than the stage. On the stage any man who has a good voice, looks and who is only a passable actor, can get by."

Lieut. Stuart Has Relapse.

Lieut. Leslie Stuart, late of the Royal Field Artillery, the son of the composer of "Florodora," who is playing an important part in Tom Moore's production at the Goldwyn Studios, has suffered a relapse from his shrapnel wound, received some months ago, and is at present in a local hospital. Lieut. Stuart only recently joined the Goldwyn forces, coming direct from a British convalescent hospital. His wound was received at Cambrai. The actor may have to undergo a slight operation for the removal of the slug.

Pathe News Is First Film Sent by Air in Canada

PATHE NEWS was the first exhibition film to be transported by aeroplane in the United States and now it has established the same precedent in Canada.

George Swanwick, manager of the Princess Theatre, Hamilton, failed to receive his British-Canadian Pathe News in time for exhibition. He then got Sydney Taube, of Pathe's Toronto exchange on the phone.

The next train to Hamilton was late in the afternoon—too late—and Taube grasped the idea of utilizing an aeroplane to carry the film. He faithfully promised Mr. Swanwick that Pathe News would be there for showing at the afternoon performance.

Arrangements were made to have a plane ready for the flight, and Blain Irish, Pathe cameraman was hustled into a machine with all of his paraphernalia and rushed to the aviation grounds.

From the time the machine left the ground until it reached Hamilton, just 31 minutes elapsed. Mr. Swanwick had a motor car waiting in the suburbs of Hamilton to receive the film and rush it to the theatre.

Sid Grauman Crowds House with Auto Assembling Act

SID GRAUMAN staged an act at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, in connection with his feature photoplay and program that will no doubt be interesting to other exhibitors. The foundation for the stage presentation was the Ford automobile—the assembling of two Ford cars on the stage of the theatre by two picked factory teams.

Fifth on the bill the Ford act was presented. On one side of the stage appeared a blue team of six men and on the other a red team of as many brawny toilers; on either side of the stage also was an unassembled Ford. On a signal the two teams started. No faster work has ever been seen.

The symphony orchestra assisted matters by affording rapidly moving music, increasing the tempo as the two "tin lizzies" were put together. The hurried actions of the workmen, the fast music and the general state of excitement completely enwrapped the audiences until finally when the task of assembling the two Ford cars was completed they burst forth in enthusiastic applause.

Dedicate Song to Evelyn Nesbit.

Exhibitors who show Evelyn Nesbit's coming William Fox picture, "A Fallen Idol," will have good advertising material in a song which has just been written and dedicated to Miss Nesbit. The title of the song is "Fallen Idols," and it is now in course of publication by a well-known Broadway music house.

CO-OPERATIVE EXCHANGE IN TORONTO

First Annual Convention of Canadian Exhibitors Brings About Birth of Protective Association

THE first annual convention of Canadian exhibitors was held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, at Toronto, on May 5 and 6. It drew an attendance of one hundred and ninety-four men, the majority of whom were from Toronto and Ontario points. The total membership of the Ontario organization is over the two hundred mark, so that the active supporters of the Ontario body were well represented at the gathering.

The main purpose of the conference was to launch the new Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange Company, Limited, which was recently incorporated with a capital of $100,000. This has been organized at the instance of the Ontario association as a co-operative company to meet the competition of distributing companies which are establishing chains of theatres throughout the country on their own account. Announcement was made at the convention that more than half of the capital stock of the new concern had been subscribed.

Shareholders Meet Second Day.

A meeting of the shareholders of the company was held on the second day, when the permanent directors of the company were selected by secret vote. The ballot resulted in the appointment of J. C. Brady, of Toronto, president; Thomas Scott, secretary; H. Alexander, Dr. R. J. Richardson, L. Ludwig, barristers, all of Toronto; H. P. Redway, A. A. Cooper, Huntsville, Ontario, and J. S. Smart, Port Hope. The ballots were scrutinized by Messrs. Brady and Ludwig.

A prominent visitor at the convention was Y. M. Franklin, of Halifax, representing the Maritime Motion Picture exhibitors' Protective Association. He announced that every member of that association had resolved not to book pictures from exchange companies which were operating theatres in opposition to the independent exhibitor and that the members of the Maritime body had stuck to this resolution. The members of the Eastern organization had also resolved not to book films under a contract which did not contain a thirty-day cancellation clause.

Speakers Tell of Concessions.

The speakers at the business session told of the concessions gained from the Ontario Government, as a result of co-operative efforts. One of these concessions is the new law which permits the admission of children without parents or guardians to theatres on Saturdays and holidays. The declaration was made that an effort had been aimed at the Federal Government for the removal of the reel tax, but no action had yet been taken by the Canadian Parliament.

One of the features of the convention was a big banquet at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on Monday evening, May 5 with more than one hundred exhibitors and guests in attendance. Music was supplied by two orchestras and the best artists in Toronto provided the vocal program. The dinner speakers included J. C. Brady, Dr. R. J. Richardson, of Toronto; Y. M. Franklin, of Halifax, and Mr. Ludwig, the legal adviser of the Ontario association.

"Auction of Souls" Great Help to Near East Fund

THE beginning of a remarkable public support of a feature attraction is seen in the voluntary advertising of "Auction of Souls," the First National picture which has been started by the Committee for the Relief of the Near East (Armenian Branch) of North Texas. As soon as he had seen "Auction of Souls," C. P. Sites, of Dallas, director of this relief work, sent out several thousand personal letters to influential persons in his district urging them to see the picture.

His letter was a declaration of sponsorship for this film which, under the name of "Ravished Armenia," was seen by the foremost citizens of a number of the largest American cities at $10 a seat, the proceeds being added to the $30,000,000 fund which was raised nationally to send food, medical attention, and other necessaries to the millions perishing in the Near East.

Similar support is to be given the production everywhere by local committees of the Committee for the Relief of the Near East. Mr. Sites has forwarded to the headquarters of this body, in New York, his recommendation that all interested in the Armenians, the Greeks, Syrians, Persians—and all others who have been crushed during the war period by the "infamous Turk"—see "Auction of Souls" and have others do so, realizing what a big piece of publicity the showing of the picture will be.

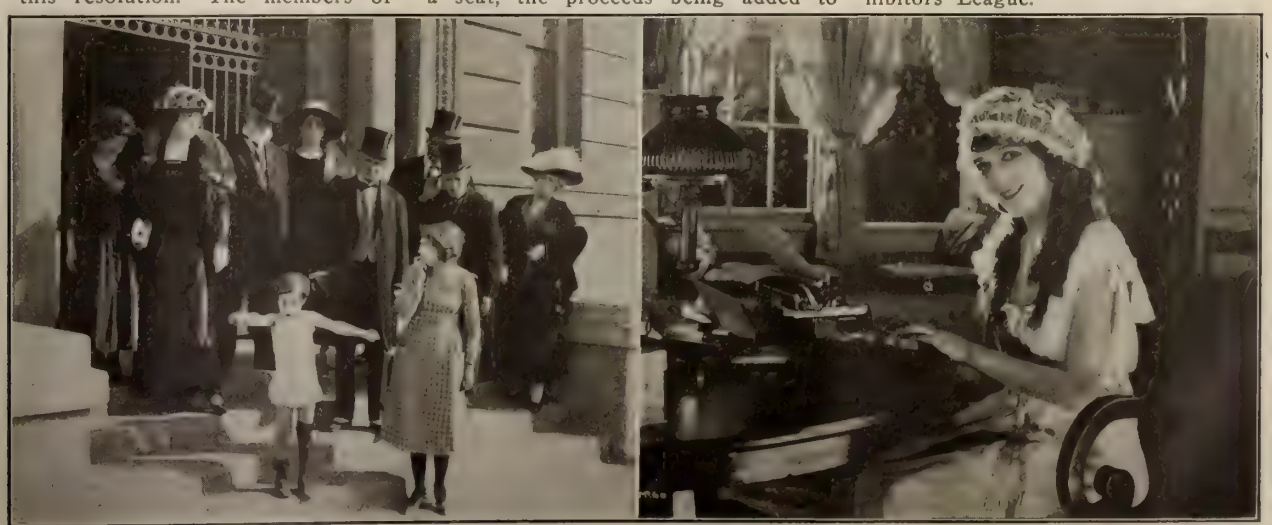
Stella Talbot Appearing in Six Southern Cities

PERSONAL appearances in six Southern cities within the next three weeks will be made by Stella K. Talbot, star of "The Price of Innocence," as a feature of its first run presentations after unusually successful openings with week stands in Detroit and New Orleans.

Miss Talbot left New York for Richmond, Va., on Monday, May 12, accompanied by George H. Hamilton, sales manager for the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation. She will make a personal appearance at every showing of "The Price of Innocence" during the four days it will play at the Broadway Theatre, in Richmond.

The next stop on the itinerary will be Danville, Va., where she will remain for two days, appearing at the Broadway Theatre there. Following this, there will be engagements of two days each in Charlotte, N. C., Durham, N. C., and Petersburg, Va. From this latter city Miss Talbot will go to Baltimore to make personal appearances during a week's run of the initial production of the Buffalo concern. Mr. Louis Bache, of the Electric Theatre Supply Company of Philadelphia, is now completing arrangements for the Baltimore showing.

Miss Talbot also will be present at the ball to be given in Philadelphia on May 28 by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.



What Would You Do If You'd Been Mending a Kiddo's Trousers and the Kiddo Had Run Away?
Especially if he'd bumped bang into the committee investigating the orphanage. But you wouldn't mind if you later became an authoress, as Mary Pickford does in her initial First National, "Daddy Long Legs."

MAKE LENSES BETTER THAN GERMANS

Bausch & Lomb Optical Company Now Produces Glass That Excels the Boche Jena Product

TO Rochester is accorded the honor of emancipating America from the dependence upon Germany for its optical glass. This most precious material, an important factor in the motion picture industry, is now and has been for some time being made in Rochester by the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company.

The lenses which make possible motion picture photography and projection, have until recently all been made from optical glass imported from Europe. The glass for the cameras being made in America is now being turned out by the Bosch and Lomb plant, among the largest customers of the company being the Eastman Kodak Company, who buy all of their lenses from Bausch and Lomb.

German Glass No Longer Necessary.

Optical glass was until recently regarded as one of the exclusive hereditary monopolies of European countries, most of it being made in Germany. It was one of the closely controlled industries, whose secrets are guarded even more carefully than are the workers in the gold and diamond mines, and in which the only condition upon which the trade was taught to a new man was that his father and grandfather had been masters of it, even as he expected his sons to be.

John J. Bausch came to Rochester in 1856 and hung a a few pair of spectacles in a window in Reynolds Arcade. His business grew steadily, all of his glasses being fitted with lenses imported from Germany. Some of these were so unsatisfactory to Bausch that he invented the first lens grinding machine in America and began to grind his own by hand. With the growth of his sons his business grew, but always depending on Europe for the rough glass.

Bausch Experimented Successfully.

One of these sons, William Bausch, began to experiment in 1903 in the manufacture of optical glass, but after long and secret effort was only able to produce a very green-colored glass, instead of the perfectly colorless crystal-like glass needed. In 1912, owing to the acute shortage of glass, due to the war, and the consequent high prices, experiments were again started in a small shed behind the factory on the river flats.

In 1916-17 the company for the first time produced a glass which was used in the manufacture of anastigmat photographic lenses. Owing to the precision which these lenses called for, only the highest and most costly of the so-called Jena glass had previously been used. When the country entered the war the United States Government immediately became deeply interested in the Bausch and Lomb plant, establishing a research laboratory there.

Prisoners' Plea to See "Humanity" Film Gratified

REQUESTS of prisoners to see a certain picture at a certain time were granted for the first time in the history of the state penitentiary at Sillwater, Minn., recently.

C. S. Reed, warden of the state prison, consented to allow 1,000 prisoners a "morning off" to see "The Heart of Humanity."

Fred Bell, manager of the Hill Top and Majestic theatres, of Stillwater, said that the prisoners were delighted with the showing. He said that while the prisoners had frequently been permitted to see "movies" in the afternoons, this was the first time a photoplay had impelled the officials to satisfy the desire of inmates with a morning presentation.

Cincinnati League Holds Meeting.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce held a meeting Wednesday, May 6, and matters relating to the summer season at the local houses were discussed. Plans were made for taking care of the enormous business expected, and it is generally believed by the exhibitors that the next few months will see the greatest prosperity the motion picture theatres of Cincinnati have ever enjoyed.

World to Erect Building for Pittsburgh Exchange

WORLD PICTURES announces that contracts have been let for the construction of a five-story building in Pittsburgh, which will be used by this company as its exchange in that city. This is following the policy of the company to own its own buildings in the different cities in the United States where branch offices are maintained.

Boston and Philadelphia are already represented by buildings belonging to the World Film Corporation. It is expected that within the next four weeks a piece of property will be purchased in Seattle on which will be constructed a building for the use of the Seattle Exchange. Thus, World Pictures again demonstrates that it is a distributing organization of permanency.

Picture Impresses National Press Club.

Washington correspondents, members of displomatic staffs, and governmental attaches were among the 800 men who saw "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," a First National attraction, which was shown at the National Press Club, Washington, D. C., on May 9, and which is about to be released. Those who saw the film were impressed with the subtle way in which it portrays the failure and final end of the great German plot to dominate the world.

When the George Washington brings President Wilson back home the President will be entertained by Constance Talmadge in two of her latest Select Pictures, "A Lady's Name" and "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," in both of which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick. One other Select Picture which will contribute toward the President's entertainment will be Anna Case in "The Hidden Truth."

"The Westerners" Is Full of Tragedy One M oment and the Next It Breaks Out in Smiles.

Roy Stewart and Mildred Manning aren't at all worried over the tragedy in Great Authors' picturization of Stewart Edward White's novel, distributed by Hodkinson.

BOSTON SELECT EXCHANGE CELEBRATES

Officials from Home Office Extend Welcome to Many Visiting Exhibitors at Enlarged Quarters

OFFICIALS from Select's home office and several hundred exhibitors in the New England district were the guests of New England Manager David J. Selznick Monday, May 5, in celebrating the opening of the enlarged quarters of the New England exchange in Boston. The officials from Select's home office who were present were General Manager Sam E. Morris and Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers. Owing to the urgent need of his presence in New York, Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select, was unable to attend.

The location of the new New England exchange remains at the same address, 69 Church street, but the quarters have been enlarged to twice their former size. The building next door to the old exchange has been taken over, and together the two buildings have been remodeled and decorated so that from the inside it gives the appearance of one large building.

Enlarged Twice Within a Year.

This is the second time within a year that the quarters of the New England exchange have been enlarged. Several months ago when Director of Sales Charles R. Rogers was New England manager considerable new floor space was annexed. Since that time, however, the New England business has steadily increased, and about a month ago it was realized that even more space was needed.

Charles R. Rogers, under whose supervision as New England manager the Boston quarters were first enlarged, went to Boston to assist New England Manager Selznick with the arrangements for the celebration.

The events for the day were arranged in the form of a running program, and consisted chiefly in the projection of the latest Select pictures, including The Star Series attractions and the Specials. Refreshments were served throughout the day.

Leah Baird Orders Aeroplane.

Leah Baird has ordered for her personal use a Sopwith monoplane of the so-called "Gadfly" type, with a 35-foot wingspread and all-metal parts, capable of carrying two persons and attaining a maximum speed of 90 miles an hour.

Miss Baird, who is starred in "As a Man Thinks," a new Four Star Photodrama produced by Harry Raver under the direction of George Irving, the play being based on Augustus Thomas' famous speaking stage success of the same name, is now enacting the role of "Ruth" in a new Thomas socio-industrial picture play that has been in work for some time in the Biograph studio.

Beatrice Burnham Signs with Universal.

Beatrice Burnham, who was in Adda Gleason's support in "Ramona," and who for several seasons has been in a series of light comedies produced by the LaSalle Company, of Chicago, has signed up with the Universal. She will be seen opposite Eddie Polo in several of the Western dramas now being made at Universal cities. Miss Burnham is not new to the screen, having carried leading parts in support of Vivian Martin, George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, and as a leading woman with the Lyons-Moran comedies.

Bandes Transferred to New York.

Thomas Bandes, for two years booker at the Buffalo exchange of Select Pictures, has been transferred to the more important post of booker of Select's New York exchange under the direction of Branch Manager Henry Siegel. Mr. Bandes has been associated with Select since the organization of that concern. Previously he had been connected with Selznick Pictures.

Exchange Board Elects Thompson.

C. A. Thompson, manager of the Cleveland branch of the World Film

C. A. Thompson.

Corporation, has been elected president of the Board of Film Exchange Managers, Chamber of Commerce, succeeding S. E. Morris, who resigned when he left Cleveland to become general manager for Lewis J. Selznick.

Mr. Thompson is very popular among the exhibitors and exchangemen.

Conant Is Select's Cincinnati Head.

J. A. Conant, former branch manager of General Film Exchange in Cleveland, has been made manager of Select Pictures Exchange in Cincinnati. Mr. Conant began his career in the picture industry with the Vitagraph company a number of years ago.

Washington Managers Plan Ball.

President Smeltzer, of the Washington (D. C.) Exchange Managers' Association, is soon to call a meeting of that organization for the discussion of plans for an elaborate motion picture ball to be held this fall. The managers seem unanimous in the belief that such a ball would be a good advertising proposition for the business locally. They want to secure the presence of stars from each of the companies represented by the membership in the organization. Committees will be appointed to take charge of the various details, for if it is really decided that a ball is "the thing," the managers are not going to take any chances on its being a fizzle.

Makes Picture on Stage as Advertising Stunt

JOSEPH ERBER, proprietor of Erber's Theatre, East St. Louis, is circulating a herald which contains a project believed to be unique. Mr. Erber on May 19 will begin the filming of a photoplay on his stage in full view of the audience. He presents this novelty under the title of "Making Movies." Local aspirants, singly or in groups, who desire to participate will be given opportunity to display their ability before the camera.

A complete motion picture studio will be assembled on the stage. Different scenes will be made at every performance. These, when assembled, will form, according to Mr. Erber, a photoplay of genuine merit. The completed picture will be shown on the screen of Erber's Theatre the entire week of June 2.

Mr. Erber is a strong supporter of Fox stars and Fox films.

Petrova Aids Victory Loan.

One of the best speeches that Olga Petrova ever delivered in her career was that given by her at the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, in the interests of the Victory Loan on Wednesday night, May 7, when she made an appeal for subscriptions before an audience of nearly 4,500. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Retail Merchants' Victory Loan Association and when it was over the total sum subscribed totaled $2,003,850.

Petrova was appearing at the Maryland Theatre in a vaudeville act during the week.

New Producing Firm in Wheeling.

A new moving picture producing company has been formed in Wheeling, W. Va., and will be known as the Semore Photoplay Company. B. W. Lewis, and H. M. Prager are the principle factors of the new company.

H. M. Prager is a cameraman who has had much experience in shooting pictures. It is the intention of the company to specialize in dramas, and the first picture of the new company will be a five reel subject.

Rogers Visits Cincinnati for Select.

Charles R. Rogers, director of sales of Select Pictures, made a trip to Cincinnati last week. Mr. Rogers' business, as chronicled elsewhere, was in the interest of Select's Cincinnati Exchange and the installation of Select's new Cincinnati branch manager, J. A. Conant. He reports that the outlook for increased activity in the Cincinnati district is very promising.

EXHIBITOR IS "GOAT" FOR EXCHANGES

So Says Melton Phelos, of Elyria, Ohio, in Letter Flaying Advance Deposit, C. O. D. and Other Rules

That the exhibitor—especially the small exhibitor—is the victim of unfair practices on the part of exchanges is the belief of Melton Phelos, of the Elyria Theatres Company, Inc., Elyria, Ohio, which operates the American, Dreamland, Strand and Rialto in that city. Mr. Phelos writes:

IN my past fourteen years' experience in the motion picture industry I never can remember the day when the exhibitor was the "goat" to the film exchanges as much as he is today.

It doesn't matter what happens in the industry, the exhibitor is always the "goat." For instance: some time ago, the exchanges in Cleveland and throughout the country put their heads together and passed rules among themselves to the effect that each and every picture booked would require one picture deposit; which meant that if the exhibitor had three or four theatres he would have to invest $3,000 or $4,000 among the different exchanges without receiving a penny interest.

Later, they made another rule, which required that the exhibitor pay for all films in advance of date played—if not, they would ship the film C. O. D.

That was all good enough, said and done. The exhibitor had to like it.

Exchanges Pass Further Rules.

Now, in the past three or four weeks, the exchanges in Cleveland got their heads together and passed a rule that not only requiring a deposit for pictures booked from them; not only asks you to pay them in advance for pictures booked for your theatres; but also that "if the check is not in the office prior to the date played they will not ship any films out C. O. D." (because, perhaps, through the exhibitor's error or the exchange's error some exhibitor refused to lift the C. O. D.) Now if by mistake, an exhibitor fails to send a check previous to the day the picture is shown, he will have to close up his theatre until the exchange is abolutely guaranteed of his money.

That looks like a good way of doing business, but for the benefit of the exchanges only, not the exhibitors.

Exhibitor Has No Guarantee.

What guarantee and what damages are exchanges willing to pay to exhibitors when a film booked for a certain day is paid in advance and, through the error of the booker or express, the exhibitor does not receive the picture, having spent money in newspapers, bill posting, etc? If you call up the exchange and ask them why they didn't send the film, their answer is, "Very sorry, but it was the booker's fault or some one else, but we will send it to you later."

Did the exchange stop and think what this disappointment meant not only to the exhibitor, but to the public in general? Did the exchange stop and think how much money the exhibitor lost that day? But why should the exchange manager worry? For he has a deposit, pictures paid in advance, and if the picture fails to show up at the theatre he is sorry, but it was a mistake.

Exhibitors' Time Will Come.

The time will come when the exhibitor will realize and open his eyes to the fact that he is being the "goat" all the time.

What chance has a small exhibitor to run decent pictures without investing all his capital for deposits? What chance has a small exhibitor to exist in the motion picture industry if some time through his error or sickness he fails to send his check in to the exchange for the picture? And after he has advertised heavily, not only does he disappoint his patrons, but he also loses his bread and butter.

Melton Phelos

Elyria Theatres Company, Elyria, Ohio.

I hope the time comes when exchanges will realize that the exhibitors' bread and butter is just as good as the exchange men's bread and butter.

MELTON PHELOS.

Rainbow Band to Play at the Minneapolis Palace

ONE of the most interesting theatrical announcements in Minneapolis in weeks is that of Ruben & Finkelstein that the band of the 151st Field Artillery, Rainbow Division, which has just returned to American soil, will play a special week's engagement at the Minneapolis New Palace, beginning Sunday, May 25.

I. H. Ruben concluded negotiations for the engagement through Colonel William H. Donahue, of Minneapolis, immediately on Colonel Donahue's return from meeting the 151st in New York. The negotiations for the engagement were originally opened by cable, while the 151st band was still in France. Colonel Donahue went to New York fully empowered to complete an agreement that was satisfactory to Lieutenant Michael Jalma, leader of the 151st band, and members. He met Lieutenant Jalma when the latter stepped from the transport. The appearance of the band for a week's engagement in Minneapolis was immediately taken up. Within one day arrangements for the engagement had been completed and all that remained was the signing of contracts, which was done in Minneapolis.

The 151st band is composed of Lieutenant Michael Jalma, director, two soloists and 32 musicians. With the celebrated Rainbow Division, the band went to France in October, 1917. All of the band members wear three service stripes.

Famous Players to Release Drew Films as Per Contract

WALTER E. GREENE, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, has just announced that in accordance with the original schedule, there will be seven Paramount-Drew comedies during the current season.

Following the death of Mr. Drew, considerable speculation has been evident among exhibitors, particularly those who have contracted for the entire series of Paramount-Drew comedies, as to whether or not the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation would be able to deliver seven subjects. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew together made five comedies for Paramount release in the following order: "Romance and Rings," "Once a Mason," "The Amateur Liar," "Harold, the Last of the Saxons," just released, and "Squared," to be released June 15.

The many friends of Dick Barthelmess, formerly of Broadway, New York, but now of Broadway, Los Angeles, are welcoming him back during his short leave from studio work, which has been granted him by D. W. Griffith for the purpose of attending the opening of "Broken Blossoms" at the Cohan Theatre. In this production Barthelmess has a featured place with Lillian Gish and Donald Crisp.

Unlike the roles in which he has achieved notable success in recent Griffith-Artcrafts, Barthelmess' part in "Broken Blossoms" places him as a character artist. He appears as Cheng Huan, "the Yellow Man," a poetic delineation quite different from the modern types of American youth with which he has been lately associated.

Syracuse Manager Visits New York.

Edgar Weill, manager of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., arrived on Broadway this week with Mrs. Weill to enjoy a little vacation and "look over the field" as it were. The first visit paid by Mr. Weill in the big city was made at the Famous Players-Lasky home office where he said hello to everyone, from Mr. Zukor to the office girl.

Jack Gilbert with Universal.

Jack Gilbert, formerly leading man with the Thomas Ince productions, and who has more recently been seen in support of Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star, has joined the Universal forces to play an important role in the screen production of the Joseph Medill Patterson novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," which is being picturized at Universal City.

WORTH WHILE EDUCATIONALS SHOWN

Hawaii in Color, Slow Motion Juggling, Wild Geese in Native Haunts, Swordmanship and Scenic Bits

AMONG recent educational releases are subjects of divergent interests. Some of these appear in film magazines and others in the usual one-reel form, to be used as a distinctive number of a program. The following are among the worth while educationals of recent release.

"Hawaii."

The Prizma travel picture, "Hawaii," is a pleasing study of people and things in the Hawaiian Islands, made more attractive by way of the natural color method. One of the features of the picture is the cultivation of the coffee bean with closeups of the heavily laden branches of the trees. Then there is the real Hula Hula dance, such as Broadway has never seen, and religious ceremonies with impressive rites. The growing of gourds and their use as musical instruments, the making of mats from palm leaves, the fishing industry in Hawaii, interesting closeups of Hawaiian types, and various other scenes characteristic of these islands of the South Pacific.

"The Pale Pack Train."

One of the Robert C. Bruce scenic pictures in which five white horses form the foundation of the pack train. Fastened to each other's tails they climb and climb, sometimes with their masters on their backs, and sometimes having plenty to do in making the ascent of some western mountain with only their pack saddles. The usual beauty of the western mountains is present in the picture, where from time to time the spectator is treated to glimpses of a deep gully or a smiling lake, shifting onward and upward to fields of snow, outdoing in purity of aspect the white array of the "pale pack train."

"Swordsmanship."

The Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 6115 contains an illustration of the best American work with rapiers and broadswords. The picture proves an excellent lesson in the use of these weapons of war, with individual champions of the country and intercollegiate championship teams displaying their skill. A unique feature of this subject is an illustration showing that skill in swordsmanship is not confined to male champions, but that women also come in for a share of the laurels.

"Climbing the Cascade Mountains."

One of the attractive subjects of No. 6115 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph. The glistening blue of mountain ice, and the majestic wonders of snow-flanked peaks fascinate the eye as it follows the course of a party of mountain climbers in the famous western mountains. The picture possesses the thrilling quality attendant on scenes of this kind. And when the party has at last reached the snow-capped mountain top, there is still left the tobogganing fun of a swift descent.

"The Wolf of the Tetons."

One of the most attractive of the latest series of Bruce Scenics is "The Wolf of the Tetons," in which a lone wolf is made the centre of attraction. He wanders over the mountains, after making his escape from his sorrowing mother, and finds new joys in the big world that beckons him beyond each rising peak. The picture is a delightful series of scenic beauties which add their quota to the attractiveness of the story of the runaway wolf, who after traveling far from home finally meets with a couple of dogs with whom he makes friends. The scenes of the picture were photographed on the rim of Jackson Hole, Wyoming.

"A Wild Goose Chase."

The story of the wild goose as it migrates from south to north, and vice versa, is covered in the Ford-Goldwyn Educational Weekly, "The Wild Goose Chase." The feature of the picture is the farm of Jack Miner, at Kingsville, Ontario, where for years he has been feeding the wild geese as they journey back and forth, until now in the migratory season the lake on his farm is the stopping place for thousands of these wild fowl. They have learned that there is no shooting on the Miner farm, and also that there is plenty of good food to be had. A wild goose hatching her young in captivity is also a feature of the picture.

Rapidly Renovates Airdome to Show Liberty Loan Film

GUY STUBBS, manager of the Airdome, Monroe, La., was recently in New Orleans, arranging his program for the opening of his theatre for the summer months. He is a farmer by profession, and a motion picture exhibitor by occupation for a greater part of the year. During the fifth Victory Loan drive the propaganda film "Fighting For Peace" was sent to Monroe for exhibition. For some reason the committee was unable to secure its exhibition at the theatres then in operation.

Appeal was made to Manager Stubbs. He pointed out that his airdome was practically dismantled, the machines packed away, the wiring not in order and the theatre sadly in need of renovation. In a few days appeal was again made to Manager Stubbs to relieve the situation.

Being informed that it was desired that the picture be shown on Friday, Mr. Stubbs sent to his farm and brought in all of the available laborers. He secured five electricians and other expert workmen. A force of twenty men was turned loose on the theatre.

In three days the Airdome was made ready for the proper showing of the picture, and the whole institution was clean and inviting. On Friday night it looked as if the entire population of the city had congregated at the theatre. The picture was enthusiastically received.

Special representative of Bulls Eye.

James L. Mendelson Made Bulls Eye Representative

MILTON L. COHEN, in announcing the appointment of James L. Mendelson as special representative of the Bulls Eye Film Corporation, gives a practical explanation for the rapid growth of his organization. Merit is quickly recognized and rewarded.

Mr. Mendelson undertakes his new duties after twelve months' association in various capacities with the New York selling office. He will tour the country in line with his firm's policy of increased activity, bringing to the Bulls Eye and Gale Henry Comedy distributors material co-operation from the producing office.

Mr. Mendelson holds a Bachelor of Science degree from the College of the City of New York, 1917, and was recently mustered out of the U. S. Naval Aviation Service.

Moreno's Contract with Vitagraph Is Extended

NEWS comes from the West Coast studios of Vitagraph that Antonio Moreno has just signed a new contract insuring two more years of starring activities in Vitagraph serials.

The contract was signed a few days ago under circumstances which speak well for the complete harmony existing between producer and player in the Vitagraph organization. Undoubtedly, a factor in Mr. Moreno's ready acceptance to serve Vitagraph further was his realization that this organization has spent much money to bring his talents for the delineation of screen characterization before the public.

Fox Films to Entertain President.

President Wilson on his return from the Peace Conference aboard the George Washington will be entertained by a number of Fox Productions. The selection includes "Salome," "Cleopatra," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Bondman," and a number of Sunshine Comedies.

Rochester Lawyer Speaks for Sunday Opening

DECLARING that the smallness of the opposition of some ministers to Sunday amusements and the uncompromising attitude assumed by some churches in matters pertaining to the welfare of the masses were responsible for the waning influence of the church, Attorney John J. McInerney electrified his hearers at a hearing on the Sunday question in Rochester.

The hearing had been called by the city authorities to get the voice of the people on an ordinance introduced in the Common Council, and which had the support of a great many people, as attested by long petitions, but which was violently opposed from the pulpits as a desecration of the Sabbath. Delegations of citizens representing various organizations spoke in favor of the measure and at every turn they were met with counter arguments, threats, pleadings and prayers from the ministerial gentry.

Finally, Mr. McInerney, representing the Recreational League, and who was counsel for the picture interests in the legislative fight at Albany, arose and literally raked the churchmen fore and aft. His remarks were greeted with a spontaneous burst of applause, evidently touching a responsive chord among the assembled crowd.

Jack Cohn, who is producing these pictures, is enthusiastic of their possibilities.

Goldwyn Buys Five Plays for Production in Future

SAMUEL GOLDWYN announces five new plays that the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased for production in the near future.

"The Wrong Door" by Jesse Lynch Williams, will star Madge Kennedy; and Mabel Normand has an unparalleled opportunity to be funny in "Up-Stairs," a picturization of the novel by Perley Poore Sheehan, author of "White Tigers," "The Whispering Chorus," "God's Messenger," etc.

"Heartsease" is another play that Goldwyn will put into the hands of the directors shortly. It is the work of Charles E. Klein. The cast for this play has not yet been definitely decided on.

"Lord and Lady Algy" is the all-star play by R. C. Carton that gave William Faversham an extra triumph last year. Tom Moore will play in the picture for Goldwyn. Indeed, work on this at the Culver City studios has already been begun. Naomi Childers will play Lady to Moore's Lord.

The fifth picture that Goldwyn has contracted for is a big new Rex Beach production, entitled "The Girl from Outside." Reginald Barker, director of the Rex Beach photoplays is working on the new vehicle now.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Ruff Stuff.

RALPH RUFFNER writes that no one told him about the American Theatre advertising. He passed a man on the street carrying a zinc cut "too large for other than a full page," and he figured that the prices would be shoved up, so he took a chance. He had had a page prepared for the Paramount stars, but first the flu and then the strikes made it expedient to hold it back, so he shot it over and waited. If there had been no raise in the American prices he would have been up in the air, but he took a chance and won. That's Ruff. He is on the job and gets things over on that account. We still do not see any reason why the American should not have run up the rate. Either this must be done or some good pictures will not be seen, but Ruff clears the newspaper men of unethical conduct. He just happened to run into that man with a cut and the rest followed in the natural order.

Playing It Up.

Here is a half page from a Baltimore paper for "The Heart of Humanity." Baltimore rates are rather high, compared with other cities, and a half page represents no small outlay. The display is a solid cut, mortised to let in the displays, and to this extent the artist has done well, but a further expenditure of two or three dollars to rout out the background of the cut would have made a wonderful difference in the value of the display, not only pictorially, but in attraction. The color value of the face and the background is so nearly equal that the cut sinks into the space. Throwing the figure against white space would have meant a very great deal to the announcement. These little things seem to escape the average showman. He does not seem to stop to consider the eventual average result. If the drawing looks all right he passes it. He does not stop to consider how the newspaper reproduction will appear, and yet he alone sees the drawing. The thousands of readers see only the reproduction. As a matter of safety it would be wise to rout out all portraits when used in reverse frames, merely for the added value of the display and without considering the artistic effect. Here the artistic effect would also have been enhanced.

From Mr. Raleigh.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Mont., sends in a batch of stuff done by himself. He writes that he has such trouble getting material that now he makes a practice of saving illustrative matter from the trade papers, which he can work up into line drawings when he gets no stills from the exchange, and he seems to have no more luck with the exchanges than the rest of the exhibitors. With a supply of trade paper stuff, he can go to work without waiting to see if the exchange comes across at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth minute. A four elevens for "The Light of Western

A Four Elevens from the American, Butte.

Stars" shows up all right because the stuff comes out black. If the ink happens to go wrong or the paper is not just right, it is 44 column inches gone to perdition; but this time it seems to have been a safe play. All the same, those reverse cuts are apt to be loaded, and we would leave them severly alone. It does not pay to trust everything on the ink being stiff enough or the paper not too soft. It is just as easy to get out something that will be fool proof on the press, and often it is easier. Take for example this four eights with its type announcement. This works just as well and the stuff will show even if the paper is too absorbent. The script message off to the right is excess baggage. If you twist to read it you will find, "I just stepped out of the ad to tell you that it is some session this time. Pearl White." It serves some purpose in telling that the sketch is supposed to be of Miss White, but it would have been better had it been written so that it might be read without doing a contortion act. The humor of the text is a trifle clumsy in that it does not strike in. It seems to be an effort to work along the Ruffner lines without having the Ruffner jazz. The third display shows three designs pretty much alike in that they carry silhouetted figures with the title and star in white against black. That may be all right, but it is taking an awful chance. Mr. Raleigh seems to be going in strong for the reverse stuff lately, but he will get bumped in time and change his mind. The stuff is effective if it comes out all right, but it is not always certain to come out all right. Mr. Raleigh is planning to sell his cuts to exhibitors, and he will not give general satisfaction with those solid blacks. The last example shows a pair of three column spaces, one ten and the other eleven inches deep. These are better because they will print on almost any sort of paper and give reasonably good results, though the Mix display will require a duplication of the title to get it over. In a good display the title should always be in type to get the best results, even where the title is included in the design. In such a case there should be a mortise for the type, but it should be type, and it should be so prominent that the person who barely glances at the space comes away with the suggestion of the title. Another of Mr. Raleigh's spaces gives a type mortise to Tom Mix jumping his horse from a second story balcony, but the enveloping cut shows him climbing the side of a cliff, though nothing is said in the text about the cliff. Here the chance to clinch the big jump is lost, and nothing is gained through the drawing used, since it is not connected up with the text. Where possible the text should refer to the attractor or the drawing should amplify the text.

A Four Eights That Will Always Come Up Better Than a Reverse Cut.

Needs Cuts, Too.

Harry J. Wendland, who used to be with Ralph Ruffner in Portland, writes that since he was discharged from the service he has been with the T. & D. Theatre, in Sacramento. He sends in some of his displays, adding that often he has little to work with other than "the thin blue air about me." At times this seems to help, for the self-reliant man, thrown upon his own resources, is often able to turn out better work than he would did he have cut material at his command. Take these two displays, for example.

A Pair of Two Tens in which the Attractor Cut Does Not Equal the Straight Display.

That on the right, for "Infatuation" was made up with what the newspaper was able to give him. He had a cut for the other, yet we think that the "Infatuation" display is the better of the two. There is more strength to the stock circle than to the triple cut. The cut means nothing in particular, and it does not catch the eye as does the circle, while we like the manner in which the arrow dash connects the name with the title. There is less type in this display, so the argument is more strongly presented. The display on the right is somewhat diluted by the descriptive matter, which may help sell the story, but which could have been pulled in a little to get a larger display for the name and title. All that follows "Just like a man" could have been put in an eight point, set eighteen or twenty ems, without losing its chance of being read. The "Just like a man" will assure that. The rest can run smaller. This is a point to be remembered in selling talk. If you can get interest with a striking line, the rest does not have to be displayed largely. Another display without a cut is a three sixes. Here the box for the soloist robs the title of the major part of its display value. We think that a box half that size would have worked as well and would have let the main title in with a larger letter. And the title has some selling value of its own. Doubtless the box was used to separate the two titles of a double show, but if this is so, the main purpose would have been as well served with a smaller display. As it is, "When Men Betray" is lost between the name of the star and the panel. There should have been white space above and below the line to isolate it. In the upright rule work we think we should have used a heavier rule for the outside; about a three point. This would have enclosed the space better. The last display shows a pair of two sixes with the reverse cut coming out better than usual. The clippings are from the actual page and not from specially pulled proofs, and yet the black is a dead black, which brings up the white lettering. Very few daily papers give as good presswork as this, and give it so regularly. Here the reverse cut works better than does the portrait, but in a majority of instances the reverse would be true. Mr. Wendland also gets out the publicity for the Strand. On one space he comments, "I haven't much heart for old plays." The old play is one of the Paramount reissues, and we think that it would pay to get interested in them, since most of them represent the cream of former production and should pull hard with those who remember pleasantly their first showing. A good advertising man does not play favorites.

told that five of the seven selected stories were to be seen at the Strand. This was a general news dispatch, but the Strand was on the lookout and saw the advertisement which lay behind the story and picked it right up. It took the cue promptly, and the text tells the argument forcefully. Presumably the best seven pictures of recent release were selected for the use of the President, and the Strand had five of the seven booked, which argues that it offers its patrons about the best to be had. The second space is a three tens giving an idea of their general advertising; a combination of art work and type. The break between the cut and the text is a bit severe. A better design would have given a drop on the sides to work the cut into the type space, but the artist carries out the idea very well, and the cut will help sell the picture—which is the real test. We do not admire the use of a script for the main title. This is one point where the clearest possible type should have been employed, but instead a rather difficult script has been used. It would be both cheaper and more effective to work all of the lettering in type and leave the design to the artist. Type is merely the clearest possible letter, and unless the hand lettering approximates the type its use is costly, and if it does its use is a needless expense. It does not seem to belong in either case.

Quiet in Harrisburg.

Things have been quiet down in Harrisburg, Ill., lately. Steve Farrar has been resting up his opposition, and they have not had a decent scrap for a couple of weeks. Steve even dropped to a single eight for one issue to the other house's three eights. It was his last day with a reissued Hart, and they were coming pretty well, so he dropped down to a single and let the Grand have most of the space. Steve has started to run a Hart series, and he makes it plain that it is reissued and not a new play. It is just as good a play reissued, but he states in all his advertising that this is its second time, and leaves no loophole for a comeback. On the other hand, the Grand is using reissued comedies without qualifying them as reissues, as the Chaplin-Normand comedy shows in the space. But

A One Eight Against a Three Eights from Harrisburg, Ill.

A Three Sixes in Opposition to Two Sevens in Which the Additional Four Inches Makes the Space Look Much Larger.

Steve does not always let the Grand have it all. The second example shows his three sixes against the Grand's two sevens. He had something he wanted to tell about, so he took more space, but he did not splurge. He gets a very good straight make-up, and by going across three columns he gets a much larger showing than the additional four inches would suggest. As a general thing width in an advertisement suggests size rather than length. Always it gives a better display to the main title, unless the title is one short word, and the only objection lies in the length of the small type lines. An eight-point three columns wide is a little too wide. It would be better to make two matched banks of a column and a half each. In the last example, Steve takes the small end again with three sizes against the Grand's three tens, but the Grand advertises two bills in the single space to use up all of the room. Steve does not even use an underline for his following bill. He just rides tight. We don't know what the local editor thinks. He was getting rich off the theatres not long ago.

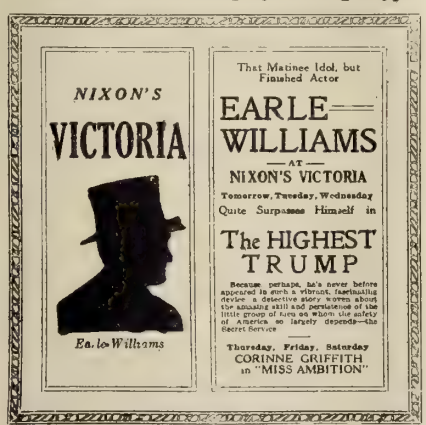
Very Neat.

Here is a pretty space from a recent issue of the Baltimore Sun. It drops only 4¼ inches across two columns, yet it gives ample display, a lot of selling talk and the name of star and play in large type.



A Double Four and a Quarter Which Looms Large on the Page.

More than that, it stands up well on the page because there is plenty of white space in addition to the text. The composition is unusually good, and it is passed along as a suggestion to others. A stock border can be used in place of this specially drawn frame. The essential is the double panel.

Good Revenue.

Some of those towns in southern Illinois must be good places for editors. The Mt. Vernon daily in a recent issue carries 106 column inches for picture theatres and 26 inches additional for a touring show and a basketball event, nearly the entire page being given over to amusements.

A Page from a Southern Illinois Paper Which Is Almost Wholly Given Over to Amusement Advertising.

This is above the average, but the regular daily use of from 20 to 30 inches is not uncommon. The motion picture has been a life-saver to some of the small towns, which in earlier days was fortunate if it got a few inches weekly from the touring combinations. And they are getting a dollar top for "Hearts of the World." Just think of that!

Here's an Idea.

This three sevens from an Indianapolis paper is for a vaudeville house, but the idea can be made just as good if taken on for pictures. The black cut throws the single column white into such relief that it shows better than would the same space taken for type alone. The two parts of the reverse cut can be held over and used more than once, if desired, with the copy changed in the middle space.

As to Increased Amperage and Screen Illumination.

Recently we discussed, at some length, a statement by Wm. Roy Mott, Research Laboratories National Carbon Co., to the effect that increased amperage stabilized the bright spot of the crater and thus increased the screen illumination, although back testing seemed to prove that no further illumination could be had through increase of crater size.

Mr. Mott replies with the following: "Dear Mr. Richardson: You have done me the honor to ascribe to me, in your Feb. 22 issue of the Moving Picture World, a discussion of the reason for increase in light with amperage when crater area exceeds the capacity of the lens system as determined by back testing. The explanation ascribed to yours truly was that 'the brightest portion of the crater becomes more stationary as the current is increased, whereas it wanders considerably at lower amperages.' This explanation is quite right, both as regards slow movements of the arc, but more especially as regards a rotatory movement of the direct current arc with a frequency of two hundred to four hundred times a second. This movement is so rapid that it entirely escapes the eye and can not be seen at all on the screen, as you truly say that at, say, 'eighty amperes the screen brilliancy is, so far as the eye can discern, absolutely constant, yet if we increase the amperage to 100 there is a very decided gain in screen brilliancy.' On this point of increased light with increased current, we have obtained the following data, using our small Silvertip negative lower in the usual sizes recommended for the currents used. Columbia cored uppers were used with the carbons at 25° angle upper and lower. The usual standard lens system was used consisting of 6½" 7½" condensers with one fourth size objective lens.

"The screen candle power was determined with a Scharpe Miller Photometer Lamp standardized by the Bureau of Standards at Washington. The screen was a 7x9 ft. with a 67 ft. throw. The entire purpose was to obtain the per cent. gain in candle power with increase in amperage, using proper size trims corresponding to the amperage.

"Currents increased:

30 to 50 amperes gave 160 per cent. gain in screen candle power.
50 to 70 amperes gave 46 per cent. gain in screen candle power.
70 to 90 amperes gave 18 per cent. gain in screen candle power.
90 to 110 amperes gave 15 per cent. gain in screen candle power.
110 to 130 amperes gave 12.5 per cent. gain in screen candle power.

"This data proves that at high amperages there is a considerable gain in candle power, although by back testing a flat curve would be expected. The reasons for the considerable gain beyond the theoretical is probably, as you say, due to the lens system having a slight additional capacity, although it is my impression that back-testing with a lighted screen source would give a rather flat curve. This leaves the need for accounting for a considerable candle power gain and brings us back to the peculiar nature of the arc and the positive crater in showing on direct current, a steady large power absorption at the positive and a very steady light in regard to crater brilliancy and in regard to a steady white color. This steadiness is so great that several scientists have proposed it as a standard for light intensity and color. However, while the very brightest part of the arc reaches a "maximum brilliancy of the crater which is independent of the current flowing in the arc, yet the average brilliancy of the incandescent portions increased both with the intensity and density of the current, until the crater was well saturated." This condition has been investigated by Blondel, Silvanus P. Thompson and Trotter and many other brilliant scientists. Thompson says (see Cantor Lectures—The Arc Light—page 31, of book published in 1895, London, by William Trounce, 10, Gough Square, Fleet street, E. C.): 'When you project upon the screen by means of a good achromatic lens (such as a camera lens) an image of the arc, and adjust it so as to get a good view of the crater, a little care will enable you to discern, as often as not, somewhere in the middle of the luminous crater, not always exactly in the center—a nebulous patch, sometimes extending in different directions. This patch is more luminous than the surrounding surface of the crater.'

"By a rotating slotted disk at 200 to 400 frequency per second, there is observed a bright spot whirling on the positive crater. This is the important arc phenomenon discovered by Mr. Trotter. (See The Electrician, London, vol. 28, page 607, vol. 29, page 11, vol. 33, page 297).

"In searchlight work, it is found that by crowding current on a small carbon a saturation of brightness of the positive crater takes place. In the same way a projector carbon gives most and best light for projection when the carbon is operating at a current as high as possible, but avoiding bad pencilling (spindling) due to excessive heating back. A projector carbon size should be selected, with say 5 amperes clearance on spindling. Spindling is very small on Columbia carbons. By using Silvertip negatives on direct current a marked gain is obtained in arc steadiness, and this in turn aids a high saturation brightness of the crater surface. The brightest part of the crater surface corresponds to the sublimation point of carbon at atmospheric pressure. This has a temperature of about 3,700 to 4,100° C. depending on what scientist is taken as an authority on the temperature of a positive carbon arc. The sublimation point corresponds to the boiling point and applies to those materials that do not liquify when they vaporize. Carbon does not liquify at arc temperatures. Like the boiling point of water, the temperature of the positive crater reaches a maximum limit which is fixed by the sublimation temperature of carbon. The best way of increasing the intrinsic brightness of a pure carbon crater is to put the arc under great pressure. This has been done by Lummer and he found that the brightness of a positive crater of a carbon arc could be increased eighteen times by operating at 22 atmospheres, the brightness reached was close to the intrinsic brightness of the sun and a temperature of about 6,000° C. instead of 3,700° C. to 4,100° C. of the ordinary carbon arc. These results could easily be predicted because increase in atmospheric pressure raises the temperature of boiling points and sublimation points. Now, if we turn our attention to alternating current, we have a period during which the positive crater is changed to negative crater sixty times a second on alternating current of 60 cycle frequency. The result is that the crater is of smaller size and cooler on the average with alternating current and gives a yellower light.

"The defects of alternating current in wave form and color of light are enormously improved by the use of white A. C. special carbons, which have a bright light giving arc stream adding to the candle power of the crater light. This also improves the arc so that it becomes very steady with very little noise. The flame material allows of the arc starting quicker when the current passes through zero on the instantaneous path of the alternating current. The arc voltage breaks through much quicker because flame material allows the arc to start at a lower arc voltage. All this makes the light of a white A. C. special projector wonderfully better than the neutral old A. C. carbons. The light production of arc stream of a flame arc is illustrated by fig. 2 taken from Child's beautiful work on the instantaneous arc phenomenon when with rotating disks, enabling the arc to be studied in sections corresponding to one hundred thousandth part of a second.

"In regard to the promised articles, we apologize for our delays. Our only excuse is that we were very busy on war work which we believed helped lick the Kaiser. We thank you most kindly in inviting and in commanding us to contribute to your interesting columns. We plan to send you more later.

Yours sincerely,
WM. ROY MOTT,
Research Laboratories,
National Carbon Co., Inc."

Freely granting the truth of all neighbor Mott says, we do not see that it alters the truth of our remarks with regard to this matter. Mr. Mott's letter is both enlightening and interesting. He is an able man in his field, and you may take it from me, there are still much good work to be performed in that field before the projection crater reaches its maximum efficiency. The Sun-lite arc produces a wonderful imitation of sun light. We don't see why the chemicalizing which produces that result in the sun-lite arc cannot be adapted to the projection arc. We have repeatedly said, and do now again say, that it is our opinion that chemicalizing of the carbons has great possibilities. We said this more than six years ago and were promptly sat down on (as nearly as they could perform that function) by the carbon folks. Yet lo and behold, they now have chemicalized their A. C. carbons in such a way as to secure really wonderful results. Let the good work go on, brother Mott. Get busy on the D. C. carbon. There's a g-r-e-a-t B*I*G possibility there.

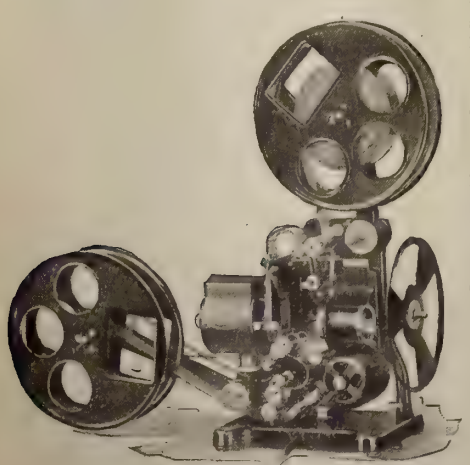
But to get back to our subject. We believe that between our February publication and the receipt of Mr. Mott's present communication, Brother John Griffith has solved the whole problem, as per recent publication in this department. But it was Mott's letter which brought forth Griffith's solution, so there was no lost motion. And verily we are learning very fast—all of us—regarding what actually takes place in the optics of the projector. Yea, verily are we, but there is still very much to learn. Let the good work proceed. Glad to have your contributions, Brother Mott. They are full of meat, even though we feel constrained to take issue with your conclusions occasionally.

New Portable Projector.

The Peerless Projector Co., New York City, is placing on the market a mighty clever little portable mechanism for projecting standard film.

This little projector, when equipped with plain reel arms, as illustrated, (instead of magazines) and folded up for transportation, occupies a space of less than 1 cu. ft. To be exact, its size is thirteen inches long, thirteen inches high, and eight inches wide, and weighs only twenty-three lbs. Within this space is contained the lamphouse, the reel arms, the motor, the revolving shutter, rheostat, current wiring, and all the mechanism. When equipped with detachable magazines, it is about two and a half feet high.

The machine uses either a 14-volt 2-ampere, or 14-volt 4-ampere special argon gas-filled Mazda lamp. The shutter is a three winger, having three equal 45° blades, passing 62½ per cent. of the light.



The intermittent is of the eccentric star and cam type, for which the makers claim very great advantage. The machine equipped with enclosed magazines weighs about twenty-seven lbs. It is capable of projecting upon a modern semi-reflecting screen, an acceptable picture ten feet wide in a dark room. The machine is mechanically well built, and in addition to its utility in the portable projector field, it has great possibilities for film editors.

In the illustration, we see the machine equipped with plain reel arms instead of the magazine reel arms. By unbelting the motor and attaching the crank, the film editor may project his film at very considerable less than normal speed without objectionable flicker, and cut or edit his film with almost the same convenience as on the rewind table.

We would recommend to film editors that they examine into the possibilities of this little projector. In our opinion, they will find that they "need it in their business."

It may be remarked in passing, that by using the 2-ampere lamp consuming only 30 watts, the heat is so slight that the film can be run very slowly indeed, or can even be stopped in the full light, providing the stoppage be of reasonable duration. This is, of course, a very advantageous feature to the film editor.

Another From Vancouver.

R. G. Pollock, Vancouver, sends his views on the point of greatest concentration, as follows:

"Dear Old Friend: In February 22 issue you ask us to sit in on the Kellner-Griffith discussion re proper place to focus image of crater. Thanks, Brother Richardson, for stirring me up. Here am I who have been a consistent reader of the department for six years past and never got shaken out of my hard shell until now. Enclosed find diagram which is, I think, almost self-explanatory. Will, however, add just a few words to make the meaning still more clear. Will try to avoid unnecessary repetition of data already published. Since there is no place at which the crater could be in exact focus, "image of crater" must be taken to mean that plane or position where it is most nearly in focus, which same is shown in diagram at E-F.

"There being two separate optical systems in use, the first being the condenser, with the crater for a light source, which same the condenser projects to the film, and the second the projection lens which uses the film (illuminated by the first light source) as its source of light, which same is projected to the screen. Now the film and screen being at exact conjugate foci points of the second optical system, it follows that whatever conditions obtain at the film must and will be faithfully reproduced at the screen. It therefore becomes of paramount importance that the film be placed at that plane of the condenser light beam where it will receive the greatest amount of evenly distributed, clear, white light, which condition we find to obtain within the boundaries of the rhomboid A B C D in the drawing. The widest part of this cone of white light will be found at line G H (I should have said the vertical section having the greatest area), it therefore follows that at line G H we would not only have the point where we get the purest white light, but also at the point where we can utilize the greates proportion of it, hence get it at the lowest possible cost. If the image of the crater were focused in the objective, or on the back lens of it, to get clear white illumination on the film, hence on the screen, it would be necessary to have a very large, hence extremely wasteful spot at the aperture, without any gain sufficient to compensate for the loss. Glad to see by last World that you are back on the job. Don't cash in your mortal checks until you've paid us at least another visit."

Don't know about the visit thing, friend Pollock, but I'm not going to muss up the inside of a hole in the ground yet awhile. Don't know just how you arrived at the angle of line E F, but it impresses me as being just about the angle the image of a properly trained, well behaved crater would have to the film. But it seems to me the crater image would then be in focus along line E-F. Just how do you get your rhomboid of white light extending from A to C? I'm not disputing, mind you—I'm after information.

There is one feature you all seem to be overlooking, however, viz., the fact that with the crater in exact focus at the film, there is apt to be a white ghost in center of screen, same being the core. It is for that reason I have always advised focusing a bit behind (on condenser side) of the aperture. It seems to me we may safely assume that the point of greatest concentration is where the core of the carbon is in focus, and if that is true, then I would say the point of greatest concentration should be located perhaps one inch back of the film —condenser side.

Unions and Knowledge.

A New York projectionist sends in some verses, clipped from current issue of I. A. Journal and asks: What do you think of this, brother Richardson? The verses read as follows:

A CHANGE OF PLAN.

By Berton Braley.

He'd read all the dope on attending to work,
And toiling to suit your employer;
He knew that to loaf or to laze or to shirk
Was quite an ambition destroyer;
So he plunged into work with a zest and a vim,
And he did more than double his share of it;
He needed a raise, for his wages were slim,
But he knew that the boss would take care of it.

For hadn't the books made this simple and plain—
That people would recognize talent;
That if you would work with your might and main
The boss, with a manner most gallant,
Would give you a raise, though you said not a word,
To show you were worthy of credit;
So he toiled and he sweated, but nothing occurred.
And life didn't go as he read it.

The boss was aware of his merit, all right,
But he said, "Why the deuce should I raise him,
So long as he's willing to work day and night
For what his position now pays him?"
But, weary with waiting, the worker grew wise,
He said to himself, "Why, dod rot it!
These books on success are a bundle of lies"—
So he struck for a raise—and he got it!

As to the "poetry," why I was chiefly surprised that the editor of our journal allowed it space, not that there really is anything wrong with the verses, as such, or with what is probably their real meaning. The trouble lies in the fact that the average, unthinking man will draw the conclusion that faithful service has no value, that knowledge is of no value, and with the further fact that this idea has the indorsement of the Journal editor.

I very much doubt if Braley, writer of the verses, really himself intended to convey the idea that the acquirement of knowledge of one's profession, or trade and the giving of faithful service are undesirable things, and I very well know the Journal editor holds no such views. But that, nevertheless, is exactly the meaning very many will read into those verses, hence their publication in the official journal is decidedly unfortunate.

This department has, times almost without number, advocated faithful service in return for fair recompense, and for that matter, faithful service in any event, because the public and the motion picture industry should not be made to suffer because the projectionist is not paid a fair salary. This department also has, times without number, advocated organization and the adoption of a minimum scale—union scale. It has itself been instrumental in the formation of several unions, and has certainly done its full share in the organization of the men. I. A. organizers have told us the work of the projection department has aided them immensely, making organization very much more easy. We believe thoroughly and completely in organization. We believe in the union minimum (not "wage") scale. We believe firmly and absolutely in forcing exhibitors, if necessary to pay the union minimum scale, which is, however, only to be regarded as a MINIMUM, to be paid to the men of mediocre ability. We believe thoroughly in the projectionist giving efficient, faithful, 24 carat work while he is on the job. We believe absolutely in the projectionist acquiring thorough knowledge of the technical end of his profession, and that increasingly the boss will and DOES recognize talent. If he doesn't, why is it that pretty well all over the country we find a liberal sprinkling of projectionists who receive MORE THAN THE UNION MINIMUM SCALE? Answer me that, Mr. Braley! We have quite some of them right here in New York City. True there is not the recognition to ability there should be, but that is very largely the fault of the various unions themselves, which harp upon the union scale as the beginning and end of everything. Unions deliberately drill into the exhibitor the proposition that the union scale is all that the projectionist wants, instead of letting it be known that it is merely a minimum, and that high class men ought to be paid more.

And do you know the result of this foolish course? Well, I'll tell you. The average man who has ability and brains, studies his business and becomes a high class projectionist, soon finds he is up against a false barrier raised in the mind of exhibitors as regards the union scale. He finds that whereas the scale acts splendidly in raising the men to a certain point, which is far above what they would ever, except in very isolated instances, have gotten without the union, beyond the level of the scale the exhibitor just simply cannot see, because he has had "union scale" drilled into him as a dead level proposition. He finds advancement beyond the scale so difficult that he seeks other, better avenues of money making, and thus the profession is continually bled of its very best men.

High class projectionists in large theatres should, and I firmly believe one day will receive at least $5,000 a year. One hundred dollars a week is indeed small pay for the responsibility of such a position. But you may take it from me as an accepted fact that no such salaries will be paid unless the men make themselves worth that money and then insist on receiving it. Mr. Braley is right in his "Why in the deuce should I raise him, etc.," but the union, while it accomplishes a meagre wage scale, cannot and probably never will accomplish real salaries. That is up to the man himself.

From Denver

Old timers everywhere, and all New York City projectionists will recognize the accompanying picture. Costello is one of the old guard. For years he was active in union affairs in New York City, but poor health finally drove him to the mountains—Denver, where we bespoke for him that which he tells me he received, viz., a cordial reception from the Denver men. For Tom is a good projectionist, and as fine a fellow personally as you will meet anywhere. One of those we love to call "real guys." He is recovered in health, praise be! Wonderful what that old Denver thing does for a feller after the eastern M.D.'s have given a clear ticket to the Hereafter. Instead of dying, according to directions, the darned chumps go to Colorado and—get well.

Tom Costello.

Tom writes interestingly:

"Local 230 presented a new wage scale to Denver managers recently. It was to become effective March 22. Friend Manager, of course, considered this an outrageous thing to do, and trotted out the usual line of somewhat shopworn, but still serviceable arguments. The scale is now in effect. Nuff sed. It calls for 35 beans for Chief Projectionist, and 30 seeds to the second man, with a six and one-half hour day, seven days constituting a week. The members of 230 surely deserve the advance, for they are a progressive bunch, having installed an educational department which is second to none in these United States. The equipment consists of a Power's 6-B, a Simplex, Type S and a Motiograph De Luxe. There is a motor generator set and other electrical appliances. The class in motor and generator repair and maintainance will have brother Lunnon, who holds a responsible position with the Mid West Electric Company, as instructor, assisted by brother Gay White, Chief projectionist of the Rialto and Princess theatres. Brother Ed Shields has mounted the working parts of each machine on a board and will supervise a class in repair work, assisted by brother Kitzman. The latest books on electricity will be found in our well equipped library; also copies of the Moving Picture World, and, of course, Richardson's Handbook, without which it would not be complete. We also intend to get all the questions and answers which have appeared in the Department during the past year. The department will be self-supporting, as a majority of the film concerns will have their films projected at our room. We will also have a film renovating machine and, for the boys' amusement, a pool table. Brother Ed Shields has been appointed by the Colorado State Federation of Labor as an organizer. Realizing that the managers (the real ones, at least) read the department, I cannot, without spilling the beans, say what lines he will follow. Jimmy Dooley, our President, is another live one. He received a wire that Cheyenne had to be re-organized, as the draft had blown all the union men into the military. So Dooley grabbed his toothbrush, took the first train to that city and in one day organized its new bunch of men 100%. And did that satisfy our Jimmy? It did not. He went before the Cheyenne Trades and Labor Assembly that evening and presented to that body a resolution demanding the passage of a city ordinance licensing projectionists, suggesting the City Electrician, the Fire Marshal and one practical projectionist as the examining board. He is since in receipt of advices that the ordinance is on its way to enactment. We also have a boy here who is as well liked by the managers as is Mr. Wm. Hohenzollern by the Yankee Dough Boy, viz., our Business Representative, Bud Graham, who is on the job something less than 22 hours a day. He believes in speaking softly, but in carrying a fair-sized stick. Says the latter is necessary. 'Spect it will be only a short time 'till we'll hear big things about Bud."

Glad to know of that educational department. Remember, however, its not the mere possession of an educational department, but what use you make of it that counts. But I guess 230 will use it, for they're a lively bunch alright. It was 230 that, three years or so ago, got for the editor what must have been the bridal suite in Denver's best hotel, took him up, on arrival in the city, showed it to him and informed him it was to leave his grips in. And it was, too, for we didn't see it again until we went at ten next A. M. to get said grips for departure. Oh, yes, they're a lively bunch alright.

But brother Costello, I don't like to believe the Denver managers hate your business agent or that they are so much opposed to moderate, reasonable wage raises as you suppose they are. Doubtless some of them are, but the live, progressive managers realize, I believe, that your business agent is a perfectly necessary thing, and that were they in your place they would have one too. Of course every manager likes to dream he is running his own business to suit his self. As a matter of fact you and I know he is not. He is running it to suit the public, which is his boss. In fact the poor chap is such a slave to his boss, the public, that naturally he likes to boss some one in return. Why he can't even select the films he likes for his own theatre, has to get those some one else likes—the public. Of course he puts up an argument against increase in wages. Very likely you would too were you a manager who had never been a projectionist. But I think that the Denver manager, taken as a whole, is too good a business man not to realize that increased knowledge and efficiency in his projection room is going to, in the end, be worth all it costs, and that increased knowledge and efficiency is bound to come with increased salaries. And in these days of high cost of loving and living surely $35.00 is not excessive in a city like Denver. But, brother Costello, I say to 230, as I have said to other unions, it is your duty, as intelligent men—as men of honor if you please—to show sufficient advancement to justify the increase in pay you ask for each year, therefore that instruction room looks very good indeed. Put it to active use. My best to all the boys.

FALKENBURG IS ONE CANNY EXHIBITOR

Instead of the Air, Each Lexington Kid with Fifteen Cans Tied to Him Got One Free Ticket

FOR the tenth successive year Exhibitor R. E. Falkenburg, of the Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb., made a big thing of his annual tin-can week, and he reports three definite accomplishments as a result:

1—He cleaned the city of tin cans and made friends with several hundred children.

2—With all the free tickets, his week's total business was ahead of normal.

3—He made every member of the local Women's Club a firm friend.

He "circused" the picture, "Biggest Show on Earth," which he used during the week, utilizing every available billboard in the town. He offered free tickets to children who brought fifteen cans on a wire string, or one seat for an adult for three such strings brought by the children. The freshman, junior and senior classes of the high school were invited separately, under the tin-can conditions; then the west, east and south ward schools in the town were similarly invited, the youngsters coming in a body. The tin-can patrons paid their own war tax, of course.

But Manager Falkenburg raised the admission price on the others to 10 and 25 cents. Many of the children entered on tin-can passes, and their parents paid their own way in.

Speaking of the Women's Club end of the "stunt," he says:

"Now, the Women's Club of the city cooperated with me in this work by having their City Clean-Up Week at the same time as mine, and they advertised my stunt in their notes in the papers. It's an old—old stunt. I have worked it now for over 10 years, I recall, but, believe me, it's better today than 10 years ago, and if any other exhibitor knows of a better stunt to get the Women's Club working for you I sure want to be in on it."

The Knights of Columbus have opened their hall for motion pictures at Humphrey and have put in a Power's 6-A machine, a new booth and a Minusa gold fiber screen. The High School at Beatrice has put in a Power's 6-B machine and a Minusa gold fiber screen. Tom Hammond, of Anthon, Ia., has built a brand new theatre, equipped up to the minute in every respect with Power's equipment, and will open at once. FOUR PITTSBURGH HOUSES RAISE PRICES

The Liberty, Regent, Cameraphone and Alhambra Jack Up Admissions Without Loss of Business

ON MONDAY, May 5, a new schedule of admission prices went into effect in the four big houses of East Liberty, Pittsburgh.

The Liberty and Regent, two of the Rowland and Clark chain; the Cameraphone, owned by H. B. Kester, and the Alhambra, owned by Friedberg and Adler, announced the advance in prices all of the previous week, and to judge by the business done the first week the increase will have no effect on the attendance.

The Pittsburgh district is notoriously cheap in regard to admission prices as compared with most any other section of the country, and the East Liberty exhibitors deserve credit for the move they have made. It behooves the downtown section to get together in the matter of admission prices, as the advanced expenses in every department of the business makes such a move imperative.

Subject: A comedy.

"—Woman sitting on bed, man under the bed." That is to be cut,

"—Cut out part where bear bites the leg of the girl with the checked skirt."

DES MOINES WILL GET TWO NEW HOUSES

A. H. Blank Will Erect One and Hiersteiner Now of the Family Will Manage the Other

DES MOINES will have two large new theatres devoted to vaudeville and pictures. One will be erected by A. H. Blank at Ninth and Locust in the heart of the rapidly westward moving business section. The other is to be built by the Grand Improvement Company on Grand avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets, and adjoining the new Iowa Building and Des Moines Theatre. Work on both houses will be started as soon as the present building strike is off.

The Blank Theatre will be housed in a six or eight story building, the upper floors devoted to offices. The house and building wil represent an outlay of approximately $300,000.

Mr. Blank plans to open his house on or before January 1, 1920. It will have a seating capacity of more than two thousand arranged on two floors, and will be of modern, fireproof construction. Mr. Blank has just returned from New York, where he inspected the Loew and Fox theatres, and on his recent trip to the Coast he looked over the new Pantages houses there.

Five acts of vaudeville and feature pictures, with short reels interspersed, will be the policy. There will be four complete shows daily, and programs will be changed on Sunday and Thursday.

Blank Is a Big Operator.

As representative of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Iowa and Nebraska as well, Blank controls many big pictures, In addition to several state rights features that he is exploiting. In addition, he controls nine other houses in Omaha, Des Moines, Devenport and Marshalltown, and is in position to secure the cream of the market on account of the long consecutive runs he can give any subject.

H. Hiersteiner To Manager Other House.

The other theatre will be managed by Harry Hiersteiner, long a film salesman in Iowa representing Mutual, Universal and Paramount, as well as state rights subjects. He is at present manager of the Family Theatre, and also part owner of that house, which he has built up to a big paying theatre with second and third run features and first-run serials.

Plans call for the last word in modern comfort, safety and commodiousness. Smoking rooms, ladies lounges, a mezzanine floor with every convenience will be provided. The theatre will be part of a nine-story building.

The Strand is a house of 800 seating capacity, strictly modern and one of the most beautiful in Iowa. It was originally opened by Julius and Awe as partners, Awe later buying the interest of Julius.

This purchase, following the announcement that Julius will soon break ground for a new $100,000 theatre indicates that he will be one of the biggest exhibitors in the state. The new house will be ready to open by Jan. 1 or before and will be of more than a thousand seating capacity.

Awe has not announced his future plans. He is said to be considering a trip to the Coast before entering business again.

Julius plans to use the new theatre for big specials for a four days' run or more at advanced admission, to run the Strand at 20 cents admission and to use the Majestic for a more popular-priced policy.

Pathe Has Successful Month.

BRANCH MANAGER STOREY, of the Pathe, states that he has received instructions from New York to completely remodel the branch office. The space has been doubled by the accession of extra rooms vacated by the Equitable.

The month of April was by far the most successful month, both from the point of new business and collections, that the Kansas City office has ever had. In April Mr. Storey completed his first year as manager of the Kansas City branch, and his force took it upon themselves to celebrate the event by an extra spurt of business—a method of celebrating which no manager would object to.

LOEW WILL HAVE A 3,000 SEAT HOUSE

New Theatre Being Planned for Ottawa Will Be Next to the Largest in the Entire Dominion

OFFICIAL announcement has been made at Ottawa that the Loew theatre to be constructed in the Canadian capital will be the second largest theatre in the whole Dominion. This news comes from T. P. Birchall, of Montreal, president of the Loew's Ottawa Company, who visited Ottawa on May 9 to arrange final details for building operations. He announced that 66 additional feet of frontage on Bank street had been purchased, giving a total frontage of 264 feet on the one street and 100 feet on the other street, the site being on a corner.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and is only exceeded in size in Canada by Loew's Montreal Theatre. The structure will contain four commodious stores, and one of the upper floors will be used for an assembly hall with direct communication with the mezzanine floor of the theatre proper. This hall will be utilized for dancing and other purposes.

The Ottawa theatre will have a three-color lighting system similar to that in use in various New York theatres and also in the Regent Theatre, Toronto. With this system it will be possible to produce many color tones and effects to heighten the effect of moving picture features.

Tenders for the construction of the theatre will be called about May 20, and actual work will be started early in June. The expectation is that the house will be opened about December 15. A number of old buildings on the site are now being demolished.

PICO LEASES VICKSBURG OPERA HOUSE

The Chamber of Commerce and the Young Men's Business Association Strongly Indorse Enterprise

L. J. PICO, who for several years has been identified with amusements in Vicksburg, the more recent ones as manager of the Saenger Amusement Company's enterprises in that city, has leased the Walnut Street Opera House, the most pretentious place of amusement in Vicksburg.

The Vicksburg Chamber of Commerce, the Young Men's Business Association, the labor organizations and other business interests have all given the enterprise their endorsement, some of them having passed and published resolutions pledging support and commending the movement. Manager Pico has ample backing, and the business will be conducted under the name of The Palace Amusement Company. English Puts Royal on the Map.

The Royal Theatre, with a seating capacity of 500, which has been closed for some time, was recently reopened by Paul English, an experienced showman, who at once proceeded to put the house on the amusement map. Manager English set about changing this order. He commenced a liberal and vigorous newspaper advertising campaign. He is the first manager outside the Canal street district to use daily advertisements regularly in the newspapers, and the experiment has demonstrated that his judgment is good. The Royal is now playing to capacity audiences and is making money. In addition to a good picture program, Manager English presents vaudeville attractions and the performances are continuous.

The Tulane Has Three Weeks' Run.

"The Turn of the Road," the propaganda health picture approved by the Government, has just closed a remarkable run at the Tulane Theatre, the leading playhouse in the city. The feature was intelligently and properly advertised, but no wild spread was indulged in by the management. The newspapers helped the enterprise consistently and the result was a three weeks' run with the attraction going as strong on the day that it closed as when it opened, and that, too, at prices ranging from one dollar top downward, the balcony being 25 cents and always sold out far in advance. This is considered a remarkable achievement in New Orleans, where the opinion prevails that no picture is good for more than four days. Under the habitual methods of exploitation this has proven to be true, and so long as present methods prevail it is likely to remain so.

This theatre is in a popular neighborhood and will have small opposition. It is the intention of the owners to book their own pictures.

The Brennons Will Build Downtown House.

B. F. and J. P. Brennon, experienced showmen, have purchased three lots in Elysium Fields street, and it is their intention to erect a modern motion picture and vaudeville theatre on the property. The site is near that of the Elysium, recently destroyed by fire, and it is one of the best downtown locations in the city. B. F. Brennon has conducted a booking agency here for several years, and he announces that high-class vaudeville and pictures will constitute the program.

The Ideal Is Reopened.

The Ideal Theatre, which was closed some months ago, has been reopened by Lewis Daurenheim, formerly proprietor of the Elysium Theatre, which was recently destroyed by fire. The Ideal is a very good theatre with a seating capacity of about 900 and is located in a good neighborhood in the uptown district. Its nearest competitor is the Fern Theatre, which is doing a fine business. Another near competitor is the Fine Arts Theatre, a Saenger Amusement Company affiliation.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

B. P. Fineman Becomes a State Right Distributor

B P. FINEMAN announced this week that he had resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to enter the field as a distributor of motion pictures through the state rights exchanges. Offices have been opened in the Fitzgerald Bldg., and an organization is being formed to market features that are of sufficient merit to warrant their being exploited as special productions.

Mr. Fineman has made a careful study of the methods used by the successful exhibitors in the exploitation of their attractions, and states:

"I am in the market for big pictures. The throwing open of the industry by the almost unanimous adoption of the open booking policy by the big distributing concerns has created a new field for the independent producers and distributor. The big theatres will be able to avail themselves of exceptional pictures. That is the type of production I am going to distribute, and am in a position financially to handle the most elaborate productions. As a matter of fact, that is the only type of picture I am interested in—the big special production.

"Exploitation for the exhibitor of the pictures I distribute will be a feature of my business. I believe that there are almost limitless possibilities along these lines, and am going to see that the fullest advantage is taken of them."

Mr. Fineman recently returned to New York after active service in the U. S. Army, as an officer in the Tank Corps. Before his entering the service, he was a member of the Famous Players-Lasky organization and was immediately re-engaged on his arrival by that company, and was promoted just prior to his determination to go into business for himself.

Sherrill Tells of Making Frohman Short Subjects

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation has just returned to New York after a three months' trip to the company's Los Angeles studios, where the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns and Mack Swain single reel comedies are being produced.

In speaking of these productions, Mr. Sherrill states that in these short length productions, his company will give the public something altogether new and original. "I travelled with the company to every location and went over every scene in advance with the director, and when I say I supervised the making of the first four Westerns and three comedies," says Mr. Sherrill, "I mean not a foot of film was turned out unless the work from every angle was perfect in advance.

"Once having made up my mind to embark on shorter length attractions, I felt the reputation of the Frohman Amusement Corporation would suffer unless these productions were constructed along the lines of features. All of the stories were written for five or six reel productions and have been contracted to fit a two reel length, and one can readily imagine the action must be fast in order to do this.

"My judgment as to the demand for meritorious one and two-reel pictures seems to have been sustained. More than seventy per cent. of the entire world has been sold on the Westerns and comedies without a cancellation clause in any contract, and with a substantial deposit, without the showing of a foot of film.

"In the making of short length subjects it is not to be assumed that I have abandoned the production of features. This company will continue to turn out larger attractions, and the subject of the next seven reel picture has already been chosen.

"Conditions in the state rights market have arrived at just that stage which I predicted just a year ago. The motion picture is gradually, yet surely coming to where, as in any other line, the buyer will pay only for what he approves of in advance and exploit only those productions he is permitted to choose."

Arrow Reports Continued Activity.

The Arrow Film Corporation reports continued activity in the state rights market. Since this firm has moved into its new offices, business has shown a decided increase. "The Masked Rider," the fifteen episode Western serial handled by Arrow, is selling fast. This serial stars Ruth Stonehouse, Paul Panzer and Harry C. Myers. It is said to be full of action and stunts, and has just been finished. William Steiner produced this serial near San Antonio, where the scenery is well suited for this kind of a picture.

Announcement Trailers Designed for S-L Film

THE executives of S-L Pictures, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, announce that in place of the slides ordinarily used to herald the coming of a feature attraction, they have prepared film trailers.

These trailers will carry the main title introducing the star E. K. Lincoln, and the director, Ralph Ince, together with flashes of a few of the biggest scenes in the production and the announcement that "Virtuous Men" is coming to the theatre the following week.

The S-L organization is of the opinion that this method of advertising will prove more efficient than the slides, and the scheme is endorsed by various buyers who have secured territory.

These announcement trailers are but one of the unique presentation aids designed to assist exhibitors in the exploitation of this production.

Rights to "Confession" Secured for Walthall

THE film rights to the stage play "Confession," by Hal Reid, have been purchased by the Pioneer Film Corporation for the National Film Corporation of America. The production will be included in the six specials which are being made for Pioneer with Henry B. Walthall as the star.

Isidor Bernstein, general manager of the National, states he has engaged William H. Clifford to write the script in association with Franklyn Hall, who prepared the scenario for "The Boomerang" and "The Long Arm of Mannister."

Smiling Billy Parsons, president of the National, says: "We intend to put our best foot forward, and if 'Confession' don't prove to be the greatest picture dramatically that ever hit the country, I am going to retire from the picture business forever."

"Confession," for several years, played in New York and on the road with Theodore Roberts and Orrin Johnson as co-stars.

Film Market Reports Sales

ROBERT W. PRIEST, president of Film Market, Inc., announces the sale of "The Spoilers" to the Motion Picture Products, Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana; "The Natural Law" to Walter A. Baier, of Milwaukee, for Wisconsin; "Zongar, the Daredevil of Romance" to Columbus Film Company, for Mexico, West Indies and Central America; "The Still Alarm" and "Persuasive Peggy," to Gonzola Varela S & C, for Mexico, San Salvador and Guatemaula, and "A House Divided," the latest Blackton production, to Independent Sales Corporation, for the United States and Canada.

Gaumont Will Feature Trans-Atlantic Flights

THE GAUMONT COMPANY will be kept in close touch with actual happenings connected with the first attempt to cross the Atlantic through the air, and furnish information to the public through the News and Graphic. An expert corps of cameramen has been sent to Newfoundland, some by rail and others by water, and are stationed at advantgeous points so that they will cover not only the flight of the three N-C seaplanes of the U. S. Navy, but also the three British planes, including the big Handley-Page, which has just arrived from England.

The big "hop-off" of the three American seaplanes from Rockaway Point, Long Island, on the first leg of the flight, to Halifax, Nova Scotia, is shown in Gaumont Graphic No. 59, with the full personnel of officers who are expected to add additional glory to American history. Gaumont cameramen had preceded the planes to Trepassey Bay, Newfoundland, to photograph their arrival there, and final preparations for the long flight to the Azores.

Other Gaumont cameramen will picture the arrival of these pioneer aircraft in Europe, and the happenings en route.

Southard Brown Handling Publicity for Pioneer

THE Pioneer Film Corporation announces that in line with the policy of expansion adopted by M. H. Hoffman since he became general manager, Southard Brown has been placed in charge of the publicity department under the general direction of Mr. Hoffman.

Mr. Brown is known to the film trade for his work as chief of staff to the late Benjamin Chapin in the production and marketing of the "Son of Democracy series," having had considerable experience in the manufacturing and exploitation of films.

The publicity activities of Pioneer are to be carried out upon a large scale in placing before the public the productions distributed by this company. Already a poster campaign on "Virtuous Sinners," in which Wanda Hawley is starred, is under way. This will be followed by similar campaigns on "The Boomerang," "Sins of the Children" and "The Long Arm of Manister."

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, of S-L Pictures, has returned to New York after a trip in the interests of "Virtuous Men," during which he visited several cities in Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, as well as quite a number of the states in the Far West.

He reports that in all the territories where this production has been sold to state rights buyers, it is meeting with great success. In Columbus, O., where it opened on May 11, at the Grand Theatre to record breaking business, W. D. Harris, manager of the theatre, reports: "With unfavorable weather conditions prevailing today, against perfect weather last Sunday, cash receipts for the first showing of 'Virtuous Men' were twice as large at three P. M. as they were at the closing house last Sunday. Street lined on both sides with autos and crowd is lined up at box office, while every one of the fifteen hundred seats in theatre is occupied. Picture making a tremendous hit."

Mr. Sawyer found that Arthur S. Hyman, who is handling the production for Indiana, Illinois and Michigan has received an unusual number of first run bookings from leading exhibitors and plans to send several companies out with "Virtuous Men" as road shows during the summer. H. C. Simeral, handling western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, announces he is booking the picture in the leading theatres in his territory, and exhibitors are enthusiastic in their praise of the production.

During his tour, Mr. Sawyer completed arrangements with several buyers of the picture to supply them with reproductions of the oil paintings by Clarence F. Underwood and Gustave Michelson, which show scenes from the production and will be rented to exhibitors at a nominal cost, for lobby display. In many cities he found exhibitors will present "Virtuous Men" at increased admission prices for week runs or longer.

Other members of the S-L sales force have been on tour in connection with the picture. Bert Lubin has just returned from a tour of the Northwest, while Bert Ennis is at present in New Haven, preparing for the opening of this production at Poli's Palace Theatre, commencing May 19 and conducting an extensive newspaper, billboard and street campaign in connection with the run of the picture.

Several More Exchanges Handling "Carter Case"

DURING the past week several other exchanges were added to the list of those that are distributing "The Carter Case," the fifteen episode Craig Kennedy serial, produced by Oliver Films, Inc., and featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh. The arrangements with the exchanges were completed by Harry Grossman, vice-president and general manager of the company, who is now on a tour to the Coast in the interest of "The Carter Case" and future productions of the company.

The serial has been placed with the Supreme System, Inc., of Minneapolis, for Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota, also with the Crescent Film Exchange for the Kansas City territory. The St. Louis territory is also being arranged for, and the name of the exchange will be announced shortly.

I. Oliver, president of the company, states that he is receiving enthusiastic reports from Mr. Grossman on the success and popularity of the serial along the line of his travels. The Celebrated Players Corporation, of Chicago, are making unprecedented bookings for a serial production and both the Ascher Bros. and Lubliner and Trinz Circuits are meeting with remarkable success with "The Carter Case."

New York bookings continue to increase, the Pioneer Film Corporation reporting tremendous popularity of the serial in hundreds of theatres in Greater New York and throughout its territory.

Mr. Oliver states that enthusiastic reports are coming in from all of the exchanges. The Arrow Film Exchange, of Philadelphia, has prepared an extensive advertising campaign covering the entire territory under its control and reports bookings are coming in at a high rate with heavy popularity being registered in the theatres. In the Southern Territory the Criterion Film Service, of Atlanta, has booked the serial broadcast with prospects for a new record for a chapter picture in the number of theatres played.

Similar reports have been received from Samuel Grand, Boston; Day Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Super Film Attractions, Inc., Washington; Mid-West Distributing Company, Milwaukee, and Sterling Film Corporation, Omaha.

The highest hopes of the company have been realized, says Mr. Oliver, and the success and popularity of the first output of his concern is fully up to his anticipations.

Frohman Contracts for Lithos

J V. RITCHEY, president of the Ritchey Lithographing Corporation, has closed a contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation to make the posters on the twenty-six two-reel Westerns and the twenty-six single reel Mack Swain Comedies. Each series to be released at the rate of one production every two weeks. Prior to placing the order, the Frohman Amusement Corporation submitted still photographs of scenes from their first four releases to several lithographic concerns and awarded the contract, not on a competition of price, but on the color drawings or sketches submitted. It was stated at the offices of the Frohman Amusement Corporation that the order for one, three and six sheets on the Westerns and comedies involves the making of 725,000 sheets of paper.

AMERICAN PICTURES ENTRENCHED THROUGHOUT THE FOREIGN FIELD

Audiences Demand Them on All Programs, and Distributors and Exhibitors Find It Profitable to Provide Them

BRIGHT FUTURE SEEMS ASSURED

David P. Howells, Just Back from Europe, Brings Interesting Report on Conditions Abroad in Their Relation to This Country's Photoplay Product—Theatre Building Boom Expected—Foreign Producers Timid.

David P. Howells, well known American exporter and president of the Film Exporters' Association of America, returned from Europe some days ago after a three months' business trip. During his absence abroad Mr. Howells visited London and other important cities of the British Isles as well as Paris. Arrangements which he was engaged in making for the furtherance of his own business interests made Mr. Howells particularly keen in his observation of general moving picture conditions abroad, and the impressions he brought back to this country are of genuine interest to film men everywhere.

That the greatest development of the business of exporting American-made moving pictures has taken place incident to the World War, which is just about a thing of the past, makes the future of the American-made moving picture in the foreign market the subject of greatest interest in this country. American-made pictures have been flooding the foreign markets for the past three or four years. Because the production of moving pictures in England, France, Italy, and other countries that formerly bid for the international trade had been practically at a standstill, it has been at least a reasonable conclusion that American-made moving pictures owe a large measure of their popularity to the fact that no other pictures were available.

Exporters' in this country, discussing the future of the American picture, figuring the competition which must be met when conditions return to normal, generally agree that the American-made moving picture is in the foreign market to stay, but that "things are not going to be so easy." There has been talk of a constantly growing jealousy between European producers whose output formerly dominated the international market and American producers who have grasped the plum within the past three years. There has been more talk of the vast difference in business methods practiced by American producers and European producers in their relations with prospective customers. Mr. Howell's opinions dealing with this big question seem sound and are hopeful and illuminating.

REAL DEMAND EXISTS FOR AMERICAN PICTURES.

"It will be easily understood," says Mr. Howells, "that everywhere I went I found American-made moving pictures. Throughout the British Isles and France, American features form the backbone of every picture program. As I sat in theatres in London, Glasgow, Dublin, Paris, and other important cities the conviction was forced home that the strength of the American picture today—no matter what it may have been in the early days of the war, when there was a mad rush for our photoplays as the only ones available to keep the theatres open—lies in the fact that the picture theatre patron everywhere has developed a fondness for the kind of screen product we turn out and will never be satisfied with something which does not equal it in story, production, and general style.

"Without the slightest suggestion that there may exist among foreign exhibitors and distributors the inclination to turn the cold shoulder to a 'foreign invader' which has grown to alarming strength, I am expressing the opinion that American-made moving pictures are in the theatres abroad because the man who pays at the box office insists that they dominate his picture programs and not because of any academic personal thought on the part of the man who is making the film selections. If this is true, then the future of the American-made moving picture in the foreign field is assured. American pictures will never be less popular. The development of the moving picture art in this country has been more rapid than in any other country and there is no reason to believe that its development here will be surpassed in the future."

The possibility of their being imposed upon American-made moving pictures entering the foreign markets—particularly England and France—extra tariffs and import duties has been discussed in foreign moving picture trade papers. Mr. Howells says that he found nothing alarming in any plans which may be contemplated abroad. "In all likelihood there will be additional tariffs and duties," the American exporter remarked, "but I am satisfied that if these duties are levied they will be for revenue only and with no thought on the part of the governments imposing them of closing the markets to American-made pictures. This means that the duties and restrictions are likely to be reasonable."

THEATRE BUILDING BOOM WILL INCREASE BUSINESS.

Mr. Howells found the moving picture business splendid in all of the cities which he visited. "Things are humming in the important centers," he said. "The masses—which are the backbone of the picture business in any country—have plenty of money to spend. If there is any particular drawback to the business at this particular time it probably is the scarcity of the right kind of theatres. As you know, there has been absolutely no theatre—nor unessential—construction since 1914. This means that the existing theatres are not only inadequate in numbers, but also poorly adapted for the kind of moving picture presentations which have become popular during the past few years. One of the biggest promises for the future lies in the fact that there will unquestionably be a big theatre building boom in England and France just as soon as governmental restrictions are removed. Amusement men see the need of the new theatres and are not only anxious to build them, but have ample funds to carry out their plans."

FOREIGN PRODUCTION WILL START TIMIDLY.

The situation in Europe as regards future activities of European producers is of interest. Mr. Howells says: "There is considerable talk of the European producers' getting busy. Information of a really definite nature is hard to secure, however. In a rather curious manner, the popularity of the American-made picture affects these plans for production on the other side. I may say right here that there are only two grades of American-made pictures which are in real demand in Europe. What is wanted most are real big pictures—big in story, and big in production.

"These pictures have been getting the money, and European distributors will buy all of them they can get their hands on. The so-called 'average' picture—of the kind that are to be found on some of our best programs in this country—interests the foreign buyer but little. If he cannot have the real big ones for which he is willing to pay a regular price, he wants the unimportant ones—which he can buy for a song—in order that he may clean up a profit through intensive booking—and some foreign distributors can give their American brothers cards and spades and still beat them when it comes to getting the last penny's rental out of a subject.

"Inasmuch as it has been the success of the real big pictures that has excited the cupidity of the European producer, the high standard set by American pictures is making him timid about entering the producing list in competition. High class moving pictures of the type turned out in this country cannot be made anywhere without the expenditure of a lot of money—and it is pretty generally conceded that Americans excel in the ability to spend money with real abandon. American money, too, has already lured from their native heaths many of the worthwhile artists and artisans in the moving picture industry, with the result that those who remain do not provide the most desirable foundation upon which to rear a production structure calculated to outshine American pictures."

Mr. Howells says that during his visit abroad he spent considerable time in attempting to locate foreign-made productions which might be available for the American market—and with but little success. The one English-made picture which appealed to him was "The Elder Mrs. Blossom," released by the Sun Exclusives. This picture, by the way, has been secured by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for American distribution.

HOWELLS OFFICES IN LONDON AND PARIS.

Mr. Howells' definite purpose in going abroad was to establish branch offices in London and Paris. When he left Paris to return to New York he had not finally arranged for personal representation in the French capital and it is his purpose to return to Paris in the near future to open offices and select a representative. Mrs. Howells, who accompanied her husband on his business trip, did not come home with him and is still in Paris, awaiting the return of her husband on his second trans-Atlantic jaunt. In London, Harry R. Smith, one-time manager of the Edison moving picture interests throughout the United Kingdom and more recently with the Motion Picture Sales Co., has been appointed Mr. Howells' representative with offices at No. 29 Charing Cross Road. Mr. Smith has just completed a term of service in the British Army.

The most important business deal closed by Mr. Howells during his sojourn on the other side was the sale of the Anita Stewart pictures to Jury's Imperial Pictures. As the result of this deal all of the Stewart releases on the First National program will be placed in about forty of the most important theatres throughout the British Isles which are booked and operated by Sir William Jury and his associates. Other sales of product which Mr. Howells has for export were made to Ideal Films, Ltd., and to Mundus Film Co., of Paris.

During his visit on the other side, Mr. Howells fraternized in person with Walturdaw, Ltd., of London, and the Mundus Film Company, of Paris, with whom he has been doing business for some time. These concerns control the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchises for Great Britain and France, respectively.

NICHOLAS POWER AGENT BACK FROM EXTENDED TRIP

Arthur J. Lang Found Moving Picture Business Booming in Latin-America, with American Pictures Greatly in Demand—Warns of Organized European Propaganda to Recover Trade.

Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, arrived in New York April 7 by steamship direct from Buenos Aires. Mr. Lang made an extensive tour throughout Central America during the past year studying moving picture conditions generally and more particularly devoting his time to the establishment of agents for the sale of Power's cameragraphs.

Arthur J. Lang.

In response to the inquiry as to the general acceptance of American film in South America, Mr. Lang stated that the American productions have dislodged European films, and that the public as well as the exhibitors are enthusiastic admirers of a great many American stars whose popularity in South America is equally as great as their fame at home.

Mr. Lang stated further that there seems to be no system employed in the exploitation of film. He criticised the method employed by some of the exporters, claiming that loss of business resulted through delays, incorrect translation of titles from English into Spanish, lack of judgment as to film suitable for Latin-American exhibition and other causes of similar seriousness.

Mr. Lang expressed the belief that the American film predominance in Latin-America will remain providing the film producers immediately take steps to meet the actual propaganda of European producers launched since the signing of the armistice. Mr. Lang furthermore strongly criticised the manner in which films are advertised. He spoke at length on this subject, and claims he cannot understand why moving picture producers who occupy such great space in the domestic editions of motion picture journals give their foreign advertising such scant attention. The films are well known here and so are the artists, but should the same class and quantity of advertising be employed in the new markets as at home, no fear need be felt as to the outcome of the present strenuous propaganda on the part of European producers mentioned above. We were pleased to learn through Mr. Lang that American moving picture magazines are widely read in Latin-America and that Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World, is the best known and easily the most popular of all these magazines in Latin-America.

Mr. Lang concluded by stating that his trip was very successful and we know that before his trip Power's cameragraph was not known to any great extent in at least Argentina and Chile, whereas today it is doubtful if there is any other machine so extensively advertised and used.

Interesting Figures on Argentine Trade

Mr. Lang brought back with him a manuscript which contains some unusually interesting information concerning moving picture conditions in Argentina. The manuscript, which embodies some specific figures, was prepared by an Argentinian moving picture man who is conceded to be an authority on his subject and is published herewith without comment:

There are about eight hundred moving picture theatres in Argentina in which are shown films that are imported by the leasing houses. This figure gives a total of ten moving picture theatres for each million inhabitants, and shows the development of the silent art in that country.

During 1918 there were imported into Argentina about 5,760,594 feet of film, distributed as follows:

Fox	281,250
Sud-Americana	1,125,000
Norte-Americana	462,500
Sociedad General	825,000
Max Glucksmann	2,750,000
Other companies	316,844

The total amount taken in at the box office through the importation of this material, has been as follows, in United States currency:

Fox	$67,850
Sud-Americana	228,340
Norte-Americana	103,550
Sociedad General	178,975
Max Glucksmann	376,425
Other companies	83,250
	$1,038,390

What the producers of the above films charged for the export rights amounted to $235,620, that is, 25 per cent. of the total receipts from the exhibition of the films.

But there is something more extraordinary still: The amount taken in for the exhibition of the films would have been even greater had it not been for the tremendous competition there is among the producers, and which in the first place is detrimental to the moving picture trade in its main aspect, and, second, discredits to a great extent the world's production of some makes of films that the Argentine public prefers.

In the federal capital alone, there are 115 moving picture theatres, from which 35 must be deducted, and in which only Max Glucksmann's pictures are shown. Another twenty-five theatres are supplied by the Sociedad General, and the rest, by the other companies. The result of this individual competition is, that films of well known makes that could be exploited at bigger profit, only get part of the benefit that otherwise would readily go to them.

On the other hand, in order to draw the public, they offer to exhibit first class pictures at cheap price. For instance, you can see every day Hart or Mary Pickford at any of the ordinary moving picture theatres for ten cents, that is, two exhibitions per day, afternoon and evening.

The afternoon program is divided into five parts, and four are given at night. The picture that is released for the first time in the afternoon and is shown again in the evening; therefore, there are two daily shows of the same picture.

The so-called "Super-Productions" are shown for the account of the leasing house, who fixes the prices of admission for the respective exhibitions and collects 50 per cent. of the gross receipts. We mention herein some examples of such productions:

"The Daughter of the Gods" took in $27,500 and cost $4,500.

"What My Eyes Saw" ("Lest We Forget") took in $11,250 and cost $960.

"My Four Years in Germany" took in $14,850 and cost $5,000.

"The Kaiser" took in $11,000 and cost $850.

The exhibition of these films is still going on and, of course, the profits are also going up.

Handsome Offers Had to Be Turned Down

The success of the new Nazimova pictures, which are being made by Richard Rowland and Max Karger for release through the Metro Pictures Corporation, has been exciting much comment throughout the moving picture industry for months. It is conceded that, in the hands of her present producers, Mme. Nazimova has developed a screen strength which makes her easily one of the foremost stars before the picture going public not only in this country but throughout the world

Striking proof of the popularity of the new series of pictures has been given in New York during the past couple of weeks in the offices of the Export & Import Film Co., Inc. The Export & Import people have the Nazimova pictures for Continental Europe and Latin America, and when the latest subject, "The Red Lantern," was shown at the Rivoli Theatre to tremendous business they were besieged in person and by cable with handsome offers for this and future pictures by the same star. Lou Auerbach, who is directing the business of the firm while Ben Blumenthal is in Europe, complains that he was unable to acceptany of the offers because the territories controlled had long since been sold.

BARNSTYN, HAGUE FILM MAN, USING PROGRESSIVE METHODS

Big Holland Operator Now Here Buying American-Made Moving Pictures Looks for Era of Great Prosperity Throughout Europe—Modern Offices in His Home City.

Because he plans to reach every country in Europe with his films, and because he believes that the films to accomplish this must be of American make, J. C. Barnstyn, director of the British and Continental Trading Company, with headquarters at The Hague, Holland, arrived in New York, this week, on "important business." In addition to his British and Continental Company duties, Mr. Barnstyn is the sole buying agent of the H. A. P. Film Company, of Holland, which supplies film programs to one hundred and forty of the two hundred and twenty-five motion picture theatres in the Land of Dikes.

The H. A. P. are "renters"—what we in America would call an exchange—and the exclusive distributors of World, Triangle, Keystone, Christie Comedies and other well-known American film productions in Holland. It is expected that the plans now maturing will enable Mr. Barnstyn and his associates to cover the entire continent of Europe, exclusive of the British Isles, as thoroughly as they now do their native Holland.

"We will immediately extend our operations to Belgium, France and Italy," said Mr. Barnstyn, when seen at Inter-Ocean Building, "and eventually cover the Continent with American pictures. I am here to get a close-up view of the producing conditions on this side. I shall remain on this side until middle August, when I return to The Hague, but I will be back in October for a stay of at least a year.

PICTURE BUSINESS GOOD DESPITE ECONOMIC UNREST.

Mr. Barnstyn declared that while there was considerable unrest in Europe, picture conditions were good. He said that unemployment was an evil, but that it had not especially affected the cinemas, as the masses had the small admission fee for moving pictures, although they often lacked the means to attend the theatres producing legitimate attractions. Having plenty of time on their hands, the cinemas got their patronage.

"Of course," the visitor explained, "we profited from the prosperity that all countries knew in war time, but when conditions become settled—as they surely will—our cinemas will know a prosperity that shall surpass that of war time, for the reason that it will not be a forced one. You see, in dealing with the unemployment problem in Europe, it has been decided everywhere to cut down the working hours of the individual worker, so that there will be more employment for the workers as a whole.

"This will give the masses more leisure time, and that leisure will largely be spent in the cinema—which is today established in Europe as the great entertainment of the common people."

Mr. Barnstyn said that in Holland the "classes" had also become attendants at the cinemas, due to the showing on the screen of events in the terrible conflict that was raging so close to them. He did not believe that Bolshevism would get any hold on the Continent beyond those countries in which it had already lodged. "But even in these countries," he states, "the masses must have entertainment and that means they must have American films.

BARNSTYN'S HOLLAND OFFICES ARE REMARKABLY APPOINTED.

Mr. Barnstyn's rental business at The Hague is today a local institution, utilizing an entire building and boasting forty-five separate offices. There is a hundred-seat projection room and—what is quite unknown in film exchanges in this country—a private bath and buffet for visiting exhibitors, together with three guest-rooms for such of the latter as may desire to stay at The Hague over night. Film men from this side who called upon Mr. Barnstyn at home told him that they considered his office systems in connection with film renting, as good if not better than systems of the same nature here.

The visitor admits that it was not always thus with his Dutch business. When he started four and a half years ago, he rented a small building near the present one, which the firm owns outright. He had five employes, whereas today there is a staff of sixty. His first American films were purchased through Inter-Ocean and the late Henr J. Brock, of that firm, was the first American film man with whom Mr. Barnstyn did business. Gus S. Schlesinger, of Inter-Ocean, who attended to Mr. Barnstyn's first purchases, is still with Inter-Ocean and is again assisting Mr. Barnstyn in the selection of pictures from the American field.

Mr. Barnstyn is making his temporary headquarters at the Inter-Ocean Building, 218 West Forty-second street, until he finds quarters in the Manhattan film district for a permanent American buying office. He is residing at the Hotel Astor.

Brockliss Co. Gets Mack Swain Comedies

Announcement is made by the Frohman Amusement Company that Sidney Garrett, of the J. Frank Brockliss Company, has secured the entire foreign rights on the series of twenty-six Mack Swain comedies at what is said to be the highest figure ever paid for foreign rights to single reel productions.

It is further announced that Mr. Garrett purchased the rights on this series without witnessing the screening of any of the productions, his decision being based on Mack Swain's reputation as a screen comedian.

"DRUMMING" WITH FILM LINE

Horace G. Clarke, Traveling the Far East for Howells, Sends Interesting Picture.

Horace G. Clarke, who represents the David P. Howells' picture interests in the Far East, is just completing an extended tour of the Orient upon which he set out from New York some months ago. Mr. Clarke's headquarters are in Sydney, Australia, but, after having completed his tour of the Orient, he will remain in Sydney only a short time before sailing for the United States to report again at the Howells offices in New York.

To Mr. Clarke and Mr. Howells the International Section is indebted for the interesting photographs which are herewith reproduced. The first picture shows a portion of Mr. Clarke's display in the interest of his wares in one of the big hotels in the Orient. One does not usually think of a film salesman unpacking a sample kit and "laying out his line" for the inspection of prospective buyers, after the fashion of the dyed-in-the-wool "drummer," but it seems to be good form in the Far East.

The picture at the left in the panel gives a good idea of the new moving picture theatre just being completed by the Southern Palace Cinema Company at Canton, China, and shows that there is developing in the land of the "Heathen Chinese" considerable stability in the picture business. The same operating company have already announced that they will begin the erection of another theatre along similar lines in the very near future.

AUSTRALIA FIGHTS NEW CENSORSHIP

Sydney Churchgoers Want Special Performances for Children and Exhibitors Scent Danger

CABINET MEMBER WILL DECIDE

Showmen at Hearing Call Attention to Many Restrictions with Which Industry Is Already Burdened—Objectors' Contentions Are the Usual Ones.

SYDNEY, Australia, Mar. 11.—A certain section of Sydney churchgoers has asked the Government to provide that there shall be special matinees for children. This matter engaged the attention of the leading film exchange men and picture showmen. A deputation representing their views waited today upon the Chief Secretary, the Minister in charge of the regulation of amusements.

The Minister pointed out that even if the people complaining as to children attending all the picture sessions might be in a minority, every citizen of the State had a right to express his views and have them considered.

The showmen urged that already there was sufficient censorship of films. These were examined in the United Kingdom and New York, once more by the Federal Government on arrival in Australia, and finally by a State board of censors in New South Wales. They considered that the present censorship already erred on the side of over-strictness. Futher, the parents would take care that nothing likely to affect injuriously the morals of the young should be exhibited. A majority of parents were of opinion that the motion picture was the strongest educational force ever brought to bear on the youthful mind. It brightened the child's faculties and always impressed a good moral. The Australian race would greatly benefit by the knowledge secured through this medium.

Already the Government had recognized the value of motion picture instruction. An objection existed that the pictures would be exhibited in darkness. This, in the schools, would mean poor ventilation. With the advent of the daylight motion picture screen, however, the introduction of the scheme throughout the State might be looked for. It was also pointed out that in contrast with the study of classic works, which often formed part of the curriculum of the older scholars, no motion picture displayed the triumph of evil. No vile-minded man ever screened won out in the pictured battle of life. The general public of Australia was a clean-minded one. It was a pleasure-loving people assuredly, but if any picture showman pandered to the evil tendencies in human nature his collapse would be sudden and final.

The Minister has the matter under consideration.

German Protest Causes Change in Big Feature

Cable advices by the Press Publishing Company to the New York Evening World, under London date of May 14, recount that a protest against certain scenes in an American-made moving picture, entitled "We Shall Never Forget," lodged by the German consul in Geneva, Switzerland, have been upheld. The moving picture export trade throughout the world is particularly interested in this information because of its possible bearing upon moving picture conditions in general after the peace treaties have been signed and, nominally at least, all the countries which have been at war with Germany, have become friendly countries.

The cable says that "We Shall Never Forget"—which is quite evidently the Rita Jolivet feature, "Lest We Forget"—was being shown in a moving picture theatre in Geneva, when certain scenes dealing with the sinking of the Lusitania, on which Miss Jolivet had been a passenger, attracted the attention of the German consular representatives as well as German residents in the big Swiss city. A formal protest was lodged with the Geneva authorities, and as a result the manager of the moving picture theatre, in which the feature was being shown, cut out portions of the picture, including the Lusitania incident.

Arthur Levey Off for Europe.

Arthur Levey, general manager of the recently formed World Wide Film Exporting Co., was scheduled to sail Saturday, May 17, for Europe in the interest of the firm he represents. He expects to return to New York in about sixty days. During Mr. Levey's absence the New York office of the company in the Brokaw building will be in charge of Mr. Klein, who is associated with Mr. Levey in the business.

Met Himself Coming Back

One of our foremost producing and exporting houses prides itself on "its wonderful efficiency methods of foreign distribution," and it must be admitted that the export manager of the firm has virtually no peer in New York and its brands are exhibited wherever films can be sold at present.

This producing company closed a deal about seven months ago with an exchange in Brazil, but the war was on, the army had its censorship, so had the navy, so had the Committee on Public Information—or whatever Mr. Creel wishes to call it—and the film business, in a word, was entangled in a mass of red tape. As a result, the shipments of the firm in question to the Brazilian renter were still at the Custom House two months after the armistice was signed.

At this stage, when the foreign house had almost given up all hope of securing the film contracted for, it received a circular from the New York producer —which, by the way, had been sent broadcast to all other local distributors —stating that "in view of the fact that our contract is about to expire, we shall be glad to entertain offers on our next year's output."

The rage and astonishment of the foreign customer can be easily imagined.

This is a case where less efficiency and a little more common sense would have given better results.

The Power of Babel

The translators are at it again.

Here are some of the latest tit-bits:

"The Woman on the Index" was rendered into Spanish as "The Woman on the Indexes." What reasons the translator had for pluralizing in this case are beyond comprehension. The whole thing should have been changed, of course, as this index stuff does not convey anything in Spanish—or in English either, for that matter—and sounds outlandish, to say the least.

"Mr. Fix-it" is appearing in some foreign languages as "I Will Fix You."

"The Bravest Way," one of Hayakawa productions, goes under the name of "The Most Brave One."

A picture recently shipped abroad struggles under the main title of "Rewarded Virtue." According to our records, this is the twenty-second time that the name has been used.

The climax is capped, naturally, by our own beloved Committee on Public Information.

From a picture produced under the auspices of that august body, which has serenely manhandled every language in creation, we cull the following:

English original: Contemptible little army.

Spanish translation: Army of happy children.

English original: Barrage fire.

Spanish translation: Building the barricades.

Film production is booming in Argentina and all advices indicate that some of the pictures turned out in the past six months can hold their own, on merit, with the imported article. This is particularly the case in the latest venture of the Gallo Film Company, "En Buena Ley," about to be released in Buenos Aires. Expert film men who have seen the production claim that it stands comparison with American-made subjects of the same class.

There is a great shortage of moving pictures in Spain. Our correspondent in Barcelona reports less than twenty releases during the past month, American pictures taking the lead with about eight releases and the rest being made up of Italian, French and Spanish productions.

Scarcity of raw stock is also hampering local production to a very large extent. It seems that only very limited quantities of either American or European undeveloped film are available at present in Spain.

The latest news from Scandinavia predicts that the moving picture business will soon be "socialized" or "nationalized" in all the countries of Northern Europe. This means that the different states will bring all theatres under their direct control, and will dictate to producers and distributors the amount of their profit on the sale and rental of films. This socialistic plan, which has already been established in some of those northern nations, is one of the reasons why the Scandinavian producing companies have combined for export purposes in an effort to secure abroad the profit that they are barred from obtaining at home.

Europe Afraid of the Bogey-Man

An outcry has been raised in the French and English trade press against a publication issued from Zurich, Switzerland, which aims to act as cinematographic go-between among the different belligerent countries.

It is hard to predict what practical effects this campaign may produce, but it is obvious that, although it may retard, it cannot stop trade. If concerns in allied countries are willing and anxious—and some of them are—to sell their films to the Germans, there is no reason why the Teutons should be taken to task for displaying their wares to the Allies.

After all, the Germans themselves are to blame for the jealousy that any attempt of theirs at commercial rehabilitation inspires in allied countries. They tried so hard to impress the world with their superior ability in all lines of endeavor that the world was hypnotized into believing it. Even today, after untold humiliations and complete military defeat, the bogey of German superiority is strong outside of Germany. And this bogey, we believe, is at the bottom of the cool reception given in Entente film circles to the luckless Zurich paper. Some of our French and British friends, though they will not admit it, still have a lingering idea that the German film product might turn out superior to their own!

However, peace will be signed, the habit of writing according to censorship requirements will gradually give away before the advance of common sense; hypocrisy and muddled thinking will no longer be virtues; Paris, to make good its claim as "the trade center of Continental Europe," will try to do as much business beyond the Rhine as possible; London, in the role of "the world's export center," is already exploiting every possible commercial advantage wherever it may happen to be found; and French and British trade papers, when compelled to review and comment, in justice to their readers, on the invasion of American, French, British and Italian pictures through every theatre in Germany, will soon arrive at the conviction that German film superiority is just another myth and will simply forget the Zurich doctor and his "peace propagation" scheme.

PARAMOUNT'S THEATRE CHAIN NOW GIRDLES AUSTRALIA

Splendid New Open-Air Structure in Rockhampton, Erected Despite Difficulties, Is Latest Link in Chain—Building for Big Increase in Moving Picture Business Which Is Confidently Expected.

By Chas. A. Lee

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Australia, Tuesday, March 18.—Paramount has now a chain of fine picture theatres stretching round the coast of Australia. In these it places its film, and in each of the centres it has made ample arrangements for big advertising campaigns.

The organization only began its operations as a separate entity in this continent two years ago. Its progress has thus been amazing.

Alec Lorimore, Paramount's farsighted Australasian chief, has been able to influence certain capitalists in Rockhampton, in the north of the State of Queensland, to build an elaborate open-air theatre. Needless to say, the open style of building is essentially suitable for the tropical climate of the place. The arrangements have been made in spite of the building restrictions still resting upon such operations, under the War Precautions Act of the Commonwealth.

This theatre constitutes another link in the girdle that binds Paramount to the picture industry of the island continent. For in the theatres composing the belt of the organization's activities its pictures will be handled in a big way, assuring excellent publicity to the back country.

EVERY BIG AUSTRALIAN CITY NOW WELL REPRESENTED.

Beginning in the northeast of Australia, these theatres are as follows: Townsville, Paramount Theatre; Rockhampton, Paramount Theatre; Brisbane, Tivoli Theatre; Newcastle, Lyric Theatre; Sydney, Haymarket Theatre; Melbourne, Hoyt's; Adelaide, Finklestein's Wondergraph, and Perth, Coombe's Grand.

These towns represent the big cities of Australia and the organized advertising in these places concentrate tremendous publicity upon the releases of this great manufacturers' distributing agency. The system is now complete, leaving no town of importance uncontrolled by Paramount. Further, after being shown in the centres specified, the film runs for a period in the country back of the coast.

But the information so far given applies only to the continent of Australia. The southern island of Tasmania comprises one of the six states of the Australian Commonwealth. It has its capital —Hobart—in which is to be found the Paramount Palace Pictures—also a large northern town, Launceston—containing the Paramount Majestic Theatre.

The Dominion of New Zealand is also adequately catered to. In the north island, Auckland has its Tivoli and Wellington two theatres, Artcraft and Paramount. The south island contains two large towns, Dunedin and Christchurch, and these have the Empire and Strand respectively—of course, all Paramount theatres.

Naturally, a solid backbone of business and publicity has been created in Australasia, and the operations of the organization are contantly extending. It is believed in Australia that as things settle down after the war there will be a considerable increase of population. Should this be so, the organizing of Paramount will be seen to have made preparations that will support with ease a much heavier load of business than it carries now. So far, however, the advances have been made on a sound basis and, even as things are, rapid growth is manifest.

WILL START IN BUSINESS.

Nicolas Diaz, One-Time Cine-Mundial Employe, Makes Change.

Nicolas Diaz, for some time manager of the Spanish and Portugese section of the Foreign Department of the Fox Film Corporation, left his position at that organization at the end of last month and, it is said, will establish an import and export office that will deal principally in motion picture films and supplies.

Mr. Diaz was connected with the Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World for a number of years, having been one of its founders. He organized throughout South America the distribution of Cine Mundial.

While at the Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Diaz closed several contracts for South America in territories that were not covered by Fox productions.

The good name and reputation that Mr. Diaz enjoys among his numerous motion picture friends in Latin America, together with his knowledge of the American film market, are undoubtedly a very valuable asset for his future activities in the export field.

Inter-Ocean Books Big Travel Series

President Paul Cromelin, of the Inter-Ocean, announces the conclusion of contracts in behalf of the Frederick Burlingham Travel Series in many parts of the world.

The most important sale was for Great Britain, through Managing Director Taylor, of the London Inter-Ocean office.

The Paris branch has placed this series for France and Belgium.

Louis Brock, of the home office, has sold the series in Japan and Cuba and their closure for a number of South American countries is expected shortly by the member of the Inter-Ocean staff.

The New York Sunday World gave a full page in its Sunday Magazine section to the Burlingham pictures, under the heading "How To Get Killed on the Alpine Peaks." The "touching the high spots" still used in a recent issue of this trade paper was the feature of the newspaper illustrative lay-out.

"What Inter-Ocean has done with the Burlingham films gives the lie to the contention that the foreign market will only accept drama and comedy," said President Cromelin, in announcing the deals mentioned above.

Apollo Corp. Secures New Read Feature

The Apollo Trading Corporation has secured the sales rights for the new J. Parker Read, Jr., feature, "Sahara," for all territories excepting the United States and Canada and the United Kingdom. The deal was closed a few days ago, after the picture had created a very favorable impression throughout the trade, when shown privately at the Rialto Theatre. W. W. Hodkinson is to distribute the picture throughout the United States and Canada, the release being scheduled for some time in June. The rights to the United Kingdom had been disposed of before the Apollo Company took up negotiations for the foreign territory.

"Sahara" is admittedly a big picture. Louise Glaum is the star, and the direction is by Allan Dwan.

The Apollo Company, which is best identified in the export trade of New York by reference to the activities of "Bobbie" North and "Larrie" Weber, in its behalf, is just now busily engaged in marketing the foreign rights on the big Harry Garson production, "The Unpardonable Sin," which has achieved such a great success throughout the United States and Canada and is now running at the Broadway Theatre, New York. The company, which has personal representation in the important cities on the other side of the Atlantic, is rapidly establishing itself as one of the important American film exporting houses.

Manheimer Selling Powerful Serial

E. S. Manheimer, one of the real old-timers in the moving picture industry in the United States and at present following the export branch of the business, with offices at No. 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, is marketing the new Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," in the foreign markets.

The serial stars both Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison in powerful roles and is winning high praise throughout the trade. The story and direction is by Joseph A. Golden. It is in fifteen episodes.

Mr. Manheimer has already placed the serial for many of the important territories.

Inter-Ocean has, since its inception, used the advertising slogan "We operate everywhere" which, since Inter-Ocean is the great international firm of the films, is its right. WHERE—EFFICIENTLY"

We would rather lose a sale than ship a customer a film that might not prove popular in the theatres to which he caters.

The tastes of those theatres is our study!

And we claim a proficiency in that study which is not equalled by any other American film exporting firm. And so Inter-Ocean's recommendation of a film has come to mean something to the buyer, and that is why the following recommendations will be carefully considered by my readers:

GOVERNMENT ORDER WRECKS AUSTRALIAN PICTURE BUSINESS

Combating Influenza Visitation Authorities Close Houses at Regular Intervals Daily and Decreased Attendance Causes Severe Losses to Exhibitors—Trade Incensed.

By Charles A. Lee.

Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, March 5.—Governmental decree has permitted the electric luminant to glow intermittently on the silvered screens of this city and Melbourne (Victoria). This ponderous statement fits the ponderous bungle that has been made. Exhibitors are ordered to close for two hours between sessions.

The thing was decided on Friday last. Hotels, race courses and picture theatres were then told they could get to business —racing tracks on Saturday, and the shows and hotels on Monday. Other theatres were delayed till today.

Rain interfered with the races, but though no "act of God" hindered the business of the picture showmen, the "act of man" was quite enough. The pictures started off big, but when the public saw the further restriction in action—or in "inaction"—Sydney business was ruined. The authorities have put forward the necessity for fumigation as the reason for their attitude in the matter. But when the theatres offered weeks ago to fumigate during screening the proposal was treated with chilly silence. Surely if so little, even of ordinary influenza, exists in the State as to permit of reopening at all, the exhibitors could be relied upon to see to fumigation arrangements. This is naturally a precaution that ordinary self-interest would dictate. The fact is that quite apart from any cabinet dictation, a number of the picture showmen have installed an inhaler in the vestibule and are willing to spray their patrons during the progress of filming.

The authorities have been slack to a degree in their treatment of the trade. Showmen could not obtain definite particulars of what the government wanted, and the whole business of making a restart was confused. Loss has naturally occurred. Theatres paying over $500 per week in rent, with a capacity of 1,000 patrons, are seriously handicapped when compelled to close for two hours at the dinner period and submit to a similar break at tea time. They can do only small business; they cannot sell tickets for one hour before the closing of the theatres. The undue interference stops the big shows from advertising as in the past. This lavish expenditure has been curtailed and an air of uncertainty prevails.

Unless the continuous shows are allowed to resume, great losses will be suffered by the trade. Spoken drama is to begin tonight. Would it be rational to expect the continuous picture program to be released? One would think so.

NO UNITY TO COMBAT HARMFUL RULINGS.

Owing to the lack of unity in the picture world here, no combined pressure is brought to bear in the direction of sensible care for its necessities. Officialdom appears to think that picture people can be ignored with impunity. Had it not been for the efforts of Alec Lorimore, the energetic Paramount chief, during the last five weeks of stoppage, no doubt the trade would have been treated far worse. In my opinion but for this action the picture shows would have been still shut up.

Of course it is well known that the government is taking the advice of a board of ten doctors who know nothing of the effects that certain regulations will have upon the public weal. But no government is right in delegating its administrative duties to that extent. We might just as well have government by boards—by the military in war time, by doctors in epidemics, and by financiers in time of financial stringency. Once that argument is admitted, the uselessness of cabinets is practically conceded. Presumably the authorities do not desire to go as far as that!

It would be expected of a cabinet that had made the advent of pneumonic influenza as great a political advertisement as possible, that the climb down from its high horse would be effected as tardily as circumstances would permit. But the way the thing has been done exasperates. It also leaves the unfortunates who have to grin and bear the brunt of the blundering in a mixed frame of mind. They don't know whether the two-hour-break piece of genius is an attempt at some show of dignity, or merely another example of stupidity. The masks and the innoculation craze, it is worthy of note, have already been pronounced absurd by authoritative voices.

CENSOR'S SCREENINGS PILE UP TREMENDOUSLY.

The recommencement of photoplay activity means that a large quantity of film must pass through the hands of the censors. Busy men from the film exchanges have to spend nearly the whole of their day at the Censor's—getting a knowledge of films that would, but for the closing regulations, have been obtained gradually during the last five weeks. Meanwhile, the daily routine—as well as the extra rush—of office work piles up, to be done partly at night.

Naturally it would suit the trade much better if the censors' screening—in this glut of work—were done at night to some extent. But the censor never works overtime. It is beneath the dignity of dignitaries to go beyond stated office hours, even if they have had a holiday of five weeks. It would never do. And a graceful offer to oblige busy people striving to keep their industry going in time of stress would not do either. It would be proper in the case of a navvy, or a street sweeper, but cannot be expected of a censor.

Sydney, Australia, Mar. 11.—Today a relaxation has been announced for theatres fully equipped with up-to-date ventilation plants. Times of running are now from 1 p. m. to 5 p. m. and from 6 to 10.30. Ventilation has had a win.

However, even the less restricted arrangements are seriously affecting business. The public still have in mind that only one show is given at night, and the second screening is poorly attended. Once business is interfered with it is coy as a farmyard beauty in its further advances.

PICTURE MEN ARE CONSIDERING REPRISALS AGAINST NEWSPAPERS

Scare Lines in Australian Dailies Have Hurt Their Business and, Feeling That They Have Been Unfairly Treated, Curtailed Advertising Appropriations Seem Likely—Notes.

By Charles A. Lee.

Sydney, March 25.—Although there are a number of cases of influenza in the State there are few deaths. The infectivity is high, according to medical authorities. Many people are pointing out that these features imply that the disease here is little more than the ordinary epidemic of "cold in the head" that appears here pretty regularly in the spring and autumn. The picture industry, however, is still hampered with restrictions.

Newspapers generally, eager to obtain their scare headlines, are simply helping the Government, which would naturally be glad to have something to show as an excuse for its drastic measures. The press has derived an immense profit in the past from the moving picture industry, but its present attitude appears to film men and exhibitors to be one that tends to damn the industry. Consequently, showmen who have supported the press sheets up till now, are considering some ideas for self-protection. It is proposed to reduce for the future the tremendous advertising that has been a feature of the moving picture business of Sydney.

The annual election of officers of the Federated Picture Showmen's Association of Australia, held this morning, resulted as follows: President, William Zarker, Vice-Presidents, W. Howe and J. Sheerin; Secretary, C. C. Dean; Treasurer, Clay Reid, and Executive, A. Young, S. N. Wright, H. W. Rofe, G. Zarker and F. Mumford. Mr. Zarker has now been re-elected to the chair for the second time. His popularity is such that, to prevent his hold of the position for a longer period than three years, it would seem to be necessary to enact a "closure" clause. For the first time, a big financial man, in the person of H. W. Rofe, has been induced to come on the executive. As one of the foremost business men in Sydney, his services will be highly valuable to the association. This body is to be congratulated on getting him into its harness.

Much business has been transacted by the association lately, especially since the influenza germ invaded the State, and its operations for the immediate future are expected to be of the "busy bee" order. The organization's objects include furthering the picture business in every possible way; keeping it clean, and preventing, as far as possible, the interference of cranks, of gloom-merchants, who would appear to desire Australians to live in smileless quietude; approaching the Government in order to secure protection from iniquitous class taxation; advertising the business. The moving picture industry has been treated recently by the law-makers with as little foresight as were the steam engine and printing press in their earlier stages—as the offspring of the Evil One.

The Haymarket and Crystal Palace, the two largest city theatres, have resumed the screening of their animal pictures, "The Biggest Show on Earth" and "The Romance of Tarzan," respectively. There is no doubt that the large sums spent in the advertising campaigns by the two firms have been justified. This much can be gathered even in the midst of business dislocation.

Members of the staff of Paramount gave a farewell dinner recently to their confrere, J. C. Jones, who is leaving for New York. Sincere, kind appreciation was expressed, and the guest was presented with a travelling bag. "The King," "Our Guest" and "The Chief" were the toasts submitted and honored enthusiastically. In reply to the last theme, Alec Lorimore was in his best and breeziest mood.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Many Prominent Players in Cast of "The Fear Woman"

CAPITAL acting opportunities are offered not only Pauline Frederick but every one associated with her in "The Fear Woman," newest of her Goldwyn pictures, which will be released June 8. The star herself is seen in a role of uncommon power and appeal as Helen Winthrop, a girl who is racked by fear lest her father's weakness for drink may manifest itself in her and destroy the happiness of the man she loves.

Sharing interest with Miss Frederick is Milton Sills, now a full-fledged Goldwyn favorite since his support of Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," "Shadows" and "The Stronger Vow." Excellent scope is given him as Robert Craig, the lawyer whose calm reason and understanding seek to convince his fear-driven fiancée that nothing that might happen could change his faith in her.

Emmett King, as Miss Frederick's father, makes his first appearance in Goldwyn pictures. His sound training extending over a period of many years in support of the foremost stage stars guarantees an interesting and satisfying performance in "The Fear Woman."

In Harry S. Northrup, Miss Frederick finds a veteran. He plays an ungrateful role, of course, in a way calculated to acquaint his audiences anew with his villainy and at the same time gratify those who appreciate his technical skill.

As a fitting foil to Miss Frederick's dark beauty Beverly Travers plays the part of her indiscreet friend, her fairness of face and hair throwing into sharp relief the star's brunette loveliness. Miss Travers is a comparative newcomer to the screen, but her acting in this production gives her the sort of opportunity that promises quick recognition.

Walter Hiers, not often found in a strictly dramatic production, plays a role entirely in keeping with his droll personality. His many scenes with Miss Frederick are replete with those moments which he knows so well how to handle. Lydia Yeamans Titus, identified with the stage for years, contributes an amusing character study, and Ernest Pasque also assumes an important role.

Exhibitors Praise Pathe's Aerial Pictures.

Pathe News continues to hold the lead in its remarkable series of air pictures and the recent special spectacle arranged by the aviators at Kelly Field, San Antonio, taken exclusively by Pathe cameramen, has called forth country-wide commendation from both exhibitors and from airmen at all stations. This thrilling "Battle of the Clouds" reproduced vivid scenes of aerial warfare, first showing Hun planes bombing a model French town; the village in flames and the inhabitants fleeing in terror, and then the Yankee planes to the rescue and, after a fierce battle, completely routing the foe. And in Pathe News No. 38, released May 7, the "aerial touring car" is introduced for the first time in sight-seeing over Atlantic City, excellent panorama of the resort being taken at an altitude of 2,000 feet. Then as you sit in your aerial seat, you hold your breath while the plane loops the loop and then goes into a nose spin.

A Suffragette Stump Speech.

Made by Beatriz Michelena in Robertson-Cole's "Just Squaw," released by Exhibitors Mutual.

"Beauty Proof" a Drama of the Northwest for Morey

VITAGRAPH announces "Beauty Proof" as the next photodrama starring Harry T. Morey. It was written by James Oliver Curwood, the novelist, and deals with one of those strange, relentless man-hunts undertaken by the Northwest Mounted Police.

Harry Morey is seen as Corporal Steele, man-hunter, with many captures to his credit and not a few notches on the stock of his gun. He is the most feared man on the Northwest Mounted Police force, and even his comrades in the service have paused in their duties to reflect on this strange silent man of action, whose past and whose ultimate purpose in life are alike mysteries to them.

A capitally cast company supports Mr. Morey. George Majeroni plays Hodge, alias Garson, the man with a price upon his head. Robert Gaillard, as Inspector McGregor, contributes a striking characterization of a stern arm of the law. Denton Vane has a youthful role of opportunities and Tenny Wright and Bernard Siegel add atmosphere and action to the play as half-breed Indians.

Paul Scardon gave the production his usual painstaking attention to detail and extracted from the scenario every essence of realism.

Conforming to the geographical aspects of the play, the company was taken out of town in order to secure snowscapes. Port Henry, where snows are perpetual over winter, was chosen as the site for these scenes.

Themes of New Metros Run from Circus to Society Life

WITH Viola Dana in a frothy farce, Bert Lytell in a tale of the big tops, May Allison in a story of the stage, Hale Hamilton putting pep into prohibition, and Emmy Wehlen satirizing newly-rich society, Director-General Maxwell Karger finds the spice of variety in his supervising at the Metro studios this week.

There are only five characters in Miss Dana's production, "Some Bride," a seaside farce of a bride with "can't behave" eyes and a jealous husband. Irving Cummings has the latter role.

As in "World of Make Believe," Bert Lytell makes a "special study" of everything he undertakes, and carries that thing to completion. The first week Lytell had to make a special study of getting a job with a circus. The second week he turned his attention to currying a horse, the third week to running a flivver. John Ince, who directs the production, has as assistants Danny Hogan, Webster Cullison and Fred Warren.

Emmy Wehlen and her company have been working two weeks on "Fools and Their Money," the satire on Manhattan society picturized by Finis Fox from the story by E. Forst. Miss Wehlen has a cast including Jack Mulhall, Frank Currier, William V. Mong, Hugh Fay, Charles Hill Mailes, Mrs. Bertram Grasby, Betty Peterson and Molly McConnell. Herbert Blache is directing.

"Almost Married," in which May Allison has the role of a "Swiss Nightingale" who flies to New York's Cabarabia, will be completed this week. Charles Swickard is directing the picture, and the east includes Walter I. Percival, Frank Currier, Harry Ratenbury, James Warton James and Hugh Fay.

What happened to a certain "dry" republic when a lively young man with a gift o' gab and a grip full of liquid "pep" breezed in, is being depicted in "Full of Pep," in which Hale Hamilton is starring under the direction of Harry L. Franklin. The second week of production is past, and this particularly timely subject will be released about the time prohibition sets in in our own United States.

Power Company Reports Big Business.

The Cuban Electrical Supply Company, of Havana, the Cuban representatives of the Nicholas Power Company, is ordering Cameragraphs in good quantities, and state that business is in a satisfactory state. Also the Power's Company Mexican representatives, A. y D. Ehlers, are reporting many Cameragraph sales.

The Power's Cameragraph has been identified with Liberty Loan work. Two of them are being used at the display at Aeolian Hall, New York, and there were two of them that were prominently displayed on the Knights of Columbus floats in the loan parade held in New York on May 3.

The Denver Theatre & Supply Company reports good Cameragraph business.

The home office of the Power's Company has received big orders from Scandinavian countries.

Sidelights and Reflections

FOLLOWING the trade showing of the Rothapfel Unit Program at the Rialto Theatre, New York, May 9, a reception and banquet was held at the Hotel Astor and speeches were made by many of the guests, including the editors of the three leading trade papers and two exhibitors, one from the East and the other from the West. The exhibitor from the Coast spoke in favor of men who are experienced exhibitors going into production and using their knowledge of what the public wants as a means toward better pictures.

There isn't the slightest doubt but that there are exhibitors who would be of great value to the producing end of the industry. They would bring with them the results of the close personal touch they have gained while studying their own particular public and would be able to teach the producers several things they have been too busy to assimilate.

To repeat: No man ever knew too much about his business.

There is also another angle to the matter: The exhibitor who goes into producing moving pictures will acquire considerable unexpected knowledge of the difficulties which confront the producer. He will learn, for instance, that unlimited capital, honesty of purpose and the command of the best talent in all departments of production will not always guarantee a successful picture—from the dollars and cents point of view. The reasons for this he will learn by experience—there isn't any other way—and then he will go and sit down meekly in a corner and admit to himself that making money-making pictures is a bit harder than it looks.

Next week this publication will contain an article written by the President of the Motion Picture Directors' Association. Its purpose he explains in this manner:

"We are trying to improve the moving picture story and can best do it, I think, by a great deal of publicity of this kind. Authors have an idea that all they have to do to earn their share of picture money is to dash off a short synopsis of a story, forgetting that all the plots have been done a thousand times before they were born and that all that makes modern writing different from old works is the new treatment and the application of modern inventions and discoveries to those same worn out original seven plots. It is the treatment of the story that we must improve upon, and I hope we can get the big minds in the authors' ranks to realize the symbols of the new medium."

Two prominent authors are quoted on the subject discussed in the article.

"The Law of Men"

Paramount Presents Enid Bennett in a Resourceful Drama of Man's Aggressive Selfishness.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN the Paramount production, "The Law of Men," a bright and industrious young sculpturess, interpreted by Enid Bennett, is guilty of permitting ambition to lead her directly into a trap which could have been easily avoided. Ambition, prompted by self-love, causes her to disregard the advice of her fiance, success in her profession, her cherished object, dominating for the moment her natural desire to be loved and happy in married life and indirectly resulting in an accusation of murder against the young artist who is the object of her love. The star displays more intensity than usual, though it is difficult for her to suppress the magic of her youth and her native joy in life. Andrew Robson is powerful at all times as a husband of noble ideals and shattered ambition, and Donald MacDonald impersonates a debased genius with superb impertinence.

With all these resources in its favor, with admirable direction and good taste in settings the full effect is not driven home because of constant distractions, including too many closeups of Miss Bennett and an inartistic conclusion. The hero, who has barely escaped the electric chair, shows no signs of the ordeal through which he has passed and even small appreciation of the beautiful girl who saved him. The last we see of him is not at her feet in soulfelt gratitude, but sitting calmly with his arm around her waist, smoking a pipe.

The entire Paramount product, "The Law of Men" is impassioned and in earnest, imbued with strong feeling and replete with clear vision of frail human character. This mood preserved to the very end would make it rank high in all the values of fine screen drama.

The Story.

"The Law of Men" is unknown to Laura Dayne, an ambitious young sculptress courted by a neighboring young artist, Denis Connors. Her limited contact with the social world causes her to be unsuspicious when a decadent architect, Jamison Keene, lures her to Tarrytown Inn one night, promising the consummation of her fondest ambition, the placing of her work in a municipal building next day, though she has glimpsed Keene's character. He has just had the artist paint a miniature of a foolish woman, the wife of her dear old friend, Benton Wade. Laura goes to the Tarrytown Inn and walks into a nice trap set for her. Keane uses all his disarming wiles in vain, for Laura puts up such a desperate struggle that he is forced by the management to release her. Overwhelmed by a sense of her own folly, she goes directly to the artist and sets his pugnacity afire with her story. He breaks away from her in a fury and visits the hotel of Keene, and uses such threatening language that he is ejected by the house detectives.

The artist returns to his own rooms discomfited and urges a quick marriage as the only protection for Laura. She accepts, but Connors is arrested for murder just after the ceremony. Keene has been murdered.

At the trial Benton Wade, actuated by two motives, one of which is hatred of the spoiler of his own home, makes an impassioned effort to save the innocent young man, but he fails. He then becomes the victim of fear, especailly when Laura traces, step by step, his own guilt and confronts him with evidence of it. At the sentencing of the innocent man the guilty one dramatically confesses his crime and ends his life with quick poison. There is at last happniess for the unjustly accused young artist and for the girl whose devotion and intelligence saved him from ignominious death.

Many Pre-Release Bookings on "The New Moon"

CHICAGO, Dallas, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Toledo, Fort Worth, Washington, Richmond, Baltimore, Buffalo and several others are among the first of the big first-run cities to secure advance play dates on Norma Talmadge's latest Select picture, "The New Moon," which had its premiere last week at the Rivoli in New York.

Sig Fuller's Bijou Dream Theatre, with a seven days' booking, leads the list of Chicago houses to date in pre-release runs on the production. Other Chicago houses are the Riviera, four days, and the Randolph, four days.

The management of the big Jefferson Theatre in Dallas, Texas, has signed the picture for a seven days' run, while the Grand Opera House in Pittsburgh will also show it for seven days. Other seven days' bookings that have been reported this week are the Stillman Theatre in Cleveland, Alhambra Theatre in Toledo, Metropolitan in Washington and Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo. The film has been booked for four days each at the Egypt Theatre in Fort Worth, Colonial in Richmond and the New Theatre in Baltimore.

"The New Moon" is a Russian story by H. H. Van Loan. It presents Miss Talmadge in a decidedly new role, that of a Russian princess who is torn from the side of her fiance through the workings of the Bolshevist movement.

The scenes of the story are all laid in Russia, and the action is divided between two centres of the new Nationalist movement. As the Princess Marie Pavlovna betrothed to Prince Michail Koloyar, Miss Talmadge and her leading man, Pedro De Cordoba, are shown in some very interesting scenes. The entire story is one of dynamic action, and the swiftly moving incidents lead up to a climax of refreshing originality. Chester Withey wrote the scenario and also directed the production.

In addition to Miss Talmadge and Mr. De Cordoba, the cast includes Charles Gerard, Stuart Holmes, Marc McDermott, Ethel Kaye, Harry Sothern and Marguerite Clayton.

Shirley Mason in "Final Close-Up."

In a brand new Paramount picture, "The Final Close-Up," Shirley Mason again plays the type of role which is so well liked by screen patrons—a purely American girl, full of pep and activity, who keeps things moving all the time and never allows a dull moment to creep into her daily life. This picture is scheduled for release May 18. Royal Brown wrote the original story, which was scenarioized by Julia Craufurd Ivers.

Walter Edwards directed, James C. Van Trees was the cameraman and the supporting cast includes Francis McDonald, James Gordon, Betty Bouton, Eugene Burr and Mary Warren.

Cast of Prominent Players Supports Marguerite Clark

A NUMBER of well-known motion picture actors will be seen in support of Marguerite Clark when her new Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," is released. This is the photoplay based upon the story by Alice Duer Miller which, dramatized by A. E. Thomas, served as a starring vehicle for Ruth Chatterton on the legitimate stage for more than two years.

Miss Clark's leading man is Eugene O'Brien, who has served in a similar capacity for many of the foremost stars of motion pictures, including, beside Miss Clark, Elsie Ferguson, Norma Talmadge and Mary Pickford. Craufurd Kent also has an important part, as does Frederick Esmelton, who for years was one of the best known character actors on the English and American stage.

Others who are well and favorably known to picture fans are Frances Kaye, May Kitson, Bradley Barker, Albert M. Hackett, Augusta Anderson, Rita Spear, George Stevens and the inimitable Frances Grant and George Washington, who appear respectively as Mammy Jackson and "Snowball."

Director John S. Robertson is said to have succeeded in preserving all the delightful humor of the original story and play. The scenario was written by Clara Beranger, and many of the scenes were filmed in Mississippi amid genuine Southern surroundings.

Announce Titles of De Haven Comedies.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven, who have recently been signed to play in Goldwyn-Capitol comedies, will appear in the following productions: "In a Pinch" and "Some Honeymoon."

In the pictures it is interesting to note that Flora Parker will not be Flora Parker any more, but Mrs. Carter de Haven.

Universal City Is Alive with Production Activity

UNIVERSAL CITY is teeming with cinematic activity at the present time, and more than a dozen companies are "shooting" daily. Several of the directors are working on stories for the stars with a view of starting immediate production.

The cast for the newest Harry Carey picture, "A Man of Peace," written by Frederick Jackson, has been completed and Peggy Pearce, former Triangle star, has been chosen to support Carey in the feminine lead. Others who will support the star are Joe Harris, Duke Lee, Jack Walters, Vesta Pegg, William Cartright, Howard Enstedt and little Zoe Rae. Jack Ford is directing from the script prepared by George Hively and H. Tipton Steck, Universal staff authors.

"The Weaker Vessel," in which Mary MacLaren is starring, is almost completed by Director Paul Powell, who collaborated on the story with Elmer Ellsworth, the well-known screen writer. Thurston Hall is the leading man in support of Miss MacLaren.

Eddie Polo has just finished the two-reel western melodrama "Cyclone Smith's Pardner." The picture was made under the direction of Jack Jaccard and is said to be one of the best of the Cyclone series. Beatrice Burnham is cast as Carey's feminine lead.

Pete Morrison, one of the capable Universal western actors is now working in the two-reel production titled "The Terrible Bandit." Morrison recently completed "Hate Everlastin'" with Magda Lane in the supporting cast.

Two of Goldwyn's Specials Go Over Big in the West

BOOKINGS are increasingly active on Goldwyn's two most recent extras, "The Eternal Magdalene," by Robert H. McLaughlin, and Zane Grey's "The Border Legion." Several cities in the Northwest have already signed up for first runs. The Goldwyn Seattle branch has reported that the Majestic Theatre, of Portland, Ore., has arranged for first runs on succeeding weeks of "The Border Legion" and "The Eternal Magdalene." A strong exploitation campaign has been planned and is now being worked out.

J. J. Parker has already purchased cowboy costumes for his girl ushers, and the lobby will be decorated with hunting trophies collected by the citizens of Portland during the open season.

Preparatory to showing "The Eternal Magdalene," advance notices are beginning to appear in the Portland newspapers. Besides this advance publicity, Mr. Parker has secured many new outdoor locations beyond the city limits along the banks of the Columbia River, where special forty-eight sheets can be clearly seen by visitors and travelers who pass over the Columbia River Highway on the other side of the stream.

"Destiny" Is Dorothy Phillips' Next.

A farm, New York City, the Stock Exchange and a palatial residence are included in the scenes in "Destiny," the new Jewel production in which Dorothy Phillips is starred, and which will be released this month through Universal exchanges. Dorothy Phillips has the role of a mountain girl with two ambitious brothers. In support of Miss Phillips are William H. Stowell, Harry Hilliard, Gertrude Astor, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Walt Whitman, Antrim Short, Tom Ashton, Nanine Wright, Allan Sears and Edgar Sherrod.

"Destiny" was directed by Rollin Sturgeon. The scenario was prepared by Elliott J. Clawson from the novel written by Charles Neville Buck.

The picture tells the story of an ambitious farm youth who dreams of being a lord in the financial world.

Advertising Angles: Make the most of the dramatic features of this story. You have several angles to work from, but the best plan will be to briefly tell the entire story up to the disclosure of Wade's guilt, then add that he refused to make good his promise and ask what Laura could do. If you give the proper emphasis to this strongly dramatic situation, pointing out that she loves one man and is under great obligation to the other, you can capitalize curiosity. For another angle you can stop with the discovery of Keene's death and ask which man killed him. It will have a strong appeal worked either way. Incidentally hammer on it as one of the strongest plays in which Miss Bennett has yet had a chance to show her skill.

Advertising Angles: Break loose on this. Paste all the paper you can and build up with a house banner even if you are not in the habit of using these. The press sheet carries a number of better than usual stunts. Try to work some of these. Get a grocery hook up with "Mary Pickford would never had led her great prune strike in Daddy Longlegs had Mrs. Lippett bought her prunes here." Then surround the card with stills. Work hard on your newspapers for extra press stories, taking larger advertising spaces in payment. Bear heavily upon the children scenes and feature the "drunk" that followed the seance with hard cider. Throughout use the billing "The best play Mary Pickford ever had." Use this on every announcement, and you will find few to dispute the statement if, indeed, there are any.

"The New Moon"

A Select Production of Powerful Contrasts in the Red Rule of Russia, Presenting Norma Talmadge At Her Best.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

POWERFUL, vivid and terrible in its effects, "The New Moon" bares much that is sensual and unscrupulous in Russia's red enormities committed under the name of government, at the same time holding attention closely through swift dramatic action wonderfully well visualized by producer Joseph M. Schenck, Norma Talmadge and a brilliant cast.

The power of this Select Production comes very largely from the vitality of its theme and from the dramatic opportunities afforded by actual mandates issued in Russia. The structure of the story is good, and its treatment impressively realistic. When is added a cast of exceptionally high order, the values of "The New Moon" are many and strong. The performance of Norma Talmadge shows that she is constantly improving as an artist. She keeps her youth and beauty while gaining in spiritual charm and in more subtle revelation of mind and feeling. Pedro Cordova as Michail dignifies and elevates every moment of his impersonation, as does Marc MacDermott as the intense Lazoff. No less skilled are the characterizations of cunning Kameneff by Charles Gerard, and brutal Kosloff by Stuart Holmes.

Norma Talmadge

Makes us glad she doesn't rely solely on moonlight in "The New Moon."

The Story.

It is under the New Moon that Princess Marie Pavlovna plights her troth to Prince Michail at a grand ball in her honor, though the Reds of Saranoff are gathering under Kameneff, a pretended anarchist, really in the pay of a foreign government to ruin Russia. Marie is democratic in a sweet way to the peasants, loved by many of them, but Anarchist mob, led by brutal Kosloff, a tool of Kameneff, invades the palace on the night of the ball, where Kameneff has gone as an uninvited guest, and a scene of murder and pillage follows. Michail makes one gallant fight after another to save Marie, and finally succeeds in sending her away in a carriage, though he loses track of her in his own escape. He subsequently searches for her in the guise of a peasant courier with access to military centres. She does not leave the province of Saranoff, but hides in the village of Volsk, where she purchases a grocery store with her jewels.

At her store Marie is accidentally recognized by unscrupulous Kameneff, now in love with her, though she does not know him. He issues a mandate that all females between 17 and 32 must register, and Marie does so under her assumed name, supposing it is for good work. The women are terribly undeceived when they find a second mandate makes them national property at the disposal of men. They appeal to Marie at a moment when Kameneff is within hearing. She says she will appeal to Kameneff. Once she is alone he reveals his identity and offers to revoke the order if she will live under his protection, only to be denied with spirit.

There is now an orgy of brutalitq. Kosloff ruins the daughter of Lazoff, the potter, and Lazoff becomes an instrument of vengeance when joined by Michail, who has been told that Marie is the mistress of Kameneff. He reads her innocence in her eyes, and goes to her rescue when she is arrested and taken to Kameneff's headquarters. Lazoff chokes brutal Kosloff, and his hand aims the pistol that kills Kameneff, the latter having executed a group of women, his own sister in the number. Michail and Marie escape at last, to enjoy new freedom and true happiness, though betrothed under the unlucky new moon.

Advertising Angles: Make all the use you can of Miss Talmadge's name. Play up the story as the first romantic play dealing with the new Russia and its ghastly evils. "Jacques of the Silver North" Next Lewis Film

MITCHELL LEWIS' coming Select picture, "Jacques of the Silver North," completes the list of three attractions which Select Pictures has announced for the month of May. The production is now finished, and will be distributed the latter part of the month.

Pleasing in every detail, the production will find particular favor with those lovers of the beautiful outdoors who delight in viewing great stretches of virgin North territory, with snows so deep that human habitations are almost buried in them, with long reaches of ice-crusted open country, with mountain and valley in their dressings of fir and pine. One of its most exciting scenes is a seven days' race over an unbroken snow field by two rivals, each traveling in a sled drawn by a team of huskies.

"Jacques of the Silver North" was originally announced under the working title of "The Gulf Between." It is the third production which Mr. Lewis has made for Select.

Mitchell Lewis has the role of a half-French, half-Indian trapper, trader and prospector. It is one of these lovable characters of the simple northwoodsmen that have made Mr. Lewis so famous in the last three years of his screen career. The story deals with a young girl who has gone into the North country with her father and brother. Jacques meets them when they are in trouble, and during the remainder of the story he figures importantly in their lives.

Norval MacGregor directed this production, which was written jointly by Robert North Bradbury and Frank Howard Clark.

Mitchell Lewis has assembled an excellent cast headed by Fritzie Brunette, who plays opposite him. The other members of the company are Capt. C. A. Van Auker, Murdock MacQuarrie, Edward Hearne, James Gordon, James McDowell and Fred Mack.

Anzac Hero Supports Madge Kennedy.

Roger MacKinnon, a young Australian actor, late of the Anzacs, the Australian-New Zealand contingent that so distinguished itself for bravery in action at Gallipoli, the Dardanelles, and in Egypt, is in the cast that supports Madge Kennedy in her newest Goldwyn production under the direction of Clarence Badger. Mr. MacKinnon, who only recently returned from a British convalescent hospital, where he was confined for some months with shrapnel wounds, was orderly to General Allenby on the memorable night of the capture of Jerusalem from the Turks.

"The Busher" Charles Ray's New Film a Baseball Story

ESPECIALLY timely just now when the American game of baseball has again re-established itself in the hearts of the public and is enjoying the greatest popularity in its history is the release on May 18 of Charles Ray's latest Paramount picture from the Thomas H. Ince studio, "The Busher." In this picture, which thousands of motion picture as well as baseball fans will want to see for the simple reason, if for no other, that they remember with great pleasure the young star's wonderful characterization in a previous baseball picture, "The Pinch Hitter." The small-town atmosphere is again present, and there are promised several typical small-town events that have never been utilized for screen purposes before.

As the best pitcher in the bush league, and a hired man in his spare time, Ray gives to the screen another of those sympathetic and human characterizations which have given him such a unique place in screendom. He is the only actual interpreter of rural America; in his depictions there is neither satire nor glorification, but actual true-to-life representation.

Earl Snell, a Los Angeles newspaperman, wrote the story, and the scenario was written by R. Cecil Smith. The production was made under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Jerome Storm is the director.

McRae Engages Chinese for "Elmo" Serial.

In order to obtain realism and genuine characters for several scenes in the serial, "Elmo, the Mighty," being produced by the Great Western Producing Company, and for which the Universal has the exclusive rights in the United States and Canada, Henry McRae, who is directing the picture, obtained the services of several Chinese men to play the parts allotted to those characters. Mr. McRae decided that instead of using the make-up American he would use the real characters, and a trip through the Los Angeles Chinatown resulted in his selecting the men.

American to Release on June 1 "A Bachelor's Wife"

AMERICAN announces that "A Bachelor's Wife," with Mary Miles Minter in the stellar role, will be released June 1. The production is one of the most ambitious recently undertaken by the "Flying A," revealing Miss Minter in a distinctly new characterization.

"A Bachelor's Wife" is the screen title selected for this refreshing comedy-drama, to which the author, Joseph Franklin Poland, originally gave the name of "The Reign of Colleen O'Malley," later changed to "Mary O'Rourke." It is believed that the new title is not only a snug fit for the story, but offers exhibitors a better opportunity for catchy and effective advertising.

The story concerns the amazing adventures of a warm-hearted, spunky colleen, Mary O'Rourke, who comes to America to visit her cousin. Learning that Norah is the mother of a baby and that the husband had deserted her two years before, Mary sets out to effect a reunion. Unknowingly, she becomes involved with the wrong man.

The laughable and often embarrassing predicaments in which she is placed when circumstances force her to pose as the baby's mother; the rumpus that is stirred up when the bachelor's fiancée is introduced to his "wife"; the fiery scenes between Mary and John, she scorning him as a deserter and he looking upon her as a rank impostor; and the final adjustments and confessions by which Mary is free to be wooed and won by her cousin's cousin, combine to make a picture of unusual interest and dramatic power.

Alan Forrest is seen as Miss Minter's leading man, and others in prominent roles include Lydia Knott, Charles Spere, Margaret Shelby and Harry Holden. The production was directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

"Big Little Person" Is Mae Murray's Best.

One of the best Universal special attractions ever produced is the newest Mae Murray picture, "The Big Little Person," according to Universal officials. This little star whose versatility has been shown in many pictures made for the Universal again wins the heart of the picture patron in her excellent character portrayal in this new production. The producer's predictions are that this attraction will be of great box office value. The picture is five reels in length, and was adapted to the screen by Bess Meredith from the novel by Rebecca Cooper Eastman.

Supporting Miss Murray in the cast are Claressa Selwynne, M. Rudolpho De Valentina, Allen Sears, Mrs. Bertram Grassby and several other players. The attraction is scheduled for an early release.

Marie Walcamp Attends Rodeo.

"The Queen of 1,000 Cowboys" is the latest title applied to Marie Walcamp, Universal's serial star, as the result of her exploits at the Fourth Annual California Rodeo staged at Sonora, California on May 3 and 4. Miss Walcamp was the guest of honor at the big round-up of Western events in which more than 1,000 cowboys participated.

Miss Walcamp led the grand cavalcade around the arena, and herself participated in many of the events. Director Jacques Jaccard and a number of the Universal cowboys accompanied the star. Several thousand feet of film were shot, the most thrilling of which will be used in Marie Walcamp's next Universal production.

Northrup's 217th Assignment.

Pauline Frederick's present Goldwyn picture, in which Harry S. Northrup plays an important part, represents the actor's 217th screen assignment. He has supported practically every star on the screen, not to mention almost as many stage luminaries.

series was but one picture, out of the eight, that might be assuredly recommended for exhibition in the United States. Here follows reference to pictures not included in last week's report.

Cheerio Chums—Well, I'll Be Blowed.

This cartoon offering might be said to match the American newspaper cartoon in animation—companion subjects to our "Mutt and Jeff." Two character plays play the leads, depending upon the style of the average English "droll" of the music halls to demonstrate their character. The titles are slang of the strictly British type and might not in every phrase be "caught" by the American "movie fan." Displaying the "Cheerio Chum" in this country would be a needless hazard of audience displeasure. Dudley Buxton is the creator-cartoonist.

"God Bless Our Red, White and Blue."

Six reels (Samuelson Films) marketed by Jury's Imperial Pictures. The colors mentioned denote three separate episodes into which the six reels are subdivided. Each story is independent of the other and they might be shown as three separate offerings—if they were of a nature appealing to our showgoers. But they are not.

Only the Red Cross episode would have any appeal to American's and in that case there would be a wave of resentment at the finish because the spectator could not possibly understand why the girl should aid in his "get-away" a Hun who so justly deserved capture. The other pair of sub-issues are not of a nature, in the writer's opinion, to warrant showing over here—and there are too many reasons to exact particulars in detail.

"Cheerio Chums—Hot Stuff."

The foregoing reference to this Dudley Buxton cartoon series will serve as mention of this one. The "chums" are firemen—members of the "fire brigade" as England knows them—and their proceedings through the cartoon "comedy" are but mildly interesting.

"A Soul's Crucifixion."

Here is a rara avis among this collection of British films—the last and vastly best of the lot displayed during Mr. Northam's series on the roof. Had this subject been screened first there would have been more interest shown by the trade and all concerned in the four days' adventure in the realm of American opinion. Mr. Northam wanted the "honest opinion of those present" and the applause that marked the finish of "A Soul's Crucifixion" was better than any written or spoken verdict.

Again (as in all of the Northam showings) the acting was excellent, although an actress more possessed of the powers of emotional expression might have made more of the leading role than did the one who played it. But in this we have only praise for the woman who acted the part—believing an actress of greater gifts might have made more of her chances.

The men were uniformly excellent—individually fine examples of the upstanding, clean-cut type of Englishmen who so dominate most companies in which they appear. The titling would need but few changes to "put the picture over" for Americans.

The story is strong, well told and runs smoothly in its disclosures. Beautiful scenery—England is so rich in ancient glories of nature and architecture—shows pretty vistas and the interiors are rich in furnishings correctly typify home-life in that great land of homes.

There are trench scenes well enough done to "stand up" for what little is required of them, and not enough of war to annoy those who have had a sufficiency. American exhibitors who desire a photoplay that matches the best average of programs would do well to consider "A Soul's Crucifixion"—and having done so change the title.

"Come Out of the Kitchen"

A Delightful Paramount Comedy Presenting Marguerite Clark in One of the Most Versatile Roles She Has Ever Played.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ALWAYS bright where it is not tender and genuine in feeling, cheering from first to last in its happy viewpoint, "Come Out of the Kitchen," by Alice Duer Miller, is one of the most thoroughly American stories ever visualized, both in its mood and its characterization. The story is of a high-born Southern family in financial difficulties, trying hard to meet home problems. Devoted to an invalid father, sacrificing all that has made life beautiful to them when the father's life must be saved by a costly operation in New York, they agree to act as servants in their fine old ancestral home when the place is temporarily leased to a Northerner.

The situation of this aristocratic old family of children acting as servants to people less kind and appreciative of our common humanity is one replete with material both comic and tragic. Heavy contributor to the joyous mood of this Paramount comedy is Marguerite

The arbitrary lady of society portrayed by Augusta Anderson is a fine piece of work, and the entire company responds to its opportunities, the genuine colored woman, "Mammy Jackson," true to her role, even an accomplished cat furnishing some of the amusement.

"Come Out of the Kitchen" will be a factor in establishing the popularity of moving pictures on the grounds of good taste.

The Story.

Claudia Daingerfield is the resourceful little daughter of an old and invalid Southern aristocrat. All that remains of his property is a fine old country house, barely maintained by Claudia, her sister, Elizabeth, and brothers, Paul and Charles, with Mammy Jackson, fat and a wonderful cook, still loyal to the household. When Father goes North to consult a great physician, there is no money left. News comes that a costly operation must be performed. There is only one way the expense can be met, to accept the offer of a Northerner for temporary occupation of the fine old place for three thousand dollars, though he insists on white servants. Claudia as cook, her sister as maid, her brothers as butler and boy-of-all-work, take the positions. Now ensues a veritable comedy of domestic service, each one doing a creditable part, Claudia struggling with the cooking for an entire family until she is compelled to call on the services of fat Mammy Jackson and keep her out of sight by ingenious and highly amusing devices.

Claudia steers bravely through a stormy sea of trouble, meanwhile fascinating the Northern men. Burton Crane gradually falls in love with her, and thinks seriously of taking Claudia out of the kitchen—she is such a wonderful cook. He has come upon a miniature of her, but it disappears. He accuses the elder brother of stealing it and discharges him. One after another of the supposed servants are discharged until only Claudia remains. Then comes a telegram that her father has survived a dangerous operation, and the brave little heart weakens at last. Discovery of her true identity and realization of her superb pluck leads Burton Crane to ask her to be his wife, with the happiest result that could be expected.

"The Veiled Adventure"

Another Delightful Constance Talmadge Comedy Released by Select.

Madge Kennedy in Picturization of Jerome Comedy

THE deliciously amusing possibilities of "Strictly Confidential," the Goldwyn picturization of Jerome K. Jerome's noted comedy, "Fanny and the Servant Problem," are being developed to their utmost by Madge Kennedy in the new production now being directed in California by Clarence G. Badger.

The comedienne's zest and enthusiasm are augmented by the fact that to her is given the opportunity to recreate the play in its fourth form. First it served Fannie Ward for a season of the stage of Wallack's Theatre, in New York. Then it was novelized, which would have sufficed for a story of ordinary merit. But the droll story of the little provincial actress who married a lord and discovered that all his twenty-three family retainers were her own relations, would not die. The result was that "Fanny and the Servant Problem" found its third incarnation in "The Rainbow Girl," the musical comedy sucess which crowded the New Amsterdam Theatre all last season.

This is not to be wondered at by anyone who has read the scenario of the Goldwyn production and compared it with the manuscript of the stage play. The screen version obviously allows greater latitude in establishing the inherent sweetness of Fanny O'Gorman, who later becomes the mistress of Bantock Hall in Rutlandshire, and the narrow conservativeness of the twenty-three servants who have contributed to its stifling formality for generations. The wit and humor of this state of affairs are admirably reflected on the screen by means of graphic bits of acting and keen titling, and the inimitable viewpoint of Jerome K. Jerome bids fair to be popularized even further by Madge Kennedy and her clever aides.

Splendid interiors, in keeping with the rich and dignified character of Bantock Hall, have been designed for "Strictly Confidential" by Hugo Ballin, and correspondingly beautiful approaches to the residence have been found by R. C. Moore, Goldwyn's location expert. The cast introduces Herbert Standing to Goldwyn pictures, besides affording John Bowers as Lord Bantock an opportunity to surprise his admirers with a characterization utterly opposed to his excellent Ridy Scarboro in Mabel Normand's "Sis Hopkins."

The artistic excellence of the production, directed by Louis Mercanton, and the unaffected sweetness and emotional beauty of the star have called forth abundant praise. So great has been its drawing power that return dates have been played and original bookings extended. It captured Los Angeles when it was booked for one week at Quinn's Rialto, beginning April 27.

"Infatuation" Captures Los Angeles.

Gaby Deslys, it is estimated, has reached a higher degree of popularity through the phenomenal drawing power of "Infatuation," issued as a Pathe special.

Holmes Films Little Known Features of Filipino Life

THE entertainment standard set by the recent Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues is more than maintained, it is said, in the current release, "Tagalog Toilers of Luzon." This picture takes one a long distance from the centre of the recent war activities and pictures in the most graphic fashion some of the little known features of life in Luzon. The Tagalog rice farmer is a hustler, and doesn't pray for his daily rice, but gets out and works for it. The camera follows the course of production from the time the farmer begins cultivating his paddy fields until the rice crop is harvested.

The camera has also caught interesting scenes showing how the rice is hulled. Still other features of genuine interest are those showing how the natives obtain salt from the ocean and how the cacao industry is carried on. A forty-pound breadfruit which would provide an entire family with its meals for a day or two is also shown.

Larry Semon in Role of Detective.

Larry Semon is seen as a house detective in "Passing the Buck," his newest comedy to come to the screen. The picture is set for release May 12. What with pretty women lounging around the lobby, Larry's existence as a secret guardian of a hotel is all roses until a valise filled with jewels is left in his hands for safekeeping. Larry locks it up in the hotel safe, but not before crooks have caught a glimpse of the gems. Thenceforth every art and artifice is employed by them to separate Larry and the hotel from the jewels. A chain of incidents as exciting as they are laughable follow. Pretty Lucille Carlisle appears opposite Mr. Semon, with greater opportunities than ever to display her charms of manner and person.

Many Prominent Players in "Fools and Their Money"

IN MORE ways than one the new Metro vehicle for Emmy Wehlen will be a production worth while. In the first place, Miss Wehlen herself is steadily becoming more and more of a screen attraction; secondly, the story of "Fools and Their Money," by E. Forst, is a comedy of the newly-rich, treated from a new angle, and thirdly, the cast supporting the comedienne is an all-star aggregation of artists of the stage and screen under direction of Herbert Blache.

The role of Miss Wehlen's leading man is in the hands of Jack Mulhall, a young actor who has acquitted himself with the highest honors in many of the silent drama's best offerings. Charles Hill Mailes essays the role of the star's father. This actor's record of character creations behind the footlights is a remarkable one, including parts in such productions as "The Squaw Man," "The Clansman" and "The Oath." He has also toured the country for some years in vaudeville and all the popular Shakesperian plays.

When Charles Frohman produced "The Prisoner of Zenda" the original cast included the name of an actor who, with the initial performance of this famous play, proved himself a comedian with a brilliant future on the stage. His name was and is John Steppling. Mr. Steppling has a fat part with Emmy Wehlen in her new picture, which gives him ample scope for his inimitable comedy talents.

William V. Mong, a veteran of the stage and now a regular Metro player, had the very distasteful role of a deceitful employer in Miss Wehlen's recently completed romantic comedy, "The Amateur Adventuress." Mr. Mong has a much more pleasing part in "Fools and Their Money," being cast in the character of Martin Tompkins, a newly-rich contractor who eventually becomes the father-in-law of the star in the story.

The ingenue part has been assigned to Betty Peterson. Miss Peterson is a little San Franciscoan who has had considerable stage and vaudeville experience in light comedy roles.

The exceedingly funny role of the contractor's wife, whose good fortune distorts her tired brain, is assumed by Miss Gerard Grassby, who makes her first appearance in Metro pictures in "Fools and Their Money." Miss Grassby has long been identified with important comedy parts in the farcical two-reel releases which have developed so many of our best players.

Prominent Cast in Stage Women's Film.

Followers of the stage and dramatics, as well as the enthusiasts of the screen, will be treated to some exceptional talent in the Stage Women's War Relief picture now being made under the title of "Tom's Little Star," and which will be released through the Universal Company. "Tom's Little Star" is the eleventh of the series of twelve being made for the Stage Women's War Relief under the direction of Eugene Spitz, George Terwilleger and Louis Dunmyre. The cast as has been announced includes Constance Binney, Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, Blanche Bates, William Jefferson, Wheeler Dryden, Henry Hull, Lucia Moore, John W. Cope and Daniel Frohman.

"Two Women" Holding Its Own.

"Two Women," latest release of the Vitagraph Anita Stewart productions continues to hold a prominent place on the current screen. Reviews received in the Vitagraph home offices, as clipped from newspapers the country over, indicate that its pastoral charm, aside of its unmistakable dramatic appeal, is an element of especial attractiveness to photofans. Ralph Ince directed the picture and George Randolph Chester edited the story.

piquantly charming in this as in any of her other releases. What a pretty scene she makes! Give her a chance to put over a comedy situation and she will not fail to make the most of it and in a romance she is altogether desirable. This story is a pretty romance and is rich in comedy. It is not the best vehicle this player has had, but it surely serves her well and may be counted as a good substantial attraction.

The direction is by Walter Edwards, who is certainly able in comedy. The sets as usual go perfectly with the story and the players. It will be counted by the discriminating as a charming picture.

The Story.

In the new Select picture, "The Veiled Adventure," the heroine, Geraldine Baker, a rich society girl, is engaged to Reginald Crocker, "the catch of the season." She finds that he is flirting with Mlle. Hortense, a beauty parlor woman whose grey veil Geraldine has taken from his overcoat pocket.

Geraldine hires the parlor for a week. Reginald stays away. He is with Hortense. Dick Annesley, friend of Geraldine's brother, gets his nails manicured at the parlor. Geraldine comes to the family seaside home and meets Dick, who is astonished. She finds him wholly by her brother's description something of a prig.

The engagement of Geraldine and Reginald is to be formally announced in one week. She had determined on giving Reginald a lesson, and while she is at the lesson business she decides that she might as well give one or two to the prig, Dick, especially as an elderly woman is trying to catch him and it will do him a service.

Money and jewels are missing, and Geraldine's father has an alarm installed. Geraldine makes Dick think that she has stolen the money, and gets him to replace it. This situation is worked up with a richly varied change of comedy incident. Dick gets caught and so that Geraldine won't be suspected, admits that he stole. He is ordered out of the house. Geraldine meets him on the beach and an elopement is planned. Reginald is given the cold shoulder in a public way.

"An Amateur Widow"

Zena Keefe and Hugh Dillman Give Fine Performance in Meritorious World Comedy.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the season's most attractive comedies, "An Amateur Widow," appears on the program of the World Film Corporation, and features Zena Keefe with Hugh Dillman and a competent cast. The main comedy situation of the picture is good, and considering the production as a whole, it is one that will please the average audience and afford many laughs.

The opening scenes of the picture labor somewhat under a weight of detail which becomes tiresome. There is too obvious an attempt to impress the spectator with the over supply of heiress Rhoda Canby's relatives. But before the production reaches its middle stages it has swung into a happy gait, with increasing action and fun to the end. Zena Keefe is particularly attractive in the title role, and Hugh Dillman puts over the part of Irving Mason in good style. One of the pleasing characters of the picture is that of Aunt Chloe played by Pauline Dempsey.

The Story.

The pretty young heiress, Rhoda Canby, in the story, "An Amateur Widow," is well looked after by a score of poor relatives, all of whom add a share to the unhappiness of her lot, and hope to find permanent shelter under the wing of her fortune.

After suffering from the eccentricities of Uncle Silas, Aunt Elizabeth, Cousin Hepsibah and various other relatives, she decides to run away, and is accompanied by her old nurse, Aunt Chloe. At the same time Irving Mason, a writer, who has been posing as a chauffeur partly for the purpose of having a chance to be near the pretty girl who has led him to believe that she is Rhoda Canby's secretary, falls from grace by getting intoxicated. The ticket that he has ordered and has not been able to pay for is taken by Aunt Chloe, resulting in their going to Irving Mason's home town.

The artist, shanghaied as he is about to commit suicide, leaves a note in his coat on the wharf, which gives rise to a newspaper notice of his death. Rhoda, who must assume another name for the time being, takes the name of Mrs. Irving Mason, not knowing that it is the name of the young chauffeur with whom she has fallen in love. Just when she is feeling elated over being free of relatives, Mason's uncles, who have the general store, hear that their nephew's widow is in town. They force her to accept their protection, and she becomes a valued member of the family, and of the store staff. One day a fire occurs in the store. Irving Mason, who has returned and has been working at his profession in secret, comes on the scene to introduce the most interesting situation of the story, and to marry the heiress.

"All Wrong"

Pathe Five-Reeler in Which Bryant Washburn Plays Role of Matrimonial Theorist.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE delicate question of marital relations becomes the subject of a five-reel comedy, "All Wrong," for Pathe; and it remains for the individual to answer the question of its appropriateness to the theatre program.

The production is well made, and the role of the theorist husband, whose predicaments are many, is played in a spirited fashion by Bryant Washburn; while Mildred Davis as the unhappy victim of her husband's theories, is as sweet a young wife as could be wished for. The picture is artistically set, and its situations are worked out in a thoroughly consistent manner; and only in one or two instances do some

Rogers Indorses "Break the News to Mother"

CHARLES R. ROGERS, director of sales for Select, has just sent to Select's branch managers in twenty-one cities throughout the country a letter in which he enthusiastically indorses the box-office possibilities of the special attraction, "Break the News to Mother," which has been acquired by Select Pictures Corporation for distribution.

Says Rogers: "Thousands upon thousands of soldiers are coming home these days. 'Break the News to Mother' links up with this, though there is not a single battle scene in the film, nor has it any reference to the war.

"Mother love is the keynote of the picture, but it has a highclass romance as well. It carries a big punch. It is the kind of picture that starts growing on you from the first, and by the time it is ended your heart is in your throat."

It is true that the production does not deal in any way with the war, and although at the very end the picture's leading juvenile—he can scarcely be called a hero—is seen in an army uniform, the fact is emphasized in all publicity and advertising aids that this is not a war picture, but a story of village life. It is a picture of peace and quiet, of human faith and of mother love.

Select is releasing the picture at once, prints having already been shipped to all exchanges. Advance bookings in the Metropolitan district of New York forecast the picture's success in that territory.

The cast includes Pearl Shepard, Gertrude Berkeley, Alice Gerard, Forrest Robinson, William Bailey, Louis Stern, Joseph Smiley and Chester Barnett.

Raymond Bloomer plays the part of the young boy of a lovable disposition but careless habits, who brings great sorrow to the old mother's heart.

World Film Helps Boy Scout Week.

President Wilson, in a proclamation just made public, has recommended that the period of June 8 to Flag Day, June 14, be observed throughout the country as "Boy Scout Week" for the purpose of strengthening the work of the Boy Scouts of America. In connection with this observance of this important event all World Film Corporation branches are fully equipped to co-operate to the highest possible degree with the movement by the use of the World Picture, "The Adventures of a Boy Scout." This film is officially indorsed by the Boy Scouts of America and should be an interesting and valuable addition to the program of any theatre for this particular week.

Already a great many requests for bookings on the picture for this particular week have come to the World branches and all exhibitors are urged to apply early for bookings.

Locale of "Mints of Hell" Makes It Good Summer Film

NOT in the long career of William Desmond, starring in Jesse D. Hampton productions, released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual, has this actor appeared in anything like this next production, "The Mints of Hell." The Desmond smile will be missing from the face of Dan Burke, the character portrayed by Desmond in this production, for the role is one which requires serious interpretation.

Coming at a time when the balmy spring turns into the hot days of summer, "The Mints of Hell" will be an exceptionally pleasing offering, because of its locale. Most of the exteriors were taken during a snow storm in the Sierra Mountains in California.

Aside from the scenic beauty of this offering, Jesse Hampton has moulded a production for Robertson-Cole that will stand the most severe test for dramatic effect. Dan Burke is a character who will be admired by any person who loves a two-fisted, red blooded man, and where is the person who doesn't? As impersonated by Desmond, Burke is made a living creature, who from the very outset, when he begins his fight for fortune until he ultimately wins it and the "handsomest girl in the gold country," retains the sympathy of his audience.

Vivian Riche is the girl, the daughter of "old man Chaudiare" and gives an intelligent performance.

Others in the cast are Ed. Jobson, Charles French, Jack Richardson, Mary McIvor (in real life Mrs. Desmond); Frank Lanning, J. J. Franz, Tom O'Brien, Mrs. A'Costa and Walter Perry.

There are several fights which are real fights, a statement which can be verified by Jack Richardson, the heavy.

Carmen Phillips in Cast of "Man Who Turned White"

ATTENTION to detail which will be found paramount in the first Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner, which Robertson-Cole will release next month through Exhibitors Mutual, extended particularly to the selection of Warner's supporting players.

One of the cleverest touches in the production was given by Carmen Phillips, who plays the part of Fanina. Miss Phillips comes to Shadowland from the operatic stage. So as Fanina, the dancing girl of the desert, she does one of the most graceful "bits" ever seen on the screen. Perhaps her costume is somewhat more abbreviated than one would look for in a ballroom except at the Hotel Des Artistes, but it certainly cannot be found offensive to the most fastidious.

Walter Perry, who made himself a name as one of the most versatile character actors on the West Coast, has another prominent part. Perry has frequently been seen in William Desmond pictures. No matter how heavy the film play, no matter how tense the situation, a bit of character work by Perry injected into the actions throws a ray of light over the darkest shadow.

Wedgewood Nowell, who plays Capt. Beverly, "a moral coward, but a courageous soldier," is well known as a heavy. Jay Dwiggins is M. Mirabeau, the merchant of Mzab.

Eugenie Rorde, a favorite of other days of screen lore, reappears before the camera as the wife of the Merchant of Mzab, but has only a brief part to perform.

Simplex Sales Break All Records.

The month of April, from the very first day until the calendar pad indicated a beginning of a new month, saw unprecedented activity at the Simplex factory. Owing to the rush of orders that poured in, compelling the working of day and night shifts and making necessary immediate changes that would ordinarily have been made in the course of several months. When the month's sales were checked up it was found that the record for April sales was not only broken, but badly smashed.

This month also saw many important changes in the plant, one of them being the segregation of the intermittent department. The Story.

Warren Kent, the young man of original ideas in "All Wrong," believes that a husband and wife should live apart on the unending courtship idea. He marries a pretty young girl, takes her on a honeymoon trip, and orders two rooms prepared at the hotel, one on the second floor and one on the roof. Arrived home he takes two separate apartments, visiting his wife only on Wednesday evenings as of old, which results in the bride becoming very unhappy. One day, because of his inability to land a certain order, he finds himself fired from his job. He immediately slackened up on his theories and seeks Betty, and in her absence looks in her work basket and finds some baby clothing in the making. The overjoyed husband hurries forth to try again to land the order over which he lost his job, succeeds, and becomes reinstated in his old position. With his commission in his pocket, he decides to be a generous father, and buys a storeful of toys for his prospective heir. His next meeting with Betty reveals the fact that the baby clothes were for the child of her laundress.

Complications arise at this point of the story. The mother-in-law mixes matters up when she sees a girl friend of Betty's talking to Warren, her suspicions being increased when she finds them both at Betty's apartment. When the matter is cleared up Warren's theories have been cast to the winds, and Betty announces that she is now making clothes for their own family.

"Virtuous Sinners"

Pioneer Has Photoplay of Unusual Name But Ordinary Value in Feature With Wanda Hawley.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

PIONEER's production, "Virtuous Sinners," has nothing unusual to back up its somewhat novel title. Its novelty ends with the name. The story lacks a definite plot element. The threads of incident are woven around a mission in the slums, and the love interest, instead of dominating, is put into the background by an accident to an old man and the subsequent question as to whether he will live or succumb. Much footage is given the mission scenes which might have been put to advantage to some escapades of the gentleman-burglar hero or to some sub-plot which would have created the missing suspense element.

The redeeming features of the production are Wanda Hawley's personality and an exciting chase following the hero's "dream" escape from prison.

Dawn is a waif whom McGregor and Eli Barker, the director of the mission, had picked up one night on the streets.

Jones falls in love with Dawn, but continues his burglarizing practices, even though he appears every night at the mission. He is caught one night entering a house, is tried and sentenced to prison. Barker intercedes with the governor for him through the judge, and Jones is released "under the custody of Dawn." McGregor, a kindly character, is lost sight of in the latter part of the story. In the earlier part he is run over by Jones' car, and the heart strings are played upon as he hovers between life and death, finally recovering. "The Coming of the Law"

Tom Mix in One of His Best Fox Pictures Shows Kind of Man Who Brings Law.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

SPECTATORS are pretty sure to think the new Tom Mix picture by Fox, five reels, is the best he has done and the best and most virile of its kind that anyone had done. Tom Mix plays Kent Hollis, a tenderfoot of the Roosevelt type, who brings law and order into a rough and evil frontier community. One of the characteristics of the picture is that nothing is left undone by the star and his support, either of pain to themselves, or personal danger or rough work, to make the film a real picture of the thing it was desired to produce. Every player in it deserves high praise; for all have given themselves wholly to the making of the picture.

Jane Novak, the leading woman, as the lightly built and pretty heroine, not only acts emotional moments sincerely, but puts up a tiger-cat of a fight with Yuma Ed (Pat Chrisman) sent by the villain, Dunlavey (George Nicholls), to capture her. Sid Jordan, as Neil Norton, and Charles Le Moyne, as Ten Spot, are admirable western types. Tom Mix is perfect. He goes the limit to make the picture, and the result is an unqualified success. Here is a western worth any advertising and sure of marked popularity and long runs. Arthur Rosson knows how to put on a real western.

"Woman Thou Gavest Me" Is an Artcraft Special

ONE of the most vital problems that could possibly arise in marital relations was developed by Hall Caine in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," and in the picture version of this novel, which will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special May 25, a graphic portrayal of a situation that cannot but arouse controversy and speculation seems to have been handled, from all accounts, with considerable skill by Hugh Ford, who produced the picture.

Take a beautiful woman, one who, despite her lowly birth, combines a natural charm with a culture rendered possible by her father's acquisition of wealth, force her into a hateful marriage with a scion of the nobility, who is a rake and a libertine—then, after she has refused to be more than wife in name—conceive of an early and real love re-entering her life—and you have the situation in a nutshell, so to speak.

The question immediately suggests itself—to whom does she belong, spiritually? Certainly the law finds her the wife of one man, but every natural impulse and even her own moral sense propels her to the arms of another. The question then resolves itself into this: "Was she justified?"

Does Not Oppose Law of Marriage.

The argument is used that marriage was never intended to become a law of the Turks—woman was not intended to become a mere chattel. It is against the misapplication of the marriage covenant and not the law itself that the picture inveighs.

Katherin MacDonald is the woman, Mary; Daniel, her father is played by Theodore Roberts; and the role of the rake, Lord Raa, is in the hands of Jack Holt and Milton Sills is Conrad, the other man. The part of the affinity of Raa is played by Fritzi Brunette.

The settings cover India, Africa, Egypt, England and other parts of the British Isles, and in addition, the Antarctic.

Start Work on New Mary MacLaren Film.

The big event of the week at Universal City has been the starting of production on "The Petal on the Current," the Fannie Hurst Cosmopolitan novelette in which Mary MacLaren will star and which is being directed by Tod Browning. Miss MacLaren's leading man will be Robert Anderson, who first rose to prominence as Monsieur Cuckoo in the Griffith production, "Hearts of the World," and who reached the zenith of his screen fame in Allen Holubar's production, "Hearts of Humanity."

In the picture Miss MacLaren will be seen as a department store girl of New York's East Side, who, buffeted about roughly in the sea of fate, eventually finds happiness in the arms of the man she loves. Fritzie Ridgeway and Ina Claire are in support of the star. Waldemar Young prepared the script for screen adaptation.

"Price of Innocence" To Be Seen in Every Key City Soon

FIRST run presentations of "The Price of Innocence," initial production of the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation, of Buffalo, in which Stella K. Talbot is starred, will be given in every key city in the United States within the next two weeks.

It already has received its premier of a week's run at the Washington Theatre, Detroit, to exceptional patronage, and a season of seven days to big business at the Strand Theatre, New Orleans. It opened for week runs on Sunday in Cleveland and St. Louis. The remaining key city engagements will be played next week.

The Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation is headed by Frank L. Talbot, a former exhibitor and well known showman, as president. Mr. Talbot was one of the first of the producers for the legitimate stage to enter the ranks of motion picture exhibitors. He used the Hippodrome Theatre in St. Louis to introduce the new art in that territory. Last fall, in Buffalo, he was given the opportunity to work out the production ideas acquired in his years of experience as an exhibitor. The Buffalo concern was organized and financed by a number of prominent bankers and business men there. "The Price of Innocence" was chosen as the first story, and Miss Stella Talbot was selected as the star.

The production is being released independently by all First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchanges. Likened in action and theme to the two famous classics, "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East," it is proving itself to be a genuine box office attraction.

The Denver branch of the Swanson-Nolan Company also report recent installation of two Type "S" Simplex projectors in both the Strand and Rivoli Theatres, Denver.

Circuit Franchise Holder Praises "Auction of Souls"

"AUCTION OF SOULS," now being distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is being booked on the "see-it-and-take-it" plan by C. E. Holuh, manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, First National franchise holders for Iowa and Nebraska. Mr. Holuh says the production promises to create a sensation in the middle west, where it has aroused the strongest commendation among exhibitors and others who have seen it.

Mr. Holuh's plan is to enter a town quietly with the big picture; call the exhibitor to one side; get him and a few exhibitor friends to see the picture at a private showing, and then to discuss with them, after they have seen the picture, various ways of advertising and boosting. In Omaha, where such a small and select group saw it, the release is to be shown at a private view and comments requested for publicity. Some public organization, probably the Chamber of Commerce, or the local Committee for Relief in the Near East, is to be secured to back it. Mr. Holuh is now on the road, showing the picture at Lincoln, Neb., Sioux City, Fort Dodge, Des Moines, Waterloo and Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

The story of "Auction of Souls" ran in the World-Herald, Omaha, under its former title of "Ravished Armenia." This newspaper has probably the strongest circulation throughout Iowa and Nebraska, and with such advertising to fall back on, the picture is certain to go big, says Mr. Holuh.

"Wagon Tracks" Next Hart-Artcraft Film.

C. Gardner Sullivan is responsible for William S. Hart's new Artcraft picture, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and following "Square Deal Sanderson" which is now completed.

"Wagon Tracks" is the suggestive title of this picture. It deals with the life of those who followed the old Sante Fe Trail westward in the Eighteen-fifties and sixties. This trail started at Westport Landing, now Kansas City, and proceeded westward to the lands that were then infested by Indians and marauders.

Jane Novak will be the leading woman and Robert McKim will be the heavy character. Lambert Hillyer and William S. Hart will direct.

The Story.

In "The Coming of the Law," Kent Hollis is a tenderfoot of the Roosevelt type who lands in a western community run by an evil gang, of which a cool villain, Dunlavey, is the leader. Dunlavey elects the sheriff. Cattle rustling and murder are a part of his daily business. On a ranch is an invalid, Hazleton, and his daughter, Nellie. Dunlavey is annoying this girl when Hollis arrives. Dunlavey is knocked down.

Hollis finding how things are in the neighborhood decides to remain and run his father's ranch and weekly newspaper till law and order are brought into the community. He falls in love with Nellie. His life is in danger all the time, but coolness, courage and endurance keep him safe till election day, the climax of the big fight between him and the villain Dunlavey.

Hollis has won the respect of the cowboys other than Dunlavey's henchmen. Dunlavey lays plans. He directs Yuma Ed to go to the Hazleton ranch and capture Nellie and arranges it so that in case Hollis comes to the polls, a note shall be handed to him warning him of this.

Hollis and his manager, Norton, do come to the polling place and are dominating the situation when the note is handed in. Hollis leaves at once. Dunlavey now congratulates himself and invites the boys to vote early and often. He is astonished to find that there are others who are willing to take up the fight.

Meanwhile Hollis has come to the Hazleton ranch where Nellie is struggling with Yuma Ed and there is a terrible fight. Yuma is knocked out. Hollis and Nellie are coming to the village. Dunlavey, the voting over, has gone out with his gang to get the girl. The boys count the ballots and find that Hollis is elected. They come to tell him. Hollis sees Dunlavey coming and rides fast. The boys arrive. Dunlavey's crew takes refuge in a cabin. There is an exciting fight, the cabin is fired and those of the gang not shot are captured.

"Thin Ice"

Vitagraph Melodrama With Corinne Griffith Holds Suspense.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THERE is marked suspense in the new Vitagraph Picture, "Thin Ice." Corinne Griffith is the leading woman, and the script is by Shannon Fife. Directed by Tom Mills, it has the usual quality of Vitagraph staging, the distinguished sets, the perfect gowns and the consistency of atmosphere. The story is frankly melodramatic; but it holds interest very well, and while not a great attraction, it is a good one and will please the average theatre patron.

There seems to be a never-failing demand for stories of this kind in which a perfectly innocent heroine falls or is made to fear that people will think she has fallen into the power of an unscrupulous villain. This picture is ably put together, and makes a pleasing and effective attraction.

Graves, a scoundrel manipulating a certain mining stock. All Alice's fortune is in that stock. She pledges it to Graves to let her brother off.

Graves wrecks the company, and writes to Alice that she must see him about her note for the money. Alice and her husband are staying with the district attorney for a week, who has evidence in his safe that will send up Graves for wrecking the mining company. Graves knows this and plays on Alice's fears. He has forged love letters from her and other evidence. She decides to steal the papers.

In the meantime her brother, Ned, steals and is arrested. The criminologist, Alice's husband, to prove his theory, brings the boy to the district attorney, and they agree to try him, believing that he will break open the safe. He is fed and given a room. A breeze blows open his door. He sees some one like his sister pass, follows and finds Alice trying to open the safe. She has time to tell him about her affair with Graves, and he vows to kill him. They are discovered.

To save Alice, the brother breaks away and is followed. Alice thinks he is going to commit murder, and goes to Graves's house to stop him. She finds Graves dead on the floor and is discovered by a policeman. Ned comes in, followed by Alice's husband and the district attorney. A woman with whom Graves had been intimate enters. She has taken poison and is dying. She confesses to killing Graves.

"The Mayor of Filbert"

Triangle Special Presents Thrilling Prohibition Story With Jack Richardson in Title Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story on which the Triangle seven-part production, "The Mayor of Filbert," is based is one of current interest, which, put over in a large way should have big drawing powers. Jack Richardson, the featured member of the cast, plays a double role which affords many opportunities. Unfortunately the shaping of the production has not been guided by a master hand, a fact which interferes with the definite outlining of the story, and with the convincing quality of the detail. Many of the players are allowed to overact their parts. Some of the best work in the picture is done by J. Barney Sherry, Ben Alexander and William Dyer. The picture contains a strong plea for prohibition, and is liable to wield considerable influence.

World's Releases for June Number Five Features

WORLD PICTURES announces its releases for June and these include five big pictures. Evelyn Greeley leads off on June 2 with "Phil for Short," written by Clara S. Beranger and Forrest Halsey and directed by Oscar Apfel. Hugh Thompson appears as her leading man and the supporting company is one of the strongest ever seen in a World Picture. Included in the cast are Jack Drumier and a number of other film favorites.

Second on the list for the month comes "Thru' the Toils," which is scheduled for release on June 9. Koby Kohn wrote the story and Harry O. Hoyt is the director. Montagu Love, returning from a short sojourn in the spoken drama, celebrates his re-entrance into picture work by starring in this production. Eileen Cassidy plays opposite Mr. Love and Joseph Burk and John Davidson are prominent in the cast.

The newcomers appear in the World release scheduled for June 16. They are Betty Compson and George Larkin, who are co-starred in "The Devil's Trail," a story of the great outdoors directed by Stuart Paton. The story of this production is laid in the Canadian northwest, a region ripe in romance and action where full blooded men and women live, love and hate. Miss Compson has appeared in a number of Christie comedies and big feature productions.

June Elvidge appears on June 23 in "Love and the Woman," a story written by Philip Lonergan with the scenario prepared by Giles R. Warren. Tefft Johnson is the director. Philip Hatkin handled the camera. Prominent in the cast are George MacQuarrie, Rod La Rocque, Laura Burt and Ed. Roseman.

The final release for the month is a Madge Evans picture, "Home Wanted." The story for this production was written by Lucy Sarver. The last picture in which Madge Evans was starred was "The Love Net," and her appearance in this new picture is awaited with much interest.

Carey Attends Arizona Roundup.

Harry Carey, star of Universal's Western pictures, is playing the leading role in his newest picture as well as proving to the cowboys of the West that he is one of them in riding class. Carey and his band of cowboys are attending a roundup in Arizona and are also shooting scenes for his picture "A Man of Peace," which is being directed by Jack Ford from the original script by Frederick J. Jackson. In the supporting cast are Joe Harris, Duke Lee, Peggy Pearce, Jack Walters, Vesta Pegg, William Cartwright, Zoe Rae, and Howard Enstedt.

Paramount's Drug Store Scenes Fooled an Expert

THE care which is exercised by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in building its studio sets and the results obtained in simulating the real thing in backgrounds is paid an eloquent tribute in a letter recently received from the editor of American Druggist.

A member of the Famous Players-Lasky publicity department sent to the American Druggist a number of stills from Vivian Martin's new Paramount picture, "The Home Town Girl," showing the interior of a drug store, and suggested that they might be of interest to readers of the magazine. The editor replied:

"I thank you very much for the four pictures of Vivian Martin in 'The Home Town Girl.' I should like to use one or possibly more of them in American Druggist provided you give me the name of the drug store in which they were taken. This would add much to the druggist's interest in the pictures. It really is a very good interior and I cannot imagine that you would go to the expense of fixing up such an interior just for the one series of pictures."

Following the receipt of the letter, inquiry was made at the West Coast studios and it was ascertained that the scenes were made in a studio set.

Universal Comedy Companies Busy.

William S. Campbell has started work on the latest animal comedy, with the working title of "Wild Lions and Loose Bandits." These animal comedies are a depature in the comedy field and Universal expects them to become the leading comedy pictures on the market.

Neal Burns and Josephine Hill are working on a one-reel comedy with the tentative title of "Whose Job's Hardest." The one-reel feature is being directed by Al Santell.

Reggie Morris, formerly with the Sennett comedies, has just completed a one reel comedy entitled "Double Trouble."

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are said to have a side-shaker in their newest comedy vehicle, "The Professional Elopers."

Universal Completes "The Open Road."

Universal announces the completion of another Special Attraction in which Monroe Salisbury is starred, the title being "The Open Road." The production was directed by Rupert Julian, and was taken from the story by Bernard McConville. The scenario was prepared by Elliott J. Clawson.

The all star cast includes Rhea Mitchell, Alice Elliott, Sydney Franklin, Marion Skinner, Pat Moore, Alfred Allen, and Herschel Mayo.

Monroe Salisbury is cast as Tony, an Italian immigrant. The scenes of the picture are laid in New York's Little Italy and the West. The time depicted is about a decade ago. The story abounds in human interest from the start and has both sentiment and mirth in it.

Big Holubar Production Near Completion.

Allen Holubar is nearing the completion of the current super-production, "The Right to Happiness," at Universal City. Dorothy Phillips, the star, who has a dual role in this production, is supported by an all star cast, which includes William Stowell, Robert Anderson, Hector Sarno, Winter Hall, Henry Barrows, Margaret Mann, Stanhope Wheatcraft, and Alma Bennett.

Cincinnati Company Works for a Celluloid Divorce

THE Cincinnati Motion Picture Company doesn't believe in divorce as applied outside the moving picture industry, but within the realm of the celluloid drama it is working hard for the principle. But before you drop this copy of the World to dictate a letter of rebuttal to the Cincinnati Company let us finish the story.

The divorce which this concern is supporting is the divorce of the theatre from the home. Cincinnati is said to be preparing to pass an ordinance establishing two distinct units for films, one being the standard films used by the theatres and the other the safety film for the use of church, school, lodge and home. The safety film is a trifle narrower in width than the standard variety, and the Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, anticipating a movement throughout the country, has invented and perfected an adjustable perforating machine for standard widths and different perforations to match both safety and standard film.

The Cincinnati Company, which has its quarters at 216-220 Liberty street, has also invented a printer that will make narrow width prints from regular standard or narrow width negatives. Its products include display advertisements, titles, educational and commercial reels.

Pathe to Release Keenan's "The Master Man" May 25

THE MASTER MAN," first of the independently made photoplays from the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., Los Angeles studios will be released by Pathe on May 25. It marks the beginning of eight special productions in which Mr. Keenon is star, director and producer.

"The Master Man" shows a combination of intrigue and tragedy, and love interest. The original story is by F. X. James, a novelist of note, and the photodramatization was done by Jack Cunningham, a past master at the art of adapting stories for the screen. Though written out of the most startling political scandals laid bare in the last twenty years, the play deals with virtually contemporaneous times, without, however, a single reference to the European war.

hibitionists in a Western town and its anti-prohibition mayor.

Mayor Schmidt, of the town of Filbert, owned the most popular saloon and dance hall in the place, and with the help of his henchmen, Royal Denman and Mike McCarthy, ruled the town to suit his own pro-German ideas. The approach of the election season causes local politics to wax interesting, and Schmidt, called into conference with the heads of the prohibition party, falls to the floor with a heart attack. A stranger, down on his luck, and bearing a striking resemblance to Mayor Schmidt, happens along at the moment, and is prevailed upon to impersonate the mayor and work for the prohibition cause.

The real mayor, in an unconscious state, is placed in a vault, from which he escapes through failure of the conspiring parties to lock the door. His memory impaired through the fall, he is picked up and taken to a hospital in a neighboring town, where he is cared for until his memory returns. He sends for his henchmen who hurry him back to Filbert, and in the events which follow, they try to "get" Schmidt's double, and the wrong man is shot. The election is won by the "drys," and Schmidt's double is elected mayor. A little romance is swung into the story by way of obtaining human interest.

"The Mints of Hell"

William Desmond Gives Creditable Performance in Yukon Drama for Robertson-Cole.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE "snow stuff" in "The Mints of Hell," a Jesse D. Hampton feature for Robertson-Cole's program, is a strong drawing card in itself, even if the story of the play had failed to possess the absorbing character which it does. The production as a whole is a powerful presentation of life in the gold diggings of the Yukon, and the struggle of evil passions aroused by the lust of gold, against the better impulses of nobler types of manhood. Made from beginning to end in the snow country, the mind of the spectator is not for a moment diverted from absorbing the true atmosphere of the frozen North. The characters of the play are life-like in their interpretation —their instincts easily understandable.

The scenes in which the half-wit keeper of the cavern of flat gold participates stand by themselves as tributes to the capable acting of Frank Lanning. William Desmond, the featured member of the cast, makes a handsome and convincing hero of the North, and Jack Richardson in the role of Clay Hibbing, the villain of the picture, does some of his best work. In fact there is not a member of the cast, including Vivian Riche and Mrs. A'Costa, the only women of the party, who has not filled the bill to the last letter. The production is full of intense realism, with the only perceptible errors occurring in connection with the staking of the claim and the scooping up of the gold in handfuls from the bottom of the cave.

The Story.

The story of the "The Mints of Hell" takes as its central figure a tenderfoot, Dan Burke, who upon his arrival in the Yukon, hears of the mysterious valley from which one Chaudiare brings quantities of flat gold to be held in safe keeping for him by Bill Weed, the keeper of the Stag saloon in Sundown. Followed by the warnings of sourdoughs about the saloon, Bill starts off with his dog team to find the trail that leads to the unrecorded mine of Chaudiare. He is overtaken by a blizzard and, cold and exhausted, falls over a snow slope not far from the Chaudiare house.

The howling of his dogs attracts the attention of Chaudiare and his daughter, Aline, and they hurry forth to rescue the traveler. He is cared for in the home of Chaudiare until his nerves and half frozen limbs are mended. Chaudiare's extended absence on a hunting trip necessitates a journey to Sundown for supplies.

While in Sundown he treats Hibbing to a beating for a former attack on Chaudiare's pretty daughter, and returns to the cabin to find that he has been followed by Hibbing and his pal, who find the mine, stake the claim over Chaudiare's head, and start back to the recorder's office. Burke, realizing their game, restakes the claim in Chaudiare's name, beats them to the recorder's office, and wins pretty Aline Chaudiare for his wife.

Next Lila Lee Film Based on Kate Wiggins Novel

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN, the writer of innumerable clever stories and books which have had world wide circulation, wrote "Rose of the River," which has been chosen as the next Paramount picture starring Lila Lee. Will M. Ritchey did the scenario and Robert Thornby has been engaged to direct the production.

Miss Lee plays the part of a seventeen-year-old girl in a down-East settlement and the famous old game of "postoffice" is the beginning of a romance which, after many vicissitudes, ends delightfully for the principals.

Darrel Foss is in the leading role opposite Miss Lee. George Fischer has an important role and Sylvia Ashton is also in the cast.

Jans Reports Big Demand for Ham and Bud Reissues

F. E. BACKER, General Sales Manager of Jan Productions, Inc., states that a very large number of applications for territory on the series of "Ham and Bud" reissued one reelers have already been received, and many sales are being made which will be announced soon.

"Only about ten per cent. of the present day motion picture patrons have ever seen the funny Ham and Bud comedies," says Mr. Backer. "They were produced by the Kalem Company and released through General Film Company, beginning November 13, 1914, and since that time I'll venture to say the screen has made such a multitude of new friends that a new clientele now attends the theatre. These single reel comedies will therefore come as a pleasant surprise."

Ted Sloman in a Nutshell.

Edward Sloman, director of "The Westerners" from the novel of Stewart Edward White, is a native of London, England. One of his teachers was the author Israel Zangwill. Mr. Sloman comes from a family of theatrical people. His mother is a cousin to David Belasco. In addition to directing, he is interested in painting and writing, and has written several short stories and scenarios. "The Westerners" is a Benjamin B. Hampton Production of Great Authors Pictures, Inc., and will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"The Usurper" Climbing in Favor.

Although before the screen public for some weeks, "The Usurper," generally accounted Earle William's finest production, still continues at the head of the list of star productions being featured at the foremost screen theatres of the country.

In this production Mr. Williams has a typically proficient Vitagraph cast in his support. Louise Lovely is his leading woman, the others being Bob Russell, Frank Leigh, Billie Elmer, Jay Morley, Clyde McAtee, Audrey Chapman, Helen Carlisle, Bessie Eyton and Lillian Langdon.

"War Stuff" in Christie Comedy.

No one would suspect A. E. Christie of producing big battle scenes for a Christie Comedy, especially this late in the day, when "war stuff" in motion pictures is supposed to be passe. In a comedy which he has just produced, featuring Dorothy DeVore with Earle Rodney, he has, however, a "vision" so realistic it might be mistaken for a government weekly scene of Chateau Thierry. Harry Edwards appears as a Prussian officer, while George French and Thornton Edwards do the heavy lifting as victorious Americans.

Elaborate Art One-Sheet for Guinan Western Films

THE Frohman Amusement Corporation is preparing in connection with its two-reel Texas Guinan Western attractions a line of advertising matter such as is usually distributed in connection with productions of greater length.

In addition to other line of posters a special art one-sheet is being made in duplication of an oil painting, which is appropriate for framing and lobby display. These art single-sheet posters are to be distributed in every theatre in the United States. There will be no advertising matter on these posters aside from the autograph of Miss Guinan.

The Ritchey Lithographing Corporation is making the unique one-sheet. Miss Guinan is in Western costume, pointing a gun, and from whatever angle the poster is viewed the eyes of Miss Guinan and the muzzle of the gun will always point in the direction of the person looking at it.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces its reason for going to such lengths in getting out advertising display is to establish once and for all that a two-reel attraction of extraordinary merit can be booked as a feature, and played as such, thereby disproving the idea that one and two-reel productions are mere "fillers-in."

Pioneer Company Enlarges Film Editing Department

AS a result of the increase in business through its enlarged plan of operation, the offices of Pioneer Film Corporation are being enlarged and rearranged; separate offices will be provided for the salesmen in which to receive exhibitors.

The film editing department has been installed in spacious quarters with Donald I. Buchanan and William A. Rudkin in charge, assisted by Southard Brown.

Mr. Rudkin has had many years' experience in the film business, having been connected with Vitagraph in the early days, and for a time with the Gaumont Company in France. He has recently been associated with B. A. Rolfe and also with the Oliver Films.

Mr. Buchanan is a scenario man of wide experience, having been connected with the Vitagraph and Fox companies, also with Benjamin Chapin in the "Son of Democracy" series.

Record Many Re-Bookings on "Unknown Quantity"

COMPLETING its initial run in the larger theatres of the country, "The Unknown Quantity," a Vitagraph production based on the story by O. Henry, with Corinne Griffith in a starring role, is rapidly enlarging its territory to include hundreds of theatres heretofore not served.

"The Unknown Quantity" is a typically trenchant depiction of an economic problem in life as seen by the penetrating vision of one of the shrewdest analysts of human nature. That it's typically O. Henry neath-the-surface search for cause and effect has not been lost in the screen version is perhaps the highest compliment to Director Tom Mills and the capable acting forces headed by Miss Griffith.

The picture has aroused greater attention than any other Griffith subject to date and already re-bookings have been requested of various branch offices.

Haytian Voodoo Dances in Outing-Chester Picture

H. D. ASHTON, Outing-Chester cameraman, returned Monday, May 12, from a three months' expedition into Hayti, where in order to film one of the prohibited voodoo dances he was compelled to join in the wild gambol himself, and steal off to crank his machine whenever the fun got so fast and furious that his disappearance was not noticed.

There are only three of the old voodoo drums left on the island, and one of these Ashton brought back with him. It will be presented to the American Museum of Natural History later, but will for some time be displayed by first-run houses during the week they have the voodoo dance release.

Pioneer Starts Spring Drive

AS the result of a conference between the heads of the Pioneer Film Corporation, a force of salesmen and service experts will soon leave New York to visit the various exchange centers throughout the country.

The Pioneer is rapidly disposing of the state rights of "The Boomerang," and it is the purpose of the traveling force to get in touch with the independent exchangemen and co-operate with them in exploiting it, together with the specials which will shortly be offered to the trade by that company.

Prizma Announces New Releases.

Prizma announces that it has added to its list of subjects for immediate release through World Pictures, the following four natural color films: "Hawaii," "Glacier Park," "Old Faithful," "The Apache Trail."

So far Prizma has fourteen subjects covering a wide range that affords nature lovers splendid entertainment. The four last subjects are regarded by the Prizma officials as the best offerings that have been made by this concern.

A Story That Was Lived.

Stewart Edward White, the author, started his career of adventure when he left his father's timber land in Michigan for the Black Hills during the gold rush there. This exciting epic of American history served Mr. White as the foundation for "The Westerners," now being picturized by Great Authors Pictures, Inc., as a Benjamin B. Hampton production for distribution by Hodkinson. Many of the characters of "The Westerners" were taken from life and the main events of the story are actual history.

"Pretty Smooth"

Priscilla Dean and Francis McDonald Lead in Crook Film From Fresh Angle by Universal.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Universal attraction, "Pretty Smooth," is a six reel crook film from a fresh angle, and is easily very much better than the usual picture of its kind. The two young crooks, played by Priscilla Dean and Francis McDonald, are working together. They are about as unscrupulous as need be; but are reformed through the love each bears to the other. One of the specially good things about the picture is the way the background of these lives, the penitentiary, is dramatically made to loom darkly before them till each comes to fear not for himself or herself, but for the other. There is a deal of new ways of looking at things in the picture, and it holds through every foot of it.

Director Sturgeon has a cast of players capable of being human in everything they do and has kept his action lively and convincing. The staging, costuming and all the mechanical department of the picture are of high order.

The Story.

In the opening scene of "Pretty Smooth," we find Gertie, a rich woman's maid, foiled in her attempt to open her employer's safe. She has scratched it, and for an alibi calls up the police and says a burglar is in the house. Before the officers come, Hartigan, a famous safe cracker, enters and breaks the safe. She recognizes him, but it is too late.

He is sent to jail. A year later she helps him escape from St. Guentine, and they go to New York. They have planned a big job when Gertie's sister comes. She has just been released from Auburn and has the consumption. This makes Gertie think. She forbids Hartigan to touch the job and offers to do it herself. Hartigan won't hear of this, and together they decide to go straight for each other's sake.

They invest with a promoter of real estate, who tries to put over a raw deal, and fails through the help of Gertie's sister and Gertie. Hartigan goes back to his old apartments. Two well-known crooks come to see him. Hartigan learns that Kersey, a Western detective, has located him and is on his way up. Gertie enters. The detective comes, and by an arranged plan they capture him. The crooks want to kill Kersey. Hartigan and Gertie save his life, and he lets them go since they have been living on the level.

"A Bachelor's Wife"

American Five-Reeler for Pathe Presents Mary Miles Minter in Irish Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

SOME of Mary Miles Minter's best work has been put into the American Film Company's five-part production, "A Bachelor's Wife," for the Pathe program. She has succeeded in impersonating the character of a refined Irish girl in a faithful manner. The picture's success has been made to depend largely on the work of the star, a fact which at times asserts itself quite loudly. In spite of the far-fetched character of the story, the picture has much interesting detail which is arranged in consistent sequence. It has also a strong vein of human interest that will appeal to the average public. The supporting cast has done good work, but the direction of the production lacks breadth of vision.

Cast.

Mary O'Rourke.....Mary Miles Minter
Norah Cavanagh.....Myrtle Reeves

The Story.

In "A Bachelor's Wife," the plot centers about the establishing the right of a wife and child to the protection of the husband and father. The stellar role is given to an Irish girl, cousin to the little mother in America, whose student husband has for the time forgotten her. Mary O'Rourke, the stirring young Irish girl, on her arrival in America and discovery of Norah Cavanagh's unhappy plight, sets about to rectify matters in her own forceful way.

One day, with her mind made up to make John Stuyvesant, son of a rich New York family, asknowledge his wife and baby, she takes the child and goes to the Stuyvesant mansion. Here she is met by the family doctor whom she astonishes by her statement, "This is your son's baby" Mrs. Stuyvesant, an invalid, overhears what Mary says, and she is compelled to present herself as the child's mother to prevent shocking the sick woman. This ushers in a situation which leads from one difficulty to another, until the son, John Stuyvesant, arrives on the scene.

Mrs. Stuyvesant, slowly regaining her lost health through the joy of having her son's supposed wife and baby with her, cannot be told of the mistake, which is explained when John's cousin, J. Frederick Stuyvesant, is introduced, and the marriage certificate reveals the fact that he is the man for whom Mary has been

Mysteries of Juggling Shown in Pathe Review

PATHE REVIEW NO. 10, released on May 25, offers an interesting and diversified selection of subjects. The Novograph slow motion pictures give a fascinating analysis of juggling; and, if the deft skill of the juggler has seemed amazing to us, these pictures, which show with slow deliberation just how the tricks are done, are doubly so. We have all been puzzled by the cunning art of the sleight-of hand expert, as he keeps various articles going in the air. The ultra-rapid camera, which slows the action to ten times less than normal, analyzes with remarkable precision, the dexterous movements he makes.

Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars contributes an odd animal study of "Odd Appetites." The gannet, for instance, likes fish and eats it whole, without waste. Equally so is the venerable, two hundred year old elephant tortoise. The net weight of Mr. Hippo is about two tons, but just hay in generous quantities satisfies his appetite. We are also shown that the Giraffe is a dainty eater and that he would probably prefer his meal served from the top of a skyscraper.

The ruins of Timgad shown in Pathecolor are not unlike the buried city of Pompeii. The review also shows, in Pathecolor, the cultivation of pear trees in Oregon.

Start Work on "Be a Little Sport."

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair have begun work on a new picture at the William Fox coast studios. The working title is "Be a Little Sport," and the production is said to afford ample scope for the bright and breezy comedy work with which these two youthful stars have become identified under the Fox banner. Scott Dunlap is directing. In the cast with Ray and Miss Fair are Lule Warrenton, George Hernandez, Leota Lorraine and Eugene Pallette.

"Courageous Coward" Not a War Film.

Probably because of its belligerent sounding title, the impression has been gained in some quarters that "The Courageous Coward," featuring Sessue Hayawaka, which Robertson-Cole released through Exhibitors Mutual, is a war picture. In an announcement, Robertson-Cole depreciate this impression. There is not even the faintest hint of war in the production. In reality the story centers about a young Japanese student, who after being apointed an assistant district attorney of San Francisco, sacrifices position and reputation to protect the man he believes the gilr he loves is about to marry.

Noah Beery

Jackson Gregory Novel as Starring Piece for Farnum

ANOTHER book by a well known author, has been purchased as material for a production starring William Farnum. This is "The Joyous Trouble Maker," by Jackson Gregory.

In "The Joyous Trouble Maker," which is a strong story of the West, William Farnum will appear as Dick Steele, the calm, almost presumptuous, happy-go-lucky "mining engineer, gentleman of adverse fortune, Lord of an empty pocket-book, and a full heart," who defies Beatrice Corliss, owner of the Queen's Ranch, the Little Giant Gold Mine and many millions of dollars besides—all inherited from wealthy and autocratic parents. Beatrice orders Dick Steel off her ranch, where he has staked out eighty acres.

It is not yet decided when William Farnum will begin work, but it is said that J. Gordon Edwards will direct the production as well as a number of others which are to be made for Mr. Farnum from well-known novels, the rights to which have been acquired by the Fox Film Corporation.

Gladys Brockwell in Western Role.

At the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., Gladys Brockwell has begun work on a western picture called "Sadie," which is said to be among the strongest productions in which she has appeared. Frank Beal is the director.

In this picture Miss Brockwell enacts the role of a slangy, self essayed Jabsas City waitress, whose breezy independence attracts the attention of a Western employment agency. The latter sends her on to Bagdad, near Death Valley. There she soon dominates the place—various citizens falling in love with her.

In the cast with Miss Brockwell are William Scott, Richard Hosson, Harry Dunkinson, Irene Aldwyn, Walter Long and Claire McDowell.

Exhibitor Lauds "From Headquarters."

B. Lee Smith, manager of the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, has just finished a week's run of "From Headquarters" and was so satisfied with the business garnered that he made haste to communicate with the Atlanta branch of Vitagraph and request first run booking of the succeeding Anita Stewart release, "Two Women." This latter production Mr. Smith will show at the Tudor for the week of May 19.

Mr. Smith, in a letter to George R. Allison, manager of Vitagraph's Atlanta branch, pays this tribute to the picture.

"This Vitagraph picture is strong, intensely human, thrilling and satisfying. My patrons were delighted with the production."

Hedda Nova Working on Poland Story.

Hedda Nova, the Russian actress, has begun work on "The Spitfire of Seville" the Joseph Franklin Poland story, which was originally intended as a vehicle for Priscilla Dean, the Universal star, who is now recovering from pneumonia. George Seigmann, recently honorably discharged from the army, is directing the production, which has an all star cast. Thurston Hall plays opposite Mlle. Nova. Others in the cast are Claire Anderson, Marion Skinner, Alfred Allen, Leo Maloney, Robert Gray and Edgar Allen.

Stuart Holmes
Who plays an important role in the Norma Talmadge Select feature, "The New Moon."

Wisconsin Theatre Breaks Record with Pathe Serial

AS an indication of the way in which the current Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," of which Ruth Roland is the star is winning popularity and breaking house records the country over, the following telegram was received by the Milwaukee branch of Pathe from Manager A. L. Robbarg, of the Majestic Theatre, Wausau, Wis.:

"Played first episode 'The Tiger's Trail' today Majestic Theatre to more than 1,500 persons."

In itself this telegram at first glance might not be considered important, but in connection with the explanation offered by J. H. Mergendes, assistant branch manager at Milwaukee, it at once asumes the proportion of a remarkable accomplishment.

"Here is a very remarkable record for a serial," says Mr. Mergendes, "considering the fact that the Majestic Theatre at Wausau seats only 350. Just imagine the mob that must have assembled there all day for Manager Robbard to play to 1,500."

"Final Close-Up" Is Shirley Mason's Best.

It is said that Shirley Mason does the finest work of her career in "The Final Close-up," her Paramount picture which is released May 18. She has the role of a little department store clerk who is befriended by a reporter. The character is wistful and sympathetic, and the star is said to give a wonderful portrayal.

Walter Edwards directed the picture, from the scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers. James C. Van Tree was cameraman. Francis MacDonald has the leading role, that of the newspaper man.

In the supporting cast are James Gordon, Betty Bouton, Eugene Surr and Mary Warren.

Stage Opera Ballet for Fox Film.

The Metropolitan Opera House Ballet was used in the making of Theda Bara's "La Belle Russe," the Belasco play adapted and directed by Charles J. Brabin. This story called for the ballet in certain theatrical scenes, wherein Miss Bara appears as a dancer.

The City Theatre on East Fourteenth street, owned by William Fox, producer of "La Belle Russe" was used to obtain the effects desired. The theatre was especially wired and lighted for the occasion, and the stage transformed to meet the artistic demands.

looking. The delinquent husband explains the situation by telling that he has been forced to meet the requirements of his father's will, which stipulates that he must still be a single man when the legacy is paid to him. A few moments of suspense occur when Mary bursts into the room with the wife and baby, as the lawyer is about to settle up the estate. Mary prevails on him to pay the legacy for the sake of the little heir, and later promises to marry John Stuyvesant.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star. She will pull stronger than the story, so work on her name and portrait, but hook up with the story and use the line "As true hearted as she is Irish" from the press book synopsis. This is especially good where there is a large Irish clientele. Play on the title with such appeals as "See Mary Miles Minter as a bachelor's wife."

"Khavah"

Zion Films Has Photoplay Depicting Principle of Filial Love and Duty in Hebraic Story by Sholom Aleichem.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

ZION FILMS presents a picturization of Sholom Aleichem's "Khavah" in the photoplay of the same name. The production, given in seven parts, depicts the great Hebraic principle of obedience to and respect for parents. There is much virtue in the theme, but several vices in its portrayal. The story unfolds a tale of love between Khavah, a Jewish girl, and Fedka, a Russian. They are deeply in love, and despite the objection of Khavah's father, they marry. Khavah is disowned, but in the end, when her parents are being evicted and driven from the town, she renounces her marriage vows, leaves her husband, and goes with her parents for whatever the future holds.

The background of the photoplay is Russian. The simple ways of the peasants are shown, by a largely Russian cast, but too much attention has been paid to the domestic duties and the womanly cares of the household. It is the time devoted to such detail, and the many appearances of Khavah's father in an old Russian cart that drag the picture. The production is melodramatic, losing no opportunity for heavy acting.

The appeal of "Khavah" is directed mainly to the people of whom Sholom Aleichem, considered the Jewish Mark Twain, wrote. Alice Hastings in the title role gives an excellent and sympathetic interpretation.

Golde.....Billee Wilson
Parasha.....Sonia Radin
Ivan.....Phil Sanford
Khavah's sister.....Anna Kay

Story by Sholom Aleichem.
Directed by Charles E. Davenport.

The Story.

"Khavah" is a story of simple peasant folk. The Jewish girl, Khavah, falls in love with Fedka, a Christian. Her father, Tobias the dairyman, fearful for the religion of his daughter, arranges a marriage for her with the son of a Jewish merchant, but Khavah refuses to be sold, and marries Fedka. Her family renounces her and mourns her as dead. Life becomes a round of drudgery for Khavah in Fedka's home. Ivan, Fedka's father and starosta of the village, is ordered by the Czar's officers to banish Tobias from the village. When the order is read, Khavah's love for her parents triumphs over that for her husband. She renounces her marriage vows, becoming once more a Jewess, and takes her way out of the village with her own family.

Advertising Angles: If you play this where there is no considerable Jewish population, offer it as a novelty. Tell that Aleichem is known as the Jewish Mark Twain. Hammer on this angle and the fidelity of coloring and you can sell it as a novelty.

"Riders of Vengeance"

Six-Part Universal Special Features Harry Carey in Thrilling Tale of the West.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE six-part Western drama, "Riders of Vengeance," a Universal Special Feature, has many commendable points to its credit. Harry Carey, the featured member of the cast, gives a pleasing portrayal of the role of Cheyenne Harry, with pretty Seena Owen in the feminine lead. The picture is well made, the dramatic situations are skilfully developed, and the suspense of the story is well sustained. It also contains much to please the eye by way of artistically chosen locations. One of the chief faults of the picture lies in the fact that an abnormal num-

"Topics of Day" Booked for the Keith Circuit

"TOPICS OF THE DAY," selected from the world's news by the Literary Digest and produced by Timely Films, Inc., has been booked for the Keith circuit, each film for seven days run. The arrangement includes eight houses in the New York district, and Indianapolis, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Toledo, Dayton, Youngstown, Ohio, and Louisville.

Omaha audiences have shown the keenest appreciation of the short feature which is booked at the Rialto. It was a big hit from the very start and Manager H. M. Thomas speaks in highest appreciation of it in a communication to Pathe Exchange saying:

"Permit me to compliment you upon your new release 'Topics of the Day.'

"I have just shown the first of these films, and I want to tell you right now that I would not think of running a program in the future with this feature eliminated.

"I watched my audience very closely during the week of the first showing of this subject, and the film went over so big that it convinced me you have something that the public actually wants and enjoys."

Beginning the carefully planned national campaign to get a record-breaking distribution of "Topics of the Day" the Literary Digest on May 3, in the course of a quarter page display in 300 newspapers, gave a conspicuous place to the growingly popular "punch" paragraphs dealing with social and political and other foibles of the hour.

Jenkins Uses Striking Publicity.

A striking and original bit of publicity work by an exhibitor comes from J. C. Jenkins, manager of the Auditorium Theatre at Neligh, Neb. Mr. Jenkins issued an attractive herald twelve inches in length carrying two column filled with an illuminating article on Theda Bara and her purpose in interpreting the role of "Salome" in the William Fox super-production, which Mr. Jenkins was billing for a run at his theatre.

He dwells on her service in the Liberty Loan drives, and begs his patrons to disabuse their minds of the idea—if it exists—that immorality is the keynote of "Salome." He urges that they fix their attention on the beauty of the scenes and the lovable character of John the Baptist, while appreciating at the same time the artistic portrayal of the Biblical character, Salome.

Beautiful Scenic Effects in "When Doctors Disagree"

THE new art of photography, in which the selection of artistic locale plays an all-important part, has probably never been so well developed as by Director Victor Schertzinger in Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn play, "When Doctors Disagree," released May 25.

In "When Doctors Disagree" Mr. Schertzinger and the Goldwyn location man, Ray Moore, have chosen unusually scenic exteriors with evenly-balanced, regular grouping. Many of the scenes are laid in the woods of the San Bernardino mountains, with their deep, clear pools, wonderful waterfalls, thickly-foliaged trees, great rocks and deep ravines. Others are in the peaceful vicinity of Ferryville, with its quaint rusticity, its weather-beaten and vine-covered farmhouses and fertile meadows with their winding roads and streams. The old-fashioned repose of the squatty farmhouse, in which a great deal of the action of the opening of the picture transpires, is typical of the American small town, and its curious furnishings take one back to the days of Boston tea parties and Salem witch-craftiness.

Mr. Schertzinger never over-lights his scene, flooding the eye of the camera with sunrays or Klieg glimmers. Instead, he rather diffuses the light in soft profusion throughout his scene, omitting direct rays flashed onto the star, or the much-used "halo" effect of the sun shining through Miss Normand's hair.

In his scenes in the woods, Mr. Schertzinger has arranged his lighting so that the sun does not stream in sharp rays through the overhead foliage, which gives a well-defined balance to the screen pictures.

Harrisburg Theatre Changes Hands.

The Greater Victoria Theatre, of Harrisburg, Pa., considered one of the most modern, up-to-the-minute picture houses of the capital city of the keystone state, has been sold by the three George brothers, James, Athens and Charles, to the Stanley Company, of Philadelphia. The transaction involved a large sum of money, as the Hope Jones Unit Type organ was installed at a cost of $25,000 and the theatre has a seating capacity of 2,200. The purchase price is reported to be somewhat above $300,000.

"Humanity" Film Receives High Praise from Pastor

AMONG the most recent testimonials received by Universal praising its super-production, "The Heart of Humanity," is the one of the Rev. Francis J. Finn, head of the St. Xavier College in Cincinnati. Rev. Finn has a national reputation as a contributor to the literature world. He recently witnessed a showing of the production and said that he considered it to be wonderful in every way.

Thomas Berta, manager of the Grand and Oracle theatres, in Rock Springs, Wyo., says that the picture broke all records for his theatres and that he showed to 40 per cent. of the population of the town. The picture was run for three days in Rock Springs and the receipts on the last day were $20 more than those on the first. The fact that Rock Springs has a population of approximately 3,500 proves conclusively that this production is a safe feature for a small town.

Mr. Berta says that he exploited the picture through the use of a mailing list secured from the county court house and newspaper advertising. Additional publicity was obtained through invitations issued to all allied soldiers and sailors.

Another exhibitor of Wichita, Kan., stated that he packed his theatre for six days, and that with a charge of 25 cents for matinees and 50 cents for evening his receipts increased daily. He added that he expected to play a return engagement.

Mme. Amazar Likes Picture Work.

Elvira Amazar, a Russian operatic contralto, beloved of New York and Chicago audiences for her appearances with the Chicago Grand Opera and Boston Opera Companies in "Thais," "Rigoletto," "Faust," "La Boheme," "Carmen" and "Louise" with Mary Garden, is planning a metropolitan concert tour for the autumn with enthusiastic support of all her operatic friends, including Cleofonte Campanini and John McCormack.

Mme. Amazar, who is the wife of Muratore Baklanoff, one of the best known artists in opera, is now engaged with the Four Star Pictures Corporation under Director George Irving, playing Olga, the Russian beauty, in Augustus Thomas' new sociological drama, now in work at the Biograph studio. Producer Harry Raver induced Mme. Amazar to join the cast because she is a Russian as well as beautiful and understands the part. Mme. Amazar is frankly in love with the pictures and full of enthusiasm.

Story by Harry Carey and Jack Ford.

Directed by Jack Ford.

The Story.

A note of tragedy injects itself into the very beginning of the story of "Riders of Vengeance," when the enemies of Cheyenne Harry wreak vengeance on him on the day of his wedding by shooting into the wedding party as it steps from the door of the church. The bride and father and mother of Cheyenne Harry are killed on the spot, and the sorrowful bridgegroom immediately leaves the scene of the tragedy, coming back a year later to avenge his loved ones. A notice posted on the town pump announces to the terrified inhabitants of Mesquite that he is back, "gunning" for certain individuals named in the announcement.

One by one he "gets" them, until it comes to Gale Thurman's turn. Just at this point of the story Thurman's pretty bride-to-be comes on the scene, is rescued from a stage coach hold-up by Cheyenne Harry, and is cared for in the cave which he makes his home. A thrilling scene on the desert where, side by side with Thurman, he fights a common enemy, leads up to the climax of the story, when the love between the girl and Cheyenne Harry is revealed.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE SECRET ASSASSIN (Pathe), May 25.—Episode No. 6 of "The Tiger's Trail" opens with a continuation of the thrilling scene where Belle is about to enter the room where the sacred tiger is devouring a piece of meat. She escapes the tiger and also her pursuers by climbing to the top of the cabin. In flight from the cabin she is forced to pass over a deep gully by means of a rope line, and escapes being shot by hiding behind a rock. The picture closes on a scene in her room where, when she is about to find a new hiding place for the idol, the tiger man enters and grasps her by the throat.

BACK TO THE WOODS (Rolin), An amusing farce comedy in which Harold Lloyd plays the role of a millionaire kid, who goes to the Canadian wilds to hunt. Bears follow him, but he fails to see them and wanders along looking always into the beyond for something his imagination has painted. His valet, an eccentric figure, meets with a wild animal who devours the contents of his lunch basket, while he makes his getaway. A tussle with one of the bears which follows the young millionaire to the cabin, affords some amusing scenes.

Universal Film Company.

CALL THE COPS (L-KO Comedy).—Billy Armstrong is featured in this two-reel comic subject, which abounds in knockabout scenes. Some of the stunts are laughable, but there are one or two traces of vulgarity, which brings down the general average of the production. It is hardly up to the L-KO average.

LET FIDO DO IT, (L-KO), April 16.—Eva Novak and Dick Smith appear in this two-reel comic. This is full of entertaining stunts, though it does not boast of any particular plot. The work of the trained dog at the beginning is excellent and will surely please. The scenes occur on a farm and wind up with a good chase. This is a first rate comic subject of its type.

BY INDIAN POST (Western), April 12.—A two-reel western comedy, adapted from a story by William Wallace Cooke, with Pete Morrison as the hero. The plot is of a light, humorous sort, dealing with a love letter written by the hero to his adored one, which is delivered by an Indian. They are married under difficulties and ride away on horseback after the ceremony. This contains some good riding scenes and is an enjoyable number.

IN BAD ALL AROUND (L-Ko), May 14.—One of the best of recent L-Ko subjects, except for a few slight touches of vulgarity, which we think are funny enough to get by without great offense. Phil Dunham, Charles Dorety and Eva Novak are in the cast. This is full of comic action of a pleasing sort, and will bring many laughs.

THE BULLSKEVIKI (Star Comedy), May 12.—One of the funniest comedies yet shown, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Mildred Moore. The former appear as newspaper reporters, and the latter as a vamping Russian countess. This is a laughable "Bolsheviki" burlesque in which Eddie and Lee find themselves obliged to commit all sorts of crimes, but wake to find it all a dream. Mildred Moore is very pleasing as the countess.

FLAMES OF DEATH (Universal), April 21.—Episode No. 6 of "The Red Glove." This opens with the escape of Billie and Thode from a burning cabin. They barely escape drowning in a swift stream and later come into contact with the Vulture and La Mothe. Thode is made prisoner and Billie falls from a tree trunk between two high cliffs. The instalment is full of picturesque action and carries the interest well.

A DESPERATE CHANCE (Universal), April 28.—Episode No. 7 of "The Red Glove." After her fall from the tree trunk to a stream below, Billie sees the red glove and manages to get it. She makes a temporary captive of the Vulture, single-handed, but he escapes. There are other exciting events, and the number closes with a realistic collision between an auto and a train.

FACING DEATH (Universal), May 5.—Chapter 8 of "The Red Glove." This begins with the auto crash pictured at the close of the last number, a repetition justified by the realistic nature of the occurrence. Billie and Tia Juana escape death. The Vulture leads a prison break, releasing all of his men. The Vulture and Wiley cut down an oil derrick, from which Billie springs to the roof of a nearby house. The number is full of interesting action.

FUN IN A FLAT (Star Comedy), May 5.—A Lyons and Moran comedy, in which Eddie and Lee are assisted by Mildred Moore and Grace Marvin as their respective wives. Moving day and spring house-cleaning give a timely interest to this subject. An overflowing bathtub and a gas explosion are amusing features of a general mixup in the flat. This carries the interest well.

THE EXPERT ELOPER (Star Comedy), April 28.—A good comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The latter appears as a fresh young fellow who tries to help Eddie elope with his intended bride. Lee manages to get hold of the maid by mistake and gets things generally mixed up in an amusing way. A typical success of its kind.

Vitagraph.

"THE MAN OF MIGHT" (Vitagraph),—The title of this episode of the serial made like a feature is called "The Prey of the Volcano." It ends when the band of Aztec Indians who have captured the adventurers, send them on a queer sled into the smoking crater of a volcano. Only the producers know how they are going to get out of this fix. Here is surely a marvelously finished instalment of a remarkable serial. The Aztec sets of this episode would have done credit to any big attraction released. It is breathlessly exciting.

Prints of "The Westerners" Reach Hodkinson Office

NOT only exhibitor but producer interest in the big releases during the summer innovation of Benjamin B. Hampton and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will be keenly recalled in a few weeks, when Stewart Edward White's first great screen production, "The Westerners," the initial production of Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., begins playing in the principal cities of the country.

"The Westerners" negative and working prints have just been received from the California studios where Mr. Hampton has been working for months. Mr. White's story has been made on all-star lines instead of following the single-star standards which have dominated pictures for many years. Every role in the production is filled by a player who has been starred frequently by the larger companies of the industry.

Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Graham Pettie, Wilfred Lucas and little Mary Jane Irving are all stars of this powerful drama of the gold rush into the Black Hills of Dakota. The directorial work of Edward Sloman contributes still another star element to the production.

Within a fortnight prints of "The Westerners" will be in the hands of the thirty Hodkinson offices across the nation for showing to exhibitors. This production and all others offered through Hodkinson will be offered to exhibitors singly under the recently announced Hodkinson open booking policy, and it is worthy of comment that no bookings of "The Westerners" have been solicited or permitted in advance of the arrival of the prints at the branch offices. More than 500 contracts with representative big theatres, offered in advance of the completion of this story, have been declined.

Other famous Stewart Edward White stories controlled and to be produced by Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., are: "The Riverman," "The Leopard Woman," "The Rules of the Game."

New Pathe Serial Is Story of Crook Life.

"The Great Gamble," the Western Photoplays, Inc., serial to be released August 3 by Pathe Exchange, Inc., is a tense gripping story of crook life for which the entire United States was searched in an effort to find suitable locations. Actual exteriors in six states are shown in the action of the picture.

The co-stars are Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison. Joseph A. Golden is both author and director of the picture.

Three New Ford Releases Announced by Goldwyn

THE next three Ford Educational Weeklies to be released through Goldwyn disclose the romantic interest which surrounds the history of common things.

"From Mud Dug," the story of pottery making, takes audiences through the largest pottery kilns in the world, where, instead of meeting the potter of biblical days who shaped his vessel by hand on a slowly revolving wheel one may find row on rows of vases and bowls being turned, shaped, polished and decorated by modern power methods. This picture is released May 25.

"The Land of Ukelele," is a visit to the Hawaiian Islands. The beach of Waikiki, with its happy surf-riders, and the vistas obtained from an ox-cart or from the cow-catcher of a baby engine on a narrow-gauge railway, give a week of instructive travel in a quarter of an hour. Released June 1.

In "The Only Way," the traffic copy, the railway guard, the teamster and the fireman tell stories of careleness or thoughtlessness to drive home the warning of "Safety First." June 8 sees the release of this production.

Elaine Hammerstein Starred in Selznick's "Love or Fame"

SELZNICK PICTURES announced that "Love or Fame?" is the title of the first production in which Elaine Hammerstein will be featured. The scenario is from an original story by S. Jay Kaufman and is of unusually strong plot interest. It concerns a young girl who aspires to become a great opera star and who is called upon to decide between a big career or the man she loves.

Can a woman succeed in a professional career and retain her honor without paying the price? This is the question raised in "Love or Fame?" The heroine is informed that the feat is impossible, yet she is determined to try it. Her trials and temptations form the action for an absorbing drama.

In the role of the ambitious singer who is determined to have both love and fame Elaine Hammerstein has a part ideally suited to her and one that brings out all her charms and ability.

Selznick intends that every one of Miss Hammerstein's coming productions shall be something big, something unusual that will lend itself to special exploitation. The company is weighing every story from the exhibitor angle as well as the star angle before deciding upon it.

Novel Title for Fox Film.

To obtain the proper theatrical atmosphere and color in the filming of "Words and Music By——," the William Fox vehicle which stars Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, Director Scott Dunlap made use of the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles, taking scores of scenes within the structure. A chorus of fifty girls and an audience of nearly 300 in full evening dress were utilized—at a large cost over the expenditure which might have been made with a disposition to slur the effects desired. The result is a remarkable series of scenes of the utmost realism and dramatic effect.

Miss Fair plays the role of a prima donna in "Words and Music By——" and appears on the stage supported by the fifty chorus girls—who are all professionals. Albert Ray appears as a musical conductor, directing the premiere of his own libretto—the songs of which are sung by Miss Fair."

"As a Man Thinks" Makes Stir in East and West

WHAT newspaper and word of mouth advertising combined will do for a motion picture was revealed last week in Denver, where the first Harry Raver-Augustus Thomas-Four Star screen drama, "As a Man Thinks," made a record for itself and for Talbot's America Theatre, Denver. In advance of its first presentation at the America, Manager Talbot advertised the film liberally.

"It was the kind of production I felt I could safely leave on my screen to sustain the America's volume of patronage," said Mr. Talbot in New York at the Hotel Algonquin, where he received his daily box office reports from his Denver associates. "As a Man Thinks" opened to a one day's record business for the house, built up this box office level still farther with each succeeding day and wound up its week by giving us the best Saturday we have had in more than a year. This is the kind of dramatic production that causes patrons to talk and the effect of their talking is visible in the box office receipts.

In Two Crandall Theatres.

A similar experience has been had with "As a Man Thinks," by Harry M. Crandall, the big Washington, D. C., exhibitor, who adopted the unusual policy of using two prints and running this production simultaneously, day and date, at his big Washington Metropolitan and his Knickerbocker, the two leading units of the Crandall chain in the Capital City.

Dayton Books All Larry Semon Comedies.

The Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, has booked the Larry Semon comedies in their entirety. The first of this new series is entitled "Well, I'll Be ———!" As the inaugural production of the series it is being boosted by the advertising department of the Dayton, of which Mark Gates is managing director.

Right on top of this announcement by the Dayton Theatre, comes news from Montreal, Canada, that the Montreal, one of the biggest picture theatres in that city, has also booked the Larry Semon series.

A. J. Talbot, manager of the American Theatre in Denver, also has booked the Semon comedies, in addition to running Vitagraph's other comedy series.

"Tiger Lily" Announced as Margarita Fisher's Next

MARGARITA FISHER has commenced work at the American's Santa Barbara studios on her new production, "The Tiger Lily." This is said to be a vivid swiftly-moving story from the pen of Joseph Franklin Poland, and was selected in fulfillment of the American's desire to present Miss Fisher in a role that would be more exacting emotionally than parts in which she has lately appeared. It is an absorbing story of the romance of a beautiful Italian girl living in America, and embodies a rare combination of humor and pathos that is admirably suited to Miss Fisher's capabilities.

For the star, Poland has created the engaging role of "Pepita," known among her people as "The Tiger Lily," because of the tiger-like fierceness and agility that commingle with her grace and purity. Through her efforts to keep peace and harmony in her little community she becomes involved in a chain of unusual circumstances, from which she emerges as the affianced sweetheart of a young American millionaire.

Emory Johnson is appearing opposite Miss Fisher and the cast includes also George Periolat, J. Barney Sherry, E. Alyn Warren, Mme. Rosita Marstini, Beatrice Van and Frank Clark.

The production is being directed by George L. Cox.

"Pretty Smooth" Is Priscilla Dean's Next.

A girl crook had the fatal habit of talking aloud to herself. Naturally she couldn't be a successful thief for a long time and that is perhaps the reason she decided later to go straight. That, in a few words, tells of the part played by Priscilla Dean in her new Universal photo-drama "Pretty Smooth," which will soon be released as a Universal Special Attraction. The story was written by Bayard Veiller. The story was adapted to the screen by Waldemar Young of the Universal scenario staff and the production was directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

The scenes of the drama are laid in the fashionable and underworld sections of New York and San Francisco. The picture is in six reels, and is a smooth running affair.

Change Title of Minter Film.

Film-cutters are busy, according to word from American studios, preparing for shipment of the production of the new picture in which Mary Miles Minter soon will make her appearance, originally titled "Mary O'Rourke." That name, however, proved such a tongue-twister for non-Hibernians, that it has been changed to "A Bachelor's Wife."

The film has undergone the biggest part of the cutting process, and the trimming is now being administered. Director Emmett J. Flynn is supervising work of the production, which makes his first directorial effort for the "Flying A."

The story and scenario were written by Joseph Franklin Poland.

Exhibitors Praise "The Veiled Adventure."

While exhibitors in every part of the country are praising Constance Talmadge's current Select Picture, "The Veiled Adventure," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, Miss Talmadge is putting the finishing touches on her coming Select attraction, "Happiness a la Mode." Even at this early date exhibitors who have already played "The Veiled Adventure," are making anxious queries concerning Miss Talmadge's forthcoming attraction, and although no release date has as yet been announced, hundreds of requests have been received for early bookings.

A Few Lessons in Facial Treatment Are Given Here for the Ladies.
By Margarita Fisher and Olga Grey in their cave-woman scene from American's "Trixie from Broadway."

"Man Who Turned White" Is One of Hampton's Best

THE MAN WHO TURNED WHITE," starring H. B. Warner, which will inaugurate the Superior Picture series released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual, is one of the most pretentious productions made by Jesse D. Hampton.

In this story of the Bedouins, laid in the atmosphere of mysticism, romance and treachery, it became necessary to use not only a big cast of selected players but hundreds of extra people for the street and desert scenes.

A number of real Arabs were found and camels were secured from a circus which happened to be wintering in Southern California. It is said that this is the first time a producer in the Los Angeles film colony has obtained real Arabs.

Mr. Hampton spared no expense to get all his atmosphere. Every costume store in Los Angeles was visited for the correct wearing apparel for the players.

The Soudan, where the story is laid, is a land of love and intrigue, where the favorite pastime of the Arabs is to plot the death of some one. Therefore Hampton faced a difficult problem obtaining an actor who could play an Arabian villain as said villain really would act. He hit upon Manuel Ojeda, a Mexican who has frequently been cast in heavy roles, and entrusted him with the task of impersonating Joudar, the scheming Arab.

Jay Dwiggins as Mons. Mirabeau does all that could be asked of him.

Eugenie Forde will be welcomed back to the screen in the first Warner offering, playing Mme. Mirabeau.

Newman Poster Frames in Four Brentlinger Houses

THE Newman Manufacturing Company, 719-721 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, with branch located at 68 West Washington street, Chicago, manufacturers of brass and wood poster and photo frames, easels, railings and ticket choppers, has equipped the four theatres of which A. F. Brentlinger is director general, with the latest corrugated brass poster and photo display cabinets, with hinged doors and glass, made to fit around the theatre front. The four theatres are the Liberty, Terre Haute; Orpheum, Fort Wayne; Murray and Murret of Richmond, Indiana.

The Newman company is installing these unit display cabinets in some of the best theatres throughout the country. It has installed them in practically every large theatre in Indianapolis, among which are the Alhambra, Lyric, Colonial, Isis, Regent, New-Show, Rialto, Keystone; and in Louisville, Alamo, Rex, Strand, Mary Anderson; and in Springfield, Majestic, Princess, Hippodrome, Columbia, Liberty, Colonial; and in Cincinnati, Strand, Grand, Lyric, Family, Walnut, Bijou, Alhambra, Star, Royal, Norwood Plaza, Colonial.

The company is preparing a large catalogue, showing attractive displays and display frames, which will be sent gratis to theatre managers, upon request.

"Hell on Earth" Select's Special Half Completed

WORK is progressing rapidly on "Hell on Earth," a coming Select Pictures Special Attraction in which Sgt. Arthur Guy Empey will be starred, and according to latest reports the production is already half finished.

Contrary to what its name implies, "Hell on Earth" is not a war picture, nor are there any scenes showing armies in action, trench-digging, spies, nor any other of the many operations necessary in carrying on a world war. The story does, however, concern situations and problems which have arisen in America since the signing of the armistice.

"Hell on Earth" is an original story by Sergeant Empey, and the continuity for the screen was prepared by William Addison Lathrop. The director is Wilfrid North.

Florence Evelyn Martin will be seen in support of Sergeant Empey. Other well known persons in the cast are Marguerite Courtot, Betty Blythe, Sallie Crute, William Dunn and Charles A. Stevenson.

Ford Uses Big Tank in Serial.

Probably the largest tank ever used for under water scenes in motion pictures will be used by Director Francis Ford in his serial "The Mystery of the 13," now being produced. A fight between two divers, in diving apparatus, and a swimmer, will be one of the thrills of the third episode. Besides Rosemary Theby, Francis Ford, and Arthur Troutt, a diver of international reputation, the tank will contain seals, large fish and the wreck of a ship.

Director Riesenfeld Dines Writers and House Chiefs

AT the Hotel Commodore on the evening of Wednesday, May 7, Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, entertained at dinner two score representatives of the trade and daily press and his staff. The pleasant and informal occasion served also to introduce Ralph Edmunds, publicity director of the two houses. Mr. Riesenfeld made a brief and interesting address, in which he expressed to the members of his executive staff his appreciation for their work since he has occupied his present position. Mr. Edmunds also spoke briefly, asking the co-operation of the press representatives—and from the cordial greeting extended to him as well as to his chief, there was every indication that he would get it.

Mr. Riesenfeld in the course of his remarks stated that the normal expense for the two theatres each week ranged between ten and twelve thousand dollars. The director qualified the statement by saying this was true before the curtains were parted on the shows. Amplifying the particular remark one of his staff said later that the weekly cost of the orchestras without taking account of the soloists amounted to $4,000 for each house.

Reardon Goes to Western Exchange.

John Lester Reardon has severed his connection with the Boston office of the American Feature Film Company to accept the management of one of the largest exchanges in the West. Mr. Reardon has been connected with American for the past five years in the capacity of assistant manager, and carries with him the best wishes of the Metro staff.

Mr. Reardon is succeeded by E. L. McEvoy, the hustling traveling representative of "The Birth of a Nation," who was previously in charge of Metro's New Haven office.

Guy C. Smith Returns from World-Wide Trip

GUY CROSWELL SMITH has returned from a twenty months' trip around the world in the interests of the government official film service. Leaving New York in July, 1917, he went first to Japan, thence to Korea, Manchuria and Siberia to Russia, arriving there during the Kerensky regime and before the Bolsheviki had found their fame. Mr. Smith remained in Russia nearly a year, divided between Petrograd, Moscow and other parts of the country, and his experiences during the troublous times that started with the Bolshevik revolution were strenuous and anything but comfortable. He had several narrow escapes during some of the shooting "parties" that formed part of the daily life in Petrograd after the Bolsheviks gained control and real food was at all times an empty dream.

From Russia Mr. Smith went to Scandinavia, where from his headquarters in Stockholm he directed the distribution of American government films throughout Sweden, Norway and Denmark. He worked in connection with the War Trade Board in controlling the use of American films in these countries—under conditions which eventually brought the percentage of American pictures up to 95 per cent of all films shown. A year ago, Scandinavia was seeing about 50 per cent German drama films. The war control made it possible for Mr. Smith to impose upon every exhibitor that no German films were to be presented at the same performance with American subjects.

For the past several months, Mr. Smith has been located at Berne, Switzerland, in similar government service. He also visited Paris during the conference.

National Fire Protection Association Holds Meeting

THE twenty-third annual meeting of the National Fire Protection Association was held in Ottawa, Canada, May 6 and 8, when representatives of the motion picture industry were in attendance and actively participated in the deliberations.

The convention, which was the largest and most enthusiastic one ever held, was of special interest to the motion picture industry owing to the proposal for adopting scientific rules for the storage and handling of motion picture films.

The rules promulgated by the association are accepted generally by the underwriting interests throughout the country as standards upon which their rates are based, and they are followed by the state and municipal authorities in the passing of fire prevention laws and ordinances.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been for the past two years working to bring about the recognition on the part of members of the association of the necessity for proper fire safeguards, in order to stabilize the industry and command the respect of the community.

"America's New Industry"

SEND for this valuable book. And let us estimate how much money you can make in your location—no matter where.

Thousands of theatre men and concessionaires have found the Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine their greatest payer.

$600 to $3,120 Yearly Income

And all for a small cash payment—the machine buys itself on our easy payment plan.

It's costing you from $2 to $10 a day to be without this never-failing fountain of new-found profits. 90 bags a day means about $1,000 yearly profit.

No extra help needed—it runs itself as well as pays for itself—all you have to do is pour in the raw corn and the peanuts and collect the money.

BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn and Peanut Machine

Peanut Roaster now nearly doubles the machine's value. Another new attachment which sells salted peanuts is a source of great profit.

The machine is an ornament to your lobby—occupies waste space only, and less than 5 square feet of that. Letters from theatre men prove that the Butter-Kist machine not only increases the profits made on the usual attendance but that it brings new patrons to the show!

Valuable

A 3-cent stamp is all it costs you to get "America's New Industry"—a book full of facts—and a lot of information especially for you.

What's that? A bachelor's wife? Yes, just that. The picture is even more enticing than the title. It sets 'em all to talking the minute you announce its coming.

This is one of Mary Miles Minter's best.

Think of the way such a picture and such a title will lend themselves to an advertising splurge for YOUR theatre. Here's a bet that's too good to overlook. Hop to it now. See the American Film Company representative at your nearest Pathé Exchange today.

If you want "The Heart of Humanity" crowds to fill your theatre again use this 6-sheet POSTER

JEWEL Productions
1600 Broadway, New York City

PEOPLE never forget the stars of the big pictures they see. The little pictures come and go but the big ones—and their Stars—remain forever in the public mind. "The Heart of Humanity" is the biggest picture on the screen today. Everyone is seeing it—none will ever forget it—and when they see the name of DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "DESTINY" on your front they'll make good use of their opportunity to see the Bernhardt of the screen in her newest great production, directed by the same master hand that directed "The Heart of Humanity."

THE second big reason why "DESTINY" will do a record business for you lies in the numberless advertising angles. "DESTINY" may mean love at first sight, or last, or fortune, or disaster, or power to control one's fate, or the futility of fighting it. All these things are in the Posters, in the Newspaper Ads, in the Title. The word "DESTINY" makes its own picture—struggle, action, love, hate, romance, fame and fortune. They're all in this tremendous play—a drama that will send your patrons out in a glow of pleasure. View it at your nearest Jewel Exchange without delay.

ALLEN HOLUBAR'S SUPERPRODUCTION
THE PICTURE THAT WILL LIVE FOREVER

"Will you very kindly read this letter?"

Our success with Dorothy Phillips in "The Heart of Humanity" was so extraordinary that we cannot refrain from writing a few words of praise regarding this feature.

In the first place this picture was booked by us for two days at each of our theatres—the Savoy and the Jewel—to be played simultaneously, which is something we have never undertaken before.

As you know, the Savoy Theatre is located at 103d street and St. Clair avenue, and the crowd was so large that we were compelled to line the people from our lobby all the way to 105th street. This was the first night's showing.

The second night, in a drizzling rain, the crowd was even larger, which more than attested to the wonderful drawing power of this masterpiece.

We were equally successful at the Jewel. Over one hundred people bought tickets in advance for a theatre that does not sell reserved seats just to make sure that they would not be compelled to lose time at the box office.

In conclusion, we just want to say that we made one mistake. We should have booked the picture for a week instead of two days, and we say this knowing that we have never played a picture more than two days in either one of our theatres.

You are to be congratulated for this wonderful production, and we wish you all the success that such effort deserves.

Yours very truly,

Bill-board advertising for motion picture theatres is more effective than ever.

The public is bill-board trained. They have got the read-the-bill-board-habit. For amusement advertising the bill-board is an essential today in most communities.

MOORE

in ONE OF THE FINEST

By J. Clarkson Miller Directed by Harry Beaumont

He had to have an Irish sense of humor—this handsome young traffic cop.

For when he stopped her speeding chauffeur and saved her from an accident, she had him "broke" for his impertinence, and then made "The Chief" detail him to guard her home and keep her company while her father was away.

And he had to have an Irish love of a fight or a frolic to meet what happened then.

Tom Moore is all his old charming Irish self in his fifth Goldwyn picture, "One of the Finest"—the likeable, loveable "90 horse power romantic star," as the Trade Review calls him.

Exhibitors Know This Production's Values

Ten big first run theatres had asked by wire how quickly they could have "Sahara" for pre-release before even the first prints had been shipped to the branches.

Before lithographs and accessories had reached the stock shelves of our thirty offices.

Orders have been placed for thousands of copies of the first Hodkinson two-color insert for use as heralds by exhibitors at prices per thousand even larger than the rental that hundreds of exhibitors pay for a motion picture to be shown in their theatres.

We refuse to accept a booking or a reservation on "Sahara" until you have seen it at the branch office closest to you.

Are many of reputed wealth in destitute circumstances? Why should one thieve to donate to charity? Who was "the bird"?

Many were the problems that Jim Garside had to solve. And this adroit detective had never been known to lose his prey.

But when he captured Nancy she became free. Free from the bonds of heredity that had led her to yield to the fascinations of thievery. Free from the desires that had destroyed her father. Was this honest thief Garside's prisoner?

Olive Thomas—the heroine of this fascinating story. Her portrayal is a revelation of mystery, the mystery of human weaknesses and strength. "Love's Prisoner" is the story of a little girl who with unfaltering decision combats the very law that has brought swift tragedy to the door of the innocent—and wins.

FORM ORGANIZATION IN CINCINNATI

Body to Work with Old League—Seifert's Speech Arouses Great Interest—To Combat Music Tax

A NEW organization composed of Cincinnati exhibitors was formed at a meeting held May 15 at the Palace Hotel. The body is to be known as the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and will include in its membership all of the prominent exhibitors of Cincinnati, as well as those of Norwood, Ohio, a suburb, and the over-the-river cities of Covington, Newport, Bellevue, Dayton, and other smaller Kentucky towns. The new association will work in conjunction with the old exhibitors' league, which is affiliated with the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce. The meeting was largely attended and much enthusiasm was manifested.

J. A. Streitelmeier acted as temporary chairman and appointed a committee on organization, which is to report at a meeting to be held at an early date, at which a permanent organization will be effected and officers elected. The committee consists of J. A. Ackerman, Henry Levy, Otto Luedeking, George Talbot, Dr. Otto Dieckmann, Thomas Reilly and Frank W. Huss.

Seifert's Speech Arouses Interest.

John Seifert, of Dayton, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' Association, aroused great interest by his splendid address on "One Hundred Per Cent. Organization," in which he called attention to the many benefits to be derived from a strong organization and co-operation among the exhibitors. He outlined the work of his own organization and gave many pointers which will be of much value in the work of forming the local association. He declared that much can be accomplished by united action for the uplift of the business, which would be impossible of accomplishment through individual effort, no matter how able.

G. T. Kinzler, secretary of the Miami Valley Association, also addressed the meeting along the same lines and urged the advisability of the exhibitors getting together and sticking together in their efforts to better the trade in general. One of the subjects discussed at the meeting was the efforts being made by a number of the Eastern music publishing houses to enforce the ruling requiring the picture theatres to pay a tax on the music used during their performances. Plans were made to combat this ruling, and it is the general opinion of Cincinnati picture men that, by confining their incidental music to that published by houses which do not exact this royalty, the whole plan can be defeated. This effort would be useless, it is stated, without united action and this matter had a marked bearing in influencing the organization of this association at the present time.

Dr. Garr Starts on Little Trip of Ten Years or So

WHEN the "heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone," a Dallas, Texas, minister—cameraman—is going to be on hand to film him and reform him.

Driving a flivver the Rev. A. G. Garr, Adventist minister, has set forth on a world's tour which will carry him to places where the gospel has never been preached and no camera has ever clicked. His chief luggage is a moving picture camera.

"I am going to places in China, the Fiji Islands, the backwoods of Australia, and the jungles of darkest Africa," declares Dr. Garr. "I am going to preach the gospel and take moving pictures of the heathen worshipping their idols before conversion and then picture them when they have accepted Christianity."

Dr. Garr expects to be gone for a matter of ten years or so.

Harry Kline Appointed Big "U" Production Head

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal company, announces the engagement of Harry Kline, formerly general manager of the Globe Theatre and general representative of Charles Dillingham, to be the production manager of Universal City, Cal.

After spending several days at the home office of the Universal on Broadway, Mr. Kline left for the big U studios, Wednesday, May 14. Before leaving for the West coast, Mr. Kline stated that he believed the outlook for motion picture prosperity has never been better.

Vermont Likes Sunday Shows.

The success of the showing of motion pictures in Vermont on Sundays has been met with great favor. There has not been a complaint from any local community since the Sunday picture law went into effect. The exhibition of motion pictures previously had been prevented under an old "blue law" of the state which was placed on the statute books in 1878.

Goldwyn Announces Its Middle Europe Contracts

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which some weeks ago made the first announcement of post-bellum European expansion with the signing of the peace treaty at Paris, now announces that exhibitors in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia, Poland, and in fact all countries that were cut off from distribution, have definitely contracted for the showing of the entire output of Goldwyn Pictures up to September, 1919. Showings will start with the signing of the treaty. This means that every Goldwyn picture that has been made will now be sold in bulk to hundreds of European exhibitors.

With regard to this spread in distribution, Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager of Goldwyn, has a statement to make. "Within the three years of their existence," says Mr. Ziehm, "Goldwyn Pictures have managed practically to cover the world. In all the countries of the globe, save Russia and the Balkan states, Goldwyn Pictures are shown in abundance."

Mexican Border Towns See Boom After July 1

TOWNS along the Texas border, especially the smaller ones, expect a tremendous boom if the United States climbs on the water wagon July 1. Crowds of people seeking after hard liquor and other outdoor amusements are expected to visit the Rio Grande towns for daily trips across the international bridges. The Mexican state of Sonora, where prohibition has been effective for a year or more, prudently has voted wet in anticipation of the advent of delegations of parched throated pilgrims. The Government now issues cards whereby the border can be crossed without the use of a formal passport.

The Mexican cities are preparing to give the thirsty visitors everything they have got from horse racing and cockfighting to cold beer and tequila. Many moving picture theatres will be opened at various Mexican border cities, most of which are planning to go into the pleasure resort business on a wholesale scale.

Selznick Takes Big Insurance on O'Brien

LEWIS J. SELZNICK announces that he has had Eugene O'Brien insured for $1,000,000, this being the first instance in which a producer has protected himself by placing "limit insurance" on a male star. H. B. Rosen, the agent in the transaction, said that the company is writing its limit on Eugene O'Brien's life, and that several have already issued policies for one hundred thousand dollars each, toward the aggregate total, which will reach one million dollars.

O'Brien's first screen appearance was under the Select banner with Norma Talmadge, with whom he appeared in eight productions. His first Selnick picture will be entitled "The Perfect Lover."

NATIONAL EXHIBITORS MEET JUNE 25

THE annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America will be held this year on Wednesday and Thursday, June 25 and 26, at St. Louis, Mo. The headquarters for the convention will be the Hotel Statler. It is important to note the change from the originally scheduled date of June 11 and 12.

According to National Secretary Frank Rembusch and Hector Pasmezoglu, chairman of the convention committee, Missouri is going to live up to its reputation as the "Show Me State." St. Louis merely wants the exhibitors to "Show up," and it will joyfully undertake to "Show them."

There will be entertainment to make the session "worth while," according to the plans of the committee, but the convention will be devoted exclusively to the problems of the industry as they affect the exhibitor. Any one with an idea of special benefit to the welfare of the exhibitor will be welcome to present it. The officials of the convention, however, do not intend to have the ideas limited to those which arise out of floor discussion, but promise several big surprises themselves.

The tide of prosperity which is sweeping through the entire industry at the present time is expected to flood St. Louis with a record number of exhibitors on June 25 and 26. St. Louis can be reached from any point in the South or East in less than a day's time. A special train is being organized to run from New York and pick up exhibitors all along the line.

Exhibitors all over the country have been doing excellent organization work locally and this convention will not only provide a medium for the interchange of ideas, but will also present an opportunity for the amalgamation of beneficial policies into a strong national program.

Any details desired may be secured from Frank Rembusch, 1109 I. O. O. F. Building, Indianapolis, or from Hector Pasmezoglu, 302 Chestnut street, St. Louis.

Miami Valley League to Move Into Larger Quarters

ACCORDING to an announcement made by John Seifert, president of the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League, with headquarters in Dayton, that organization will move into larger quarters in June. Mr. Seifert stated that the present room in the Rauh Building was altogether too small for the league.

A suite of four rooms will be rented in the Lindsey Building, and permanent headquarters established there. A girl clerk will be at the league rooms all day.

Mr. Seifert also stated that all supplies for the members of the league would be bought direct from the manufacturers and sold to the members at cost plus a small margin to take care of the shipping expenses and incidentals. Mr. Seifert and George Oxrider, manager of the Maple Theatre, went to Chicago Saturday, May 17, to see about the purchase of music rolls by the league, which would in turn be sold to the members at cost.

Detroit Has Best Censored Films Says Police Sergeant

THAT pictures are better censored in Detroit than in any other city in the country and that films so censored are adopted by the rest of the state were concluding statements made by Sergeant Lester Potter, Detroit police censor, in an address strongly opposing state censorship given before the Women's Citizens' League at the Hotel Statler, May 14.

Mr. Potter, whose experience on the force extends back some fourteen years, four of which have been given entirely to censorship work, explained that picture censorship has resulted in eliminating entirely from films shown in Detroit everything tending to illustrate the technique of crimes. With 400 films on an average shown weekly in Detroit to probably 170,000 persons a day or 1,000,000 a week, Mr. Potter advanced the opinion that practically every little wrongdoing could be traced to the lure of the movies.

State censorship, he explained, would provoke endless litigation with film concerns and Detroit would have no recourse in case objectionable films were passed by a state board.

Southeastern Theatre Men to Meet June 15

A MEETING of the newly organized Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association had been called for Sunday, June 15, in Atlanta, and it is expected that at least 500 leading exhibitors of the territory will be in attendance.

A total of 151 motion picture theatres in several south-Atlantic states are represented in the organization, which was founded at a meeting held in Atlanta on April 13. The object of the association is the betterment of conditions in the exhibiting field through co-operative effort. Several important matters requiring action will be passed upon at the coming convention, and it is predicted that the membership of the body will be materially increased.

Among the prominent and progressive exhibitors who are officers of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, most of whom were active spirits in the preliminary work which resulted in the formation of what promises to be the first live organization of its kind in this section, are Willard C. Patterson, Criterion theatre, Atlanta, president; Percy W. Wells, Wells Amusement Company, Norfolk, vice-president; Hugh L. Cardoza, manager of the local Wells' houses, treasurer; and B. Lee Smith, manager of William Oldknow's Tudor theatre, Atlanta, secretary.

On the Exchange Board are Edward A. Schiller, Southern manager of the Loew interests; chairman; George C. Werner, Columbia, S. C.; Walter Bracken, Bainbridge, Ga.; Joseph Burton, Toccoa, Ga.; W. S. Mudd, Birmingham, Ala.; Frank J. Hiller, Augusta, Ga.; and E. L. Stringer, Marietta, Ga.

Multnomah Company to Make Films in Portland

A NEW film company has been started in Portland, Ore., primarily for the purpose of filming the historical Western epic, the Whitman massacre, but eventually to produce dramas with Oregon's scenery as a background.

The name of the company is the Multnomah Film Corporation, and the studio is that of the American Lifeograph Company at Thirty-third and Halsey streets. Those connected with the enterprise are Raymond Wells, director; Jean Hersholt, assistant director and Louis Moomaw, cameraman. Jean Hersholt has been working with Triangle for the past two years, and came direct from the California city to Portland. Louis Moomaw has a good reputation as a cameraman, having been with Burton Holmes and Paramount in Chicago. He photographed and directed "Where Cowboy Is King" here several years ago.

The studio of the company is well equipped with up-to-date lighting facilities and printing equipment. For the first picture a replica of the old Whitman mission has been erected at Troutdale, near Portland, and a tribe of Indians has been brought down from the reservation at Pendleton to work in the picture. Eva Emery Dye, author of "The Bridge of the Gods," and an authority on Indian manners and customs, has been engaged to supervise the settings.

Maclyn Arbuckle Selects Studio Site in San Antonio

MACLYN ARBUCKLE entertained a party of Dallas business men when they visited San Antonio early in May. He is making much progress in arranging the work of the San Antonio Moving Pictures Corporation, a $450,000 concern, the stock of which already has been fully subscribed by San Antonio business men who want to make their city a second Los Angeles, so far as picture production is concerned.

"We have selected ideal studio headquarters in an abandoned beer garden," Mr. Arbuckle says. "I hunted carefully all round the place, but empties were all I could discover."

Mr. Arbuckle says the light conditions in San Antonio make it ideal for taking pictures. Companies can work from early morning until 8 o'clock at night. The quaint scenery, varying from Spanish mission to that of the sage brush, hills and cactus suitable for Western films also is ideal for film production. The coast is only a few hours run distance, where marine views can be secured if wanted.

Mr. Arbuckle says that he has an ambitious program scheduled for the company, including a filming of "The Round Up." He told his Dallas friends that Texas is his native state, and that he intends to stay there. He was born on the Arbuckle Ranch, where the Dallas Brewery now stands.

ASSOCIATES HONOR ROCHESTER MEN

State Vice President Calihan and Local President Salyerds Banqueted by New York State Exhibitors—Toastmaster McInerney Summons All to Keep Faith

By L. B. Skeffington

PRIMARILY in honor of two of their fellow-showmen, but on the whole a general good time for all concerned, the banquet staged by the Rochester moving picture theatre managers at the Elks Clubs on Tuesday night will linger long in the memories of those who were privileged to be present. Banquets and the like are nothing new in the lives of Rochester exhibitors, but never before has that city been the scene of such an enthusiastic rally of the film clans. A success from every point of view, the banquet was typical of the whole-hearted unanimity which prevails in the ranks of the Rochester exhibitors.

Elated over the enactment of the law legalizing moving picture shows on Sundays, the banquet was the tribute of the exhibitors to two of their leaders, William A. Calihan and Irving M. Salyerds. Both of these men did valiant service in the long, hard campaign that crystalized in the passing of the law, so it was fitting that they were the honor guests at the banquet. Mr. Calihan is manager of the Regent Theatre and vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, and Mr. Salyerds is manager of the Lyndhurst Theatre and president of the Rochester branch of the league.

Attendance Is 100 Per Cent.

In order that the attendance of local theatremen might be 100 per cent., the hour for the commencement of the festivities was set at 11 p. m., with no particular time scheduled for the finale. From the start things went well. Fun and good cheer prevailed in an abundant liberality, real food was served in large man-sized portions, the air was fogged with the incense of fragrant smoke, while the music from several theatres lulled even the sterner beings into a sense of brotherly interest in everybody else.

When the vaudeville artists did their turns the assemblage forgot to be critical as theatremen are apt to be and applauded heartily, just as they like to see their patrons do. And so it went, with not a discordant note to mar the pleasure of the party.

Erwin J. W. Huber, managing editor and treasurer of The Pictureplay News and chairman of the banquet committee, started things going by calling the gathering to order. He dwelt on the power of the screens represented by those present and said that they had been successful in securing Sunday legislation and having something to celebrate because the power of the screen had been organized. He said it was only recently that the exhibitors had awakened to the latent power in their keeping, a power which he likened to that of the press.

Greenstone Welcomes Visitors.

Mr. Huber introduced Jules Greenstone, manager of the Empire Theatre and vice-president of the Rochester exhibitors, who welcomed the visiting exhibitors, film men, exchange managers, lawmakers and city officials. After assuring them it was the desire of the committee that every one feel at home and have a good time, he said that he was prepared to guarantee they would. Introducing John J McInerney as toastmaster, Mr. Greenstone said that the mere presence of "Mac" was sufficient evidence that lively doings were in order under the direction of this livest of live wires.

Mr. McInerney assumed his duties as toastmaster in a way that has made him famous across the state. It is a matter of common knowledge that when he was in the legislature and in the years immediately following he was in such demand as a toastmaster that many organizations would fix the dates of their banquets upon his convenience. He does not toastmast quite so much now, principally because he has been too busy doing war work, being chairman of the Four-Minute Men, and because he is busy with the many affairs that come to a brilliant attorney of state-wide repute. For one thing he is general counsel for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, and he is so interested in the work of the league that he devotes a great deal of time and energy to it. When the campaign was on in Albany he was on the job and fighting every moment.

Appeals for Clean Screens.

A brilliant wit, an orator unexcelled, with a rich, full voice slightly suggestive of the Irish in his name, Mr. McInerney lived up to every promise that Mr. Greenstone made for him. In a way that impressed his hearers deeply, he told why he was a movie fan, why he went to church on Sunday, but still was in favor of Sunday shows, and why he believed that the recent organization of exhibitors had welded them into a body that could and would be to their own great advantage.

The speaker made an appeal to all exhibitors to clean up their screens and their advertising matter, keeping their houses and everything relating to them morally clean and pure, so that there never could be any grounds on which alleged reformers could make a stand. In the course of his remarks he sounded a warning that the time was coming when the exhibitors would dictate to the producer and the manufacturer, instead of them dictating to the exhibitor. Saying that the theatre man best knew the needs of his patron, the ultimate consumer of films, he said that the exhibitor was in a position where the responsibility for clean or unclean pictures rested with him and not with the maker, who only made what he could sell—what the exhibitor would buy.

Salacious Pictures Won't Win.

"Clean pictures mean movie attendance in production quantity," said Mr. McInerney. "Salacious pictures mean a peakload capacity one week and depressed attendance for several weeks. Lurid advertising, often more salacious than the picture itself, may attract morbid-minded men and women, but it must be remembered that they are in a great minority in the community and the clean-minded men, women and children are in the great wholesome majority.

"Picture shows should be conducted so that the parent may not find it necessary to investigate and then give consent to family theatre-going. The father may be too busy. He may be out of town or he may not be sure of the worth of the picture, and in those weeks the theatre suffers lean attendance, whereas continuous cleanly pictures would cause him to relax vigilance knowing that at all times the screen was a fit exhibition for everyone in his family.

Growth Depends on Exhibitor Judgment.

"If the foregoing be true, then the box office should be a good censor, but that censorship must be spread over fifty-two weaks in each year instead of being considered in the sole week when a a picture of passion is displayed. Heretofore the producer has dictated what the exhibitor shall show. As the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State grows in strength, we shall be able to dictate to the producer the quality of pictures which we shall show. The exhibitor is closer to the public than the producer and is more responsible to the public than the producer and he, therefore, is the fittest to make selection,and on his unerring good judgment depends the future growth of the picture play.

"The Legislature of the State of New York and the Governor of the State, realizing that upon the exhibitor rests the purity of the screen, enacted and made into law the bill permitting pictures on Sunday. The law permits local authorities thereafter to determine whether or not those pictures should continue to be shown or whether they should be prohibited. Producers, year after year, had made sporadic efforts at Albany to obtain this first great invasion of the 'blue laws,' but they ignominiously failed each and every year because their responsibility was not readily traceable; they were too far removed from the public; they were out of touch with public demands and so were unsuccessful.

Exhibitors Must Keep the Faith.

"The moving picture men must keep the faith reposed in them by the Governor and the Legislature. They must see to it that the producer sells that which is clean and if he does not, that they will not buy his unclean wares. Shelf-worn products create no dividends and the producer must have dividends or he ceases to exist. Eternal vigilance then is the life and progress of the movie. Therefore, I adjure you to be vigilant."

John J. McInerney
The toastmaster.

When Mr. McInerney introduced Mr. Calihan, the latter was greeted with a vigorous outburst of applause that showed the depth of the esteem in which he is held, not only by his fellow-showmen of Rochester, but by the showmen in the various communities of the state represented at the dinner. In a clear and forceful manner Mr. Calihan exhorted his hearers to take heed of the times and to "keep the faith" as outlined by Mr. McInerney.

Exhibitors Take Standing Pledge.

"Will you keep the faith, or will you not?" challenged Mr. Calihan. "Will you show that you are worthy of the trust reposed in you by the Governor and the Legislature of the great state of New York? Rochester exhibitors are here tonight in force. I ask a rising vote on the question of whether or not you will keep the faith?" The question was put by Mr. McInerney and as a result every Rochester exhibitor present jumped to his feet in a manner that left little doubt of his "keeping the faith."

The pen with which Governor Smith signed the Sunday bill was then presented to Mr. Salyards by Mr. McInerney, who extolled the virtues of the local president and told his auditors what he knew of his work for the Sunday bill in Albany. Mr. McInerney called upon legislators present to bear out his statement that Mr. Salyerds had been on their trail night and day until the bill was passed. Mr. Salyerds thanked the local exhibitors for the support they had given him as president of the league in Rochester, and said that if they would continue the same loyal support he could assure them that he would have many other occasions to report good work accomplished.

Rothapfel Predicts Big Things.

Samuel L. Rothapfel made it clear that the success of the moving picture theatre and everything relating to the film industry depended upon the exhibitor and predicted big things for the screen in the future.

Assemblyman Simon L. Adler said it was the duty of the theatremen that the public get the right kind of pictures. He said the public was the best censor, but that the responsibility was not wholly shifted from the shoulders of the exhibitors.

Carl Horton Pierce, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, told of his experience with censorship boards in various parts of the country and complimented the Rochester men on the ideal conditions which prevailed in Rochester.

Remarks were made by Commissioner of Public Safety R. Andrew Hamilton, official censor in Rochester; Senator James L. Whitley, Assemblyman Harry B. Crowley, Park Commissioner William S. Ruley and many other State and city officials.

Congratulatory Telegrams Read.

The officers of the Exhibitors' League of the state were expected to be present, but various matters arose at the eleventh hour that prevented them from being present. Telegrams were read from Sidney S. Cohen, president; Samuel L. Berman, of New York, executive secretary, and A. H. Linton, of Utica, treasurer, each complimenting the Rochester men on their splendid work and sending congratulations to Messrs. Calihan and Salyerds.

Erwin J. W. Huber
Chairman of the banquet committee.

Other prominent men who were in attendance and responded with brief remarks included Charles O'Reiley, of New York; Ira M. Mosher, manager of the Palace Theatre, Buffalo; Jules H. Michaels, manager of the Academy Theatre, Buffalo; Joseph Schuchert, of the United Amusement Company, Buffalo; A. C. Hayman, of the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls; E. M. Saunders, general managers, Metro Film Company; Theodore and Leo Wharton, Ithaca; George Blair, manager of the film department, Eastman Kodak Company; L. B. Skeffington, representing Moving Picture World, and a long list of others.

The banquet committee consisted of Erwin J. W. Huber, chairman; Jules Greenstone, George J. Kress and John H. W. Fennyvessey.

All concerned are entitled to congratulations on the success of the event.

George Cook, Lithographer Pioneer, Died May 20

THE motion picture industry will learn with regret of the death on Tuesday, May 20, of George Cook, pioneer of the lithographing business and owner of the Alpha Lithograph Company. Death came as the result of an apoplectic stroke.

George Cook's name has been associated with the lithographing process ever since lithographers have been popular in the trade. He founded the Metro Lithograph Company, but later sold out his interests in that firm and took on the Alpha Company, which is the official house for the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Cook worked with Augustus Thomas on the production of "Arizona." Some of his other producing efforts have been the Dustin Farnum picture, "Soldiers of Fortune," and a picturization of "Checkers."

FORM $3,000,000 COMPANY IN LONDON

Famous Players-Lasky British Producers Name of Firm—Europe as a Background for Pictures

FORMATION in London of a $3,000,000 corporation which will produce Paramount-Artcraft pictures against European backgrounds and build studio plants in the principal city of the Old World is announced by Famous Players-Lasky. The name of the new firm is the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

Construction of extensive studios and production plants on a scale equaling those of the Hollywood and Los Angeles districts will be started immediately by the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. London is to be central headquarters for production, since most striking Old World color is available in Wales, Southern England and the Scottish lakes regions.

To Star American and European Players

Special pictures starring American and continental artists made in Europe will open a new epoch in the motion picture art according to the corporation's announcement by Emil E. Shauer, who has just returned to New York after four months abroad. He said:

"The possibilities opened by peace for international competition and co-operation by American industry and in particular the motion picture industry are boundless. The foresight of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of New York, and Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, makes it possible for us to take full advantage of these opportunities.

"The far places of the Alps, the devastated battle-zone areas, and the castles and cathedrals which are features of a thousand classic stories will be the scenes of our first pictures.

British Financiers Back of Project.

"British financiers who have joined this American enterprise include Major Davies, M. P., well-known coal and land-owner, Major Norman Holden, Alexander Nisbet, W. J. Burdon Evans, Albert Hurst, the woolen manufacturer, A. W. Kerley, Thomas Wrigley, banker, J. H. Kippax, who controls Manchester cotton manufacturies, J. G. Thompson and George, Isaac, and Abraham Collins. J. G. Graham identified for some time with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be managing director of the British organization.

"Agents of the corporation headed by Albert A. Kaufman, formerly eastern production manager, and who as a Signal Corps captain directed the Government's motion picture work overseas for two years during the war, will leave immediately for Europe. Actors and actresses, famous throughout the United States, will leave soon after to take part in films on historic spots which are now familiar to both tens of thousands of American soldiers and to the world at large. England, France, Spain, Italy and other continental countries will be invaded by the American producers—and the works of the greatest writers of these countries will be picturized on the actual scenes described.

League of Nation's Theme of First Film.

"The League of Nations will be the theme of one of our initial films. We intend to open a new field in the motion picture world, giving American 'movie' lovers film-pictures from European scenes they are familiar with.

"The world-wide affiliations of the Famous Players-Lasky Producers, Ltd., will enable it to keep in touch with the desires of audiences in every part of the globe. Special bureaus for this purpose will be established."

Eileen Percy Is Engaged to Appear with Hayakawa

EILEEN PERCY has been engaged by the Haworth Pictures Corporation to appear opposite Sessue Hayakawa in "The Gray Horizon," which Robertson-Cole will release through Exhibitors Mutual following the Japanese's latest production, "His Debt."

Before starting her screen career, the young leading woman was one of the most sought after models. She posed for Christie, Fisher and Gibson and practically every prominent artist in New York. She was with Elsie Janis in "The Lady of the Slipper," and also appeared in "The Man Who Came Back."

Screen "Red Lantern" in Atlanta.

The new Metro special, "The Red Lantern," starring Alla Nazimova, received an auspicious advance presentation at the Grand Theatre, Atlanta, Sunday afternoon, May 11, before a large audience of Southern exhibitors and other prominent figures in local film circles. Manager Charles A. Kessnich, of the Southern Metro office, supplied a splendid orchestra for the private showing, and the production was enthusiastically received. It is stated the attraction will be presented publicly in Atlanta at a legitimate theatre at advanced admission prices.

BARS RELIGIOUS SUBJECT ON SUNDAYS

"Scenes of Violence" Portraying Christ's Death Bring Catholic Film Under Bay State Ban

THE "Eternal Light," a religious production which was being shown at Tremont Temple, Boston, by the Catholic Art Association, was barred from presentation on Sunday nights by a ruling of State Police Chief John H. Plunkett on the ground that acts of violence are shown in the picture.

John J. Fitzgibbons, New England manager of the Catholic Art Association, was severe in his denunciation of the State censors for banning the production for Sunday showing. He said: "It is a highly religious drama and should be shown on Sundays in preference to week days. Mr. Plunkett cut every scene which showed acts of violence, and that means every scene from the time Christ appears before Pilate until the Ascension, thus ruining the entire picture.

"I can agree with Mr. Plunkett when he cuts acts of violence from ordinary pictures, but when such a ruling is made against such a powerful religious drama as this one, which has for its purpose the story of the Saviour and teaches the great moral lesson the world needs, I wonder at his judgment and discretion. Mr. Plunkett claims the law compels him to do this. Then if it is the law the law should be amended."

Hall Leases Park Theatre for the Summer Season

FRANK G. HALL, vice-president of Rothapfel Picture Corporation and president of Independent Sales Corporation, which organization is handling the distribution of the Rothapfel Unit Program, released June 2, through the Film Clearing House exchanges, announces that he has leased for the summer season, the Park Theatre, one of the Broadway "legitimate" houses, located at Columbus Circle, and will open it as a picture house the night of May 28, with the Rothapfel Unit Program as the first attraction, for an indefinite run. Mr. Hall engaged decorators and workmen to renovate the theatre and make it ready for the reception of the Unit Program.

Samuel L. Rothapfel will personally supervise the presentation of his Unit Program during its run at the Park. For the occasion, Mr. Rothapfel has engaged a full symphony orchestra, a corps of ushers and every detail looking toward a Broadway presentment of a picture program is being arranged. After the opening Monday night, May 28, there will be a continuous performance from 1 to 11 p. m. A special lobby display has been arranged and the program will be given city-wide publicity—in the newspapers and on the billboards.

Following the run of the Rothapfel Program, which will extend indefinitely into the summer, Mr. Hall plans to give his other special releases on Independent Sales Corporation's program, extended runs at the Park. The first of these will be J. Stuart Blackton's production, "A House Divided."

THOMAS INCE TO PRESENT NEW STARS

Announces a Series of Paramount Productions with Douglas MacLean and Doris May in Lead

THOMAS H. INCE announces the presentation during the coming year, via Paramount, of a series of productions featuring as co-stars Douglas MacLean and Doris May. These two players are well known to thousands of followers of Ince pictures, for they have been acting under the direction of Mr. Ince for two years. Douglas MacLean has developed a large personal following through his support of Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Mary Pickford, and others. Miss May, who has been appearing under the name Doris Lee, was leading woman for Charles Ray in six of his productions for Paramount, and her popularity is thoroughly established.

Mr. Ince has decided to use famous plays and novels as their screen vehicles. The first five of these have been secured at a cost of $67,000, the productions and prices paid for the screen rights being: "Mary's Ankle," "What's Your Husband Doing?" "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave," "Behind the Door," and "Some Honeymoon."

Mr. MacLean and Miss May will bring to the screen the fulfillment of a constant demand by picture lovers for youth, vivacity and beauty. Doris May has youth, charm and talent; is athletic, musical and graceful. Douglas MacLean is a young man with youth, personality and thorough dramatic experience. Previous to his screen career he supported Maude Adams in the Barrie plays, including "Peter Pan." Then he appeared as support to Margaret Anglin, Maude Fealey, Marjorie Rambeau, Olive Tell and Jane Gray.

The MacLean-May pictures are to be provided with strong casts and given elaborate settings. Work has already commenced on the first production, "What's Your Husband Doing?"

Exclusive Boston Theatre Shies at 1916 Rolls Royce

HOW would you like to be the manager of a theatre that caters exclusively to millionaires? How would you like to be worried every evening over the parking space for your patrons' limousines? Would you like to run a program for a house situated in a district more exclusive than the most exclusive block of Fifth avenue?

Nothing farther back than a 1917 Packard is admitted into the parking space of the Exeter Street Theatre in the Back Bay district of Boston. A 1916 Rolls Royce hasn't any more chance of getting by than a stray pup has of getting into the finals at the dog show. Were it not for the two electric signs outside the theatre, you would walk by, blissfully and ignorantly thinking that it was a beautiful residence, with heavy towers and gables and a general air of plutocracy.

The manager of this gilt edge theatre is Mrs. Ayer. She started the Exeter more or less as an experiment and found it entirely successful. The theatre has been pronounced by several as the most exclusive in the country. Its prices, however, run only from 15 to 50 cents.

A peek at the program for the week of May 5 shows that Mrs. Ayer's coupon clippers enjoyed for the first half of the week Viola Dana in "Satan, Jr.," Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Harold, Last of the Saxons," and Elsie Ferguson in "Eyes of the Soul." For the latter half of the week they were treated to Enid Bennett in "The Law of Men" and Ethel Clayton in "Pettigrew's Girl."

Brown Engaged as Casting Director.

Selznick Pictures Corporation has engaged Jack N. Brown to serve in the capacities of location man and casting director. Mr. Brown gained much of his early motion picture education while acting as location man for the Reliance-Mutual Company.

WILLIAMS FLAYS "SINGLE PICTURES"

Says Change to That System from the Program Contract Will Push Exhibitors from Frying Pan into Fire—No Protection to Showman, He Insists, and Deprives Him of the Cumulative Benefit of Expensive Exploitation

By James D. Williams
Manager First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc.

REFORM forces seeking to relieve exhibitors of the restraints and injustices of the unequitable program contract system are literally jumping the theatre owners from the frying pan into the fire in adopting the "single picture" booking policy as the alternative.

This latter method wipes out, at a single stroke, the most vital principle of business practice in the industry—exhibitor protection. It says to him, in substance:

"Here is a big star attraction. Book it. The rental is high, but the production is exceptional. It gives you a great and popular star, a wonderful story, matchless direction—guaranteering positive results at the box office. Advertise it heavily. Put behind it every atom of showmanship you possess. You don't have to take any other subject to get it. No strings, of any character, are attached. It is a single picture. You can book the next production this star releases in exactly the same way."

Exhibitor Builds Up Star's Prestige.

There is no theory in predicting the developments, so far as the exhibitor is concerned. He wants that particular star. He wants several others, because he knows they are certain in popularity and appeal. He books the single picture. He exploits it. The results are phenomenal. He enhances the local popularity of that star. He gives that star the benefit of a big advertising campaign. He associates that star with his theatre. So far, excellent. But——

There are very few exhibitors without competitors. The exhibitor who plays the single picture goes back to his exchange to book the next one as an individual attraction. What assurance has he that his competitor, knowing that the door is open wide to him to capitalize the other fellow's work, may not arrive ahead of him, offer more money for the second one, get it, and profit immeasurably from the money and effort the losing exhibitor invested to exploit the first production?

Puts Exhibitors on the Defensive.

There is no assurance against this with the "single picture" policy. It makes cut-throats of the exhibitors. They are placed always on the defensive, without one item of consideration in their favor. Advertising is cumulative in value. The publicity promotion an exhibitor gives to a star in one production helps popularize the next release in which that star appears, providing, of course, that the first attraction has merit.

Why should the exhibitors be deprived of the right and privilege of profiting from the money they spend to advertise a star? There is nothing that is fair or just in any measure in a system that destroys the very foundations of an exhibitor's success. There is no equity in a method that cannot assure exhibitors that they will be protected so long as they are satisfied to pay the market price for any star's productions.

The real trouble in the past was not the star series contracts. Exhibitors wanted contracts for series productions in which appeared stars popular with their patrons. They needed no master intelligence to point out the necessity for thus protecting themselves. The great difficulty with the program system was the latitude it gave producers and distributors to use the star productions as clubs to compel exhibitors to book weak and inferior releases with unpopular stars. The open market promised to destroy this club. Exhibitors welcomed open booking as the means of avoiding the arbitrary dictates of the program distributors.

The Norma Talmadge productions are not a burden to exhibitors. Exhibitors who have patrons with whom Miss Talmadge is popular welcome a series contract for her releases. It is their protection. There never has been a time when exhibitors did not consider the productions of Mary Pickford an asset for their theatre. They want the safe haven of a series contract for her pictures. The majority of them have, ever since she became a star. But they did not want the less than ordinary subjects they were compelled to take in order to obtain Miss Pickford's release on a program

James D. Williams.

Program System Only Tolerated.

The opinion of exhibitors is virtually the same about the Chaplin comedies, the productions of Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, W. S. Hart, Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Nazimova, Constance Talmadge or any other of the stars who are high in popularity with the public.

Exhibitors tolerated the program system, submitting to the demands that they take the bad with the good, because they knew that the stars who were money-getters at the box office were indispensable to their existence as theatre owners and operators. They paid the big premiums in unprofitable pictures demanded by the distributors so that they could get star series contracts, with its attendant protection.

One-Picture Clause Saves Exhibitor.

Now, the "single picture" policy blandly refuses to give them the protection for which they have been compelled to pay so highly in the past, when these stars were on programs. Where is there anything constructive, progressive, or beneficial to the industry in this? It is making tumult out of chaos.

Practically every star series contract in existence gives the exhibitors a medium of protection against the possible decline of quality in the work of any star whose releases are so booked by the one-picture cancelation clause. If exhibitors sign a contract for a series of three or six star productions, confident that they are real box office attractions, and find that they are not up to the previous standard, they are legally privileged to cancel by respecting the one-picture clause.

Vaudeville Offers Parallel.

What is it that makes a successful vaudeville theatre? The protection provided by its franchise in a circuit. In that field of entertainment a star signs a contract for one season or more. Each house on the circuit is thus assured that it will not be compelled to fight a losing contest with opposition for a second appearance of that particular star, in a new act, after he or she has been heavily advertised and "put over" to a successful season of three days or a week on the first appearance.

In the motion picture business the exhibitor cannot have this protection with stars whom he has popularized in his theatre.

There is not a large distributing concern in the business today that would consent, for an instant, to the same conditions in its relations with stars and producers that are imposed upon exhibitors in marketing star productions to them on the "single picture" basis. Would Paramount, United Artists, Metro, Select, or First National agree to a "single picture" contract with any of their respective stars? No!

Putting the Matter Another Way.

Would Paramount contract for but one De Mille production at a time? Would its executives consent to any such arrangement, which would place the next De Mille release within the competitive grasp of other distributors? No!

Would Metro consider it good business to contract with Nazimova for but one picture at a time? Would they thus leave the way open for another distributor to buy her next production, and get the cumulative advantage of the great advertising and promotion campaign Metro had given to the previous Nazimova feature? No!

Says It's Different as to Players.

Would the promoters of the United Artists Corporation have gone beyond the first stages of organization if they had been unable to conclude contracts with Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith which insured to their exchanges a series of productions by each of these artists? Would they be willing to contract for only one "single picture" at a time, knowing that every competing distributor had equal opportunity with them to obtain the next production of any of these four producers? No!

And still, exhibitors are supposed to accept conditions that could not prevail for a month with the sponsors for these conditions without jeopardizing every dollar invested in their enterprises.

Basically, there is comparatively no distinction between the theatre and the public and the exchange and the exhibitor. The distributor wins prestige and business by the quality of his attractions and through the popularity of the stars and producers whose output he offers to exhibitors. Exhibitors achieve position and patronage for their theatres for identically the same reasons, excepting that their market is the public.

Exhibitors Should Seek Protection.

No distributor would spend money to exploit a star to exhibitors without the positive assurance in a contract that he could benefit from his effort by releasing a series of productions in which that star appeared.

Any exhibitor who does not demand, and get, the same protection for every dollar of promotion money he spends on a star of any value to his box office is aiding his competitors to bring about his downfall.

The "single picture" policy can have no excuse for its practice in any effort to establish fair rental prices for the varying degress of quality in productions. Stars and producers know how much money they must receive in gross rentals from each release to defray the cost of production and allow a profit. The amount can be determined before a picture is put on the market. The present method of fixing rentals according to zone or urban populations is a feasible and fair basis of determination.

Rental Should Accord with Population.

If, by this system, Kalamazoo must pay $100 a day for first run, the distributors can charge that amount. The fact that the exhibitor makes an unusual profit at that rental should not affect the rental. The star or producer is receiving the amount which, in proportion to population, is equivalent to the price previously decided upon in figuring that zone in its ratio to the total gross receipts needed to pay production costs and show the desired profit.

The star or producer should get his or her production costs back immediately upon release, because they must have it as working capital with which to begin the next picture. After they are assured of this, what more can they legitimately expect if the relation between them and the exhibitors is to be equitable and mutually fair?

The star or producer can insure the profit desired on the investment in each picture by arranging a schedule of prices according to existing and well-known factors, and by keeping the approval of all rental contracts, on this basis, as an authority to be exercised by them or by their representatives in the individual exchanges or at the head office of the distributing company.

Exhibitors Will Resent Single Pictures.

Any exhibitor who has contended with the malicious practices of the program system—and where is there an exhibitor who has not—will most certainly resent the obvious import of the "single picture" policy. It does not contribute a single benefit to exhibitors which is not now at their option. With but one exception they are privileged now—and they have been privileged for months past—to book the new and recent productions of the stars and producers, fostering it without being compelled to take any other releases, of any character or description. Further, they have had the protective advantages of star series contracts whenever they were requested.

The "single picture" method strips this vital thing from them. It leaves them without the most indispensable of theatre assets—the ability to profit tomorrow from the efforts of today.

Two Names on Sign Did More Than Money

GEORGE MORRIS, manager of the M. E. Comerford Amusement Company at Scranton, Pa., booked "Virtuous Wives" for the Strand Theatre for one of the closing weeks of Lent. Business had been bad. So upon the arrival of the Stewart film he said:

"No advertising! No special display! No anything!"

Asked what he expected would carry the picture through, he declared that if anything did it would have to be the picture's name and that of Miss Stewart. The film brought about a 20 per cent. increase in business at the Strand over the average of the preceding weeks of Lent.

But closing up the books at the end of the run, Mr. Morris declared: "I did it in this instance with the help of two names on an electric sign. I would not attempt it again."

The Comerford Amusement Company, owners of the Strand, operates a chain of thirty theatres covering a forty-mile stretch of territory from Carbondale to Wilkes-Barre. George Morris, manager, has contracted for five future Stewart pictures, the next to be exhibited being "A Midnight Romance." Three Pickford pictures, beginning with "Daddy Long Legs," have also been booked.

Kenyon has been assigned the work of writing the screen scripts for the productions which Rollin Sturgeon will direct. He is now preparing Monroe Salisbury's next vehicle. Kenyon is the brother of Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindlings" and other stage plays.

Fairbanks Is Licensed Operator 1313.

Douglas Fairbanks has been granted a genuine license to operate a projection machine in his palatial Beverly Hills home. The screen actor has a projection machine principally for the entertainment of his guests and the other day Doug realized that to operate his machine without a license is not according to Hoyle. Therefore he made application and his motion picture projection machine operator's license is 1313.

Sturgeon to Direct for Universal.

Rollin Sturgeon will direct exclusively for Universal within the ensuing year, according to an announcement from that company.

Sturgeon is now preparing to direct the next Monroe Salisbury picture, which will have a Western atmosphere. Work on this picture will begin as soon as Salisbury has completed his present vehicle being produced under the title of "Devils Have Their Friends."

JANS PUTS SOME JAZZ IN JERSEY

You Hafta Take Off the New Straw to This Fella, Joe—He Outbids the 3,000-Seaters of Newark on a 780 Capacity and Makes the Thousands Every Week

DEAR JOE: There ain't no jazz in Jersey, did you say, Jason? You've got it wrong, Henry; you've got it wrong. Being out there in Dillsburg, Ioway, I don't blame you for not getting the latest music cue sheets on Jersey, but don't ever let any one tell you that all New Jersey raises is Campbell's soups, mosquitos and Columbia phonograph records. Right now there's so much jazz in Jersey, it'd make a Hoola Hoola lady in any of these Broadway jazz emporiums turn in her shredded wheat costume to the management and go back to the manicure business for fair and rightyus shame.

Jans Gotta Jazzy Moniker.

A course, Charlie, I gotta put you straight. It wasn't always such. New Jersey didn't park away her harmonica in storage and hire a symphony band until just recent. She didn't turn on no blaze of trumpets until this fella Jans hit the fair and flowery city of Newark, which is renowned, as the joggeraphy books say, for about a half million population and a variety of trades.

H. F. Jans is the way he signs up when the traveling fella flicks the dust offa his patent leathers and indicates the dotted line. I guess his name sounds so much like the word jazz itself he can't help puttin on a symphony concert wherever he hangs up the season's latest offering in straw derbies. He's a old hand in the game and a state rights man, Charlie. Not one of them Southern Democrats who believes the state should do all its own law makin and all the taxin and statyute framin of the Federal works besides. No, what I mean by state rights, Horace, is a course, a fillim state rights man.

But I ain't holdin no brief for his state's right stuff, as the shrood lawyers of Philadelphia and Port Deposit, Md., say. What I'm interested in, Joe, and what I'm writin to you about is Mister Jans' jazzin as an exhibitor. The exhibitor, you know, Cholly, is the flower in this fillim business which all the exchange men and all the home office fellas and all the producers labor so lovin to water and refresh. You're one of the blossoms what gets the beenine inflooence, even if the lovin rays of sunshine do have to travel all the way from Noo York clear out there to Dillsburg. And I ain't sayin that I don't act the shepherd to a flock of them same rays myself, Cholly.

Go and Do Likewise, Cholly.

But this fella Jans is a rare specimen o fillim flower. He actually thrives on that same lovin and tender care. And I'm writin to you so that you can take good cheer, like they say in the Christmas stories, and make a little money and not let them big 300 and 400 seat houses in Dillsburg dishearten you.

I was talkin to Jans up in his office at 729 Seventh avanoo the other day. He's in this state rights game like I said, with this fella Backer his right hand man, but he owns a theatre in Newark, N. J., which is the town I said he put the jazz into, and say, Charlie, he takes more pride outa that 780-seat house than he does outa all the state rights and wrongs.

Which is right. Since Jans took over this 780 seater fifteen months ago, he's done more to kick up a cyclone in the palmy circles of Newark than a brace of Missouri typhoons. Just to give you the low-brow on it, Charlie, the first week he was there he took in $500, and last week there was over $6,000 flocked in through the little box office aperture. I ast him what his first picture was, but he didn't remember, so it was probably "The Jungles of Hate" or "The Iron Paw" or something like that. You see, when he opened up in Newark, all the other theatres, of which there is a mule-train full, had the good pictures sewed up and he couldn't horn in with a jimmy.

H. F. Jans.
He proves there's a lotta jazz outsida the wheatena costumes.

So that's why he had to book the gore and thunder stuff.

"Long Legs" Is Daddy of Klimaxes.

But instedda using a jimmy to get an introduction with, Charlie, he used a check book and some of the matter which is most commonly referred to in the worst sellers as "grey." He booked this buckets o' blood fillim for two weeks, just to show these exchange fellas that he was a willin blossom for their lovin waterin cans. He knew if there's one thing an exchange dook likes more than a elevation in his salary, or a invitation out to lunch, it's to get hold of a exhibitor who books his fillims for something over the three-day limit. So when Jans staged this two-week drama, he had 'em all wearin out the "Welcome" sign outside his office waitin for a chance to get in the cast. The result, as the stump speakers say, was that this Jans hombre could get just about any fillim he wanted.

Ya know I told you he made over $6,000 last week. Well the fillim that made the lady in the box office almost lose her gum in the rush was Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs," which the First National is puttin forth. He booked little Mary for two weeks, Charlie, and he made more money by a cool and sparlin thousand the second week than he did the first. An he wanted to show the picture for two weeks more because it had such good advertisin possibilities, but the exchange was tied up with a contract and he couldn't deal.

Jans Outbids 'Em All, Barrin None.

Joe, if you knew Newark you'd be askin me why it is that this fella who owns a 780-seat house can outbid the 3,000 and 4,000-seat palaces which adorn the busy streets of that metropolis. But since you're a denizen of Dillsburg, Ioway, and have never been farther east than Fort Dodge, I'll hafta to play the entertainin host and ask it for you. Ya see, Charlie, this Jans hombre, to begin with, ain't afraid to take a chance. He ain't a gambler; he's a live wire. And I'm callin him a live wife even if that phrase has been so much maltreated by the after-dinner speakers and the personal press agents. (No relation to the station agents at all, Joe.)

He's a live wire, like I said, and he's willin to pay a high price for good fillims. He outbids all the other houses like a humming bird outclasses a week-old White Minorca, and the exchange fellas is glad to give him the pictures 'cause they know he'll put 'em over big.

He ain't a nickle-splitter or a penny-grabber like so many brothers of ourn in this exhibitors lodge, Joe. He don't like the trough for a foot rest which is the living room for so many of them same brethern of ourn. He pays high prices but he paints up the town with so much advertisin on pictures that's big and consistent that there ain't a week goes by but what he does a $3,700 or $3,800 business. The newspapers wouldn't look like home if they didn't carry a yard or so of Jans' jazzy advertisin'. An' the street cars of Newark would be a disappointment to the travelin public if they didn't carry their usual line o Jans Jems. Same with the billboards. And his manager, Moe Kridel's got some snappy ideas, too.

Use the Jans Jazz for a Motto.

The United Artists, Cholly, has signed to put their pictures in Jans' house. Why do they favor this little feller, you pause to inquire? Because he'll pay higher prices, he'll advertise and x-ploit the fillims like no other exhibitor in Newark will—or can.

I'm writin this to you so's you won't let them other fellas out there think they've got it on you just because you ain't gotta house with a 3,000 seatin capacity and a simp-phoney band. I forgot to tell ya, but the name of his theatre's is the Goodwyn. Good and Win see, Joe? Pretty clever, eh?

BILL.

COAST RAISES $1,773,450 FOR LOAN

Industry Takes Over Half of That Amount, While Balance Is Sold to General Public

THE campaign for the sale of Victory Bonds conducted by the players, heads and employes of the Los Angeles studios, came to a close on the night of May 10, with $1,773,450 to the credit of the drive.

Each studio participating in the drive was allotted a night at the ship, a miniature transport erected in Pershing square; and from the opening night, when D. W. Griffith, chairman of the Motion Picture Loan Committee, made the initial speech of the campaign, to the last night, which wound up with a flourish and a total of $317,000, each and every organization participating worked with heart and soul to make the campaign a success.

Not all of the bonds sold through the ship were taken by the public. The subscriptions secured from the players and employes at the studios were turned in at the ship meetings on the night that each studio was in charge. In a number of instances the picture people themselves bought as many, or more, bonds than the people in the park.

Of the grand total of $1,773,450, $901,750 was sold to the people of the industry and $871,000 to the public.

A number of studios did not have dates at the ship, but the subscriptions of the players and employes at these plants were included in the grand total.

What the Various Studios Did.

The sales at the various studios as reported to Chairman D. W. Griffith, were as follows:

Comique Film Corporation (Roscoe Arbuckle) $13,900; Astra, $2,850; Anita Stewart Productions, $26,700; Brentwood, $10,200; employes and producing companies at Robert Brunton studios, $58,300; Bloom Film Laboratory, $4,350; Bull's Eye, $2,500; Chaplin Film Company, $32,000; Christie Film Company, $55,300; Fox, $38,000; Douglas Fairbanks, $32,100; Frazee Film Company, $150; Goldwyn, $40,000; D. W. Griffith studios, $70,000; Sessue Hayakawa Company, $29,200; William S. Hart Film Corporation, $32,500; Jesse D. Hampton Productions, $14,000; William Horsley Laboratories, $2,800; Thomas H. Ince studios, $58,650; Famous Players-Lasky, $64,550; L-KO Film Company, $7,500; Metro, $21,650; Morosco studio, $28,200; National studio, $44,500; Mary Pickford (personal), $100,000; Poppy Comedies, Inc., $4,000; Rolin Film Company, $3,850; Mack Sennett studio, $22,900; Sanborn Laboratories, $2,500; Universal, $21,900; Vitagraph, $30,150; Los Angeles Film Exchanges, $8,150; Los Angeles Motion Picture Theatres, $17,400. Brookline Rejects Idea of Picture Theatre in Town

BROOKLINE, MASS., one of the richest communities in the country, has rejected motion picture theatres by a vote in town meeting of 203 to 85.

The question of running motion pictures in this town—the wealthy suburban residential district of Boston—was placed before the voters at a special town meeting. The selectmen had three applications for motion picture theatres at Coolidge Corners. The Brookline Board of Trade voted in favor of the theatres on the basis that it would increase local business. The opposition contested the theatres on the ground of moral influences.

A number of persons who said they would vote against a theatre run by private parties declared they favored a theatre under the control of the town.

Mrs. George H. Francis spoke of the importance of moving pictures as an agency to assist the Federal Government in its patriotic and educational propaganda.

Dr. Charles Conklin, of Beacon Universalist Church, favored the pictures as a means of providing proper places for men to gather with their families, referring to the large number of men who will be deprived of their usual haunts when the prohibition edict goes into effect.

The voting followed and meant the death-knell of the motion picture in Brookline for a year at least.

BUCK BILL OPPONENTS ARE HECKLED

At Legislative Hearing in Illinois Irwin, Pettijohn and Atkinson Get Rough Treatment

Chicago, May 21.

THE hearing at Springfield Tuesday, May 20, of the opponents of the Buck Bill before the judiciary committee, of the Legislature, was marked by stormy clashes. Walter W. Irwin, of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, the first speaker, was cross-examined and grilled throughout his address in most unexpected fashion by representatives Dieterich, of Beardstown and Lee O'Neil Browne, of LaSalle, the former being sponsor and leader in the House for the bill. The speech was able, but was naturally marred by the frequent interruptions purposely made to minimize its effect. The entire afternoon session was occupied by Mr. Irwin.

Pettijohn Heckles a Bit Himself.

The evening session was opened by C. C. Pettijohn's speech, and he was subjected to similar treatment from Dieterich, but he cooly delivered thrust for thrust.

Dr. Sam Atkinson next came in for his grueling when he refused to answer certain questions put by Dieterich.

The doctor was followed by Rose Tapley, who spoke on the educational value of pictures. Representative Shearer, of Kane county, who lives in Aurora, protested against the unfair tactics of Representative Dieterich and O'Neil Browne interrupting, heckling and ridiculing opposing speakers, and representative Struble, of Peoria, contrasted the fair hearing given the proponents of the bill with that given the opponents. A large gathering of exhibitors from various parts of the state and exchange managers and salesmen were present.

It is the prevailing opinion among exchange managers and exhibitors from Chicago that the bill will be reported favorably out of committee, that it will be passed in the next few days by the Houses. Already it has been passed by the Senate. Many hold the opinion that the Governor will refuse to sign it, while some believe that it is an administration measure.

SYD CHAPLIN RETURNS TO THE SCREEN

Talented Actor Signs Contract with Famous Players-Lasky to Make Four Five-Reel Comedies

SYDNEY CHAPLIN, the famous comedian of the stage and screen, has signed a contract to appear in motion pictures to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Chaplin, who has had great success here and abroad as a comedian and who for the past few years has been absent from the screen, handling the business affairs of his brother Charlie, has a large following among motion picture patrons in this country. His former work on the screen included some of the most successful comedies ever released, "The Submarine Pirates" being particularly prominent as one of his own creations. Others which are well remembered are "Hushing the Scandal" and "No One to Guide Him."

Mr. Chaplin's arrangement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation calls for four pictures to present comedies running five reels each. It is also stipulated that these super-comedies will be allowed six months for production so that ample time is given to make each photoplay as nearly perfect in every detail as it is possible to make them. The arrangement involves over a million dollars.

Mr. Chaplin will form his own producing organization immediately and will personally direct the production of his pictures. It is understood that he will stage his films at his brother's studio in California, one of the most modern institutions of its kind. The films will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as Paramount-Artcraft Super-Comedies.

It is understood that Mr. Chaplin will not adopt a standardized character in all his pictures, but will play different parts.

Independent Increases Sales Force.

Lynn S. Card, general manager, Independent Sales and Film Clearing Houses, announces the appointment of Joseph L. Marentette, pioneer exchange man and exhibitor in the South, as branch manager of the Film Clearing House exchange in Atlanta, succeeding Carl de Seay. Mr. Card also announces the appointment of C. C. McKibbin branch manager at the Pittsburgh office succeeding W. L. Russell.

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" FULL OF BEAUTY

Fragrant with the Poetry of Pure Ideals and a Great Love That Endures Until Death, D. W. Griffith's Latest Picture Marks the Highest Altitude of Screen Art

By Edward Weitzel

IDEALIZED realism, spiritual beauty springing up in the midst of sordid surroundings, the fragrance of a great love that endures until death—all are found in "Broken Blossoms," D. W. Griffith's latest picture. So well has the director wrought that his work marks the highest altitude yet reached in screen art and places his photoplay on a plane with the masterpieces of painting, sculpture and music. The picture is a tragedy and it cleanses the soul of the onlooker as did the tragedies of the old Greeks, marching relentlessly to the death and destruction of those who defied the gods. In "Broken Blossoms," a father defies heaven in his treatment of his illegitimate child and ends by killing her. His punishment is swift and sure. Moving side by side through this grim tale is a revelation of supreme devotion, a holy flame of pity and adoration that beautifies the entire picture and fills it with sweet incense.

The manner of its making is also a revelation to those who are familiar with the creations of its maker. Much always is expected of D. W. Griffith; "Broken Blossoms" betters anticipation.

A Missionary from the East.

Thomas Burke, whose book, "Limehouse Nights," contains a short story, "The Chink and the Child," furnished the screen with a new theme; in bare outline a simple enough tale is told practically by three characters, but one that will cause the complacent and superior dweller in this Christian land to regard the almond-eyed followers of Confucius with new interest and to find much food for thought after the immediate effects of the picture have faded from his mind. There is a broad humanity running through the tale which consorts fittingly with the spirit of the times and the drawing together of men of many creeds for the moral advancement of the world.

A treaty port in China steals slowly through a shimmering curtain of blue and the first scene of the picture transports the spectator to the Orient. The impression is complete. That curious sense of reality that reality alone can convey to the uninitiated is here in full. One important fact is brought out while the action continues in China: A young Chinese poet, learned in the wisdom of his land and the teachings of his faith, is anxious to go to a far country and share his knowledge with those who have never had his advantages. He is gentle, kindly and a dreamer who veils his feelings with the inscrutable repression of his race. The blessing of his god is besought for his mission, and the sound of temple bells is in his ears as he sails away.

The Limehouse Slums.

Contrast at once startling and repellent, ushered in through a curtain of sinister hue, a dull red that is in keeping with the reek and gloom of the region, is found in the next location of the story. The Limehouse district of London, that part of the mighty city near the docks where foreigners of the East touch elbows and yellow men predominate, is the place. Sandaled feet shuffle silently down narrow streets and disappear under distant arches. A place of foreboding, of mysterious happenings behind closed doors. And real in every brick in its walls and every stone that lines its gutters! And the impression is complete!

Here the Chinese missionary is found. His dreams have been rudely shattered. No one will listen to him, so Cheng Huan has ceased trying to deliver his message. But he still broods over the good he might accomplish, as he leans against the wall outside his little curio shop.

Cheng Meets His Goddess.

One day he finds a new mission in life: the dedication of his homage to Her Hiding Place Discovered.

Lillian Gish, the girl, found at "The Chink's" curio shop.

a shrinking bit of humanity—a young girl, hardly more than a child, whose beauty of face and purity of soul cannot be hidden from his sympathetic gaze, although slow starvation, cruel blows and vile language have done their best to efface both. Cheng is attracted to the girl when he sees one of his countrymen try to detain her as she leaves the shop where she has gone to purchase her father's meal. He interferes in her behalf and she hurries off. It is the first act of kindness she has ever known and she cannot comprehend why such a thing should happen to her.

The girl's way home takes her through a narrow alley and along a dock where river craft are moored, and weather-beaten sail-lofts face the Thames. Turning the corner of a building she enters fearsomely, and finds her father there. He is in a rage because his meal is not ready. Battling Burrows is the title he won in the prize ring. A great hulking brute of a man without one decent instinct, he beats the girl and leaves her to starve while he spends his time drinking with some drab at a public house—another of the wrecks of womanhood to whose unholy ranks his child's mother belonged. Why he ever kept the ill-starred mite when its mother left it in his lodgings just before she sought forgetfulness in the river must have puzzled the prize-fighter himself. Now that the girl is able to slave for him and take her pay in blows, he suffers her to share his hovel.

Here again is deep penetration into things as they are—stark realism that is terrible to behold, accompanied by fixed purposes and the presence of unseen forces that are guiding the seeming blind injustice of this child's fate.

The Blossom is Broken.

While Burrows is busy training for a coming prize fight, the girl meets Cheng for the second time. She pauses to look into the window of his shop and sees him inside. He smiles at her. One night her father gives her a harder beating than ever before, and she staggers out into the street, wandering on until she reaches Cheng's shop. He finds her in a dead faint on the floor when he returns. Gathering her slight form in his arms, he takes her to the room above. To him she is the incarnation of all that is lovely and he is ready to worship her. He places her on a couch and when she is restored to consciousness and given his choicest food, he has her robe herself in a gorgeous garment from his native land and deck her hair with flowers. The room itself he turns into a bower for his goddess and is rewarded by seeing a wan smile on her lips. All night he kneels at her side, holding her hand. She is too weak to leave the next day, and the strange delight of being tenderly cared for holds her a willing captive.

Events move rapidly from here on. Her father learns where his daughter is just as he is going into the ring. At the finish of the fight he rushes to the shop. Cheng has gone out. Burrows reaches the room above and smashes every breakable object and drags the child home. They have barely gone when Cheng returns. His mute anguish as he gazes at the ruin of his temple and its shattered altar and realizes his goddess is not there is one of the great moments of the story. Arming himself he rushes to the girl's home. He is too late. Her dead form is stretched across a low cot. Her father has beaten her to death. The scene of the killing is carried out with uncompromising realism, but here also the hidden forces that are watching over the little victim give her death the beauty of martyrdom.

Cheng's vengeance is quick. He shoots down Burrows as the prize-fighter picks up an axe, gathers the lifeless form of the girl in his arms and bears her back to his desecrated temple. The gorgeous robe is again wrapped about her and she is placed upon the couch. The shattered altar is picked up from the floor and Cheng goes through his service for the dead. A second later he buries a knife in his breast and his soul follows the child's.

"Broken Blossoms" Shatters a Delusion.

A tragedy, compact and complete. A perfect action without distractions of any sort, it moves irresistibly forward without once looking backward or turning aside, and its whole history is burnt deep upon the memory, never to be forgotten. Vast panoramic themes crowded with characters and events are popularly supposed to afford the moving picture its freest and most profound expression. "Broken Blossoms" shatters this delusion. The screen, in the hands of a true artist, can encompass all the tragedy of existence in a brief tale peopled by two men and a child, and give it overwhelming significance. Such a tale is "Broken Blossoms." At no time is its subject beyond the skill of D. W. Griffith to interpret in pictures that glow with material truth and spiritual beauty.

The color scheme of its illuminated subtitles is a piece of wizardry that sets a new standard for this important branch of picture making. Nothing draws the eye from the beautifully clear letters, which are thrown upon a background of interpretative color. The effect sought for by elaborate but obtrusive designs is here obtained by the only correct method.

Lillian Gish and Her Co-Stars.

The actors of the three characters, the girl, Cheng Huan and Burrows, are worthy the trust imposed in them. There is no higher form of praise. Lillian Gish as the victim of the prize-fighter's cruelty is a creature so crushed and broken that one's heart aches for her. She has been so stunted in everything but a constant growth of suffering and terror her appeal is that of a little child's. Her delight in the doll which Cheng gives her is that of a child and the horror of her pitiful death is the more distressing for the same reason. Never for an instant does she lose the character and she responds to its changes of feeling and the mounting frenzy of its dreadful crisis with ample power and admirable control.

Richard Barthelmess shows surprising artistic progress as Cheng Huan. His past impersonations reach an excellent average but none of them approach the rounded perfection of his Chinese poet. Even under Griffith's direction it is a remarkable achievement for so young a man. He breathes the very spirit of the gentle scholar of the East—a spirit hitherto never understood or portrayed on the stage or the screen.

Donald Crisp's "Battling" Burrows is cast in all the character's brutal realism. He is the reincarnation of Dickens' Bill Sykes, proud of his strength and his ability to ill-treat those weaker than himself. The Crisp impersonation is rich in enlightening bits of sideplay and understanding of the nature of the prize-fighter. His manner of death as he tries for a brief instant to fight off his conqueror in the only way he knows, and his final collapse—an ugly sprawl upon the floor—is one of the never-to-be-forgotten incidents of the picture.

Edward Peil's acting of Evil Eye makes it a companion portrait in the group, the calm indifference with which, after trying to do wrong to the girl, he purchases a flower and pauses to smell it, being a well emphasized point. George Beranger as The Spying One deserves his place in the cast, and Norman Selby as "Battling" Burrows' opponent in the prize ring, coupled with Donald Crisp's skill with his hands, causes the fight to look like the real thing.

A last word about the picture: "Broken Blossoms" is not to be measured by the height of its buildings, the number of its characters or the cost of its production. Rather should it be spoken of in terms that denote the mind and the soul of mankind and the splendid height that may be attained by the devotion of these attributes to the betterment of humanity.

Chaplin Fails to Get "Magic Rug."

There is a rug in the Hotel Alexandria in Los Angeles that is often referred to as the "magic" rug.

When D. M. Linnard, who owns a chain of big hotels on the Pacific Coast, recently purchased the Alexandria, Sydney Chaplin, brother of Charlie Chaplin, maker of Chaplin comedies for First National, and business manager for the comedian, was among those who wanted to buy the rug.

Syd made proposal after proposal, until his top-notch offer soared to $50,000.

"Not for love or money will we part with that rug," said Vernon Goodwin, manager of the Alexandria. "It is the source of more advertising for this house than all my publicity men put together. Motion picture stars like to stand upon its magic edges.

"Your $50,000 has a certain temptation about it, but there are no more rugs in the world like this one."

"That's why I want it," said Chaplin.

But the deal was not closed.

The original story is the creation of Florence Bolles and was put in scenario form by Wallace C. Clifton.

Mr. Ashley recently returned to the "legitimate" stage and was featured by Oliver Morosco in Jack Lait's comedy drama "One of Us," which had its New York presentation at the Morosco Theatre. Recently he appeared in a new production of Samuel Shipman under the direction of William Harris, Jr., which had its New York presentation at the Morosco Theatre. The long line of leading parts which he played during his previous engagement with the World showed the uniformly fine quality of his screen work.

New Experiences for a Veteran.

Chester Conklin, who is doing some star comedy stuff at the William Fox Comedy lot, admits that he is not an ordinary person by a long shot. He has been making comedy pictures for five years, yet the first time he ever saw a dramatic production being filmed was the Fox lot in Hollywood, where he watched Albert Ray and Elinor Fair make scenes for their new comedy "Be a Little Sport."

NEW UNIVERSAL POLICY ANNOUNCED

Exhibitor Will Be Able to See Pictures Long Before Booking—Anniversary Month Will Bring Many Specials—Establish Low Prices for Customers of Regularity

AS Universal aproaches the conclusion of the most successful year in its career, it not only celebrates its seventh anniversary as the oldest producing firm in the industry, but at the same time it announces its new policy for the ensuing season.

Long before next fall Universal exchanges will be in possession of new productions to be shown to exhibitors. The exhibitor, consequently, who obtains his pictures from Universal will not only buy as heretofore under Universal's fundamental open booking policy, but, in addition, will be able to see what he purchases far in advance of the time for the showing of the productions he thus books.

This is a new departure. It is in keeping with Universal's established custom of rendering maximum assistance and protection to the exhibitor in purchasing wares for his theatre and his patrons.

To Screen Big Attractions.

Among the productions which Universal will be able to screen for the exhibitor will be the Stage Women's War Relief series of stage star pictures. As has previously been announced, there are twelve two-reel productions in this series, bringing together for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry so illustrious a group of actors and actresses of both the speaking stage and the screen. In the first picture of this series, for example, appears David Belasco, seen thus for the first time playing a role since he became famous as America's greatest producer and manager.

Among the other famous footlight favorites in the casts of these pictures—all of them two-reel productions—are: Bruce McRae, Kathleen Nesbitt, Violet Heming, Maclyn Arbuckle, Shelley Hull, Phoebe Foster, Robert Edeson, Montague Love, William Courtenay, Thos. A. Wise, Nance O'Neill, Mathilde Cottrelly, Henry Miller, Ethel Intrepodi, Blanche Bates, Hilda Spong, Cyril Maude, David Bispham, Percy Haswell, Julia Dean, Yvette Guilbert, Mabel Taliaferro, Blanche Yurka, Jane Grey, Gail Kane, Tyrone Power, Galli-Curci, Holbrook Blynn, Otis Skinner and Daniel Frohman.

All these plays—comedies and dramas—are by well-known playwrights and scenarists, such for instance as Frederick A. Kummer, Calder Johnstone, Kathleen Kavanaugh, Samuel Hopkins Adams, and Rachel Crothers.

More Jewel Productions.

In addition, the exhibitor will have placed before him some of the largest, most elaborate and most satisfactory Jewel productions ever shown under this brand name.

There will be in this group pictures starring Mildred Harris, Dorothy Phillips and other players whose names have become familiar the whole world over through their appearance in the Jewel products.

At the same time Universal will show to exhibitors "The Midnight Man," the serial in which James J. Corbett is starred. There will be also products by Eddie Polo famous for his work in the serial "The Lure of the Circus" and in the popular series of two-reel Western dramas in which he has recently been cast. There will be a brand new serial starring Marie Walcamp.

Popular Stars in Specials.

There will be more of the Universal Special Attractions starring Monroe Salisbury Harry Carey Mary MacLaren and Priscilla Dean. Priscilla Dean as a matter of fact will be cast in a limited number of Universal super-Special Attractions.

Universal will show, too, its improved, unique Screen Magazine, a weekly product, which has behind it the co-operative advertising support of half a hundred of the largest daily newspapers in the country.

There will be, however, some Universal productions which cannot be submitted to this program of advance showing. These, now in the making, will be brought forth later as surprises.

Laemmle Outlines Plans.

These plans, as briefly outlined by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, are the most comprehensive in the company's history. "The demand of the day," Mr. Laemmle says, is for bigger and better pictures and productions. Universal, as usual, has been awake. Its ear has been to the ground. Accordingly, it not only now draws near to the completion of its most prosperous season of business, but begins, at the same time, its most eventful and most successful year. On the eve of its seventh anniversary it announces a policy that is in keeping with its conception of the growth and development of the motion picture industry."

"Seven years of experience in the production of pictures," Mr. Laemmle says, "has established for Universal a firm foundation on which to base its policy of better, bigger, and finer productions and, within the last year, the organization has taken on such new material and new strength that, on September 1, the beginning of its new year, it will be ready to launch a season that will be without a precedent in Universal's history. The Universal has always advocated the open market, and through this, the excellence of its product and the fairness of its methods it has gained and retained the confidence of the exhibitors.

Selling Costs Reduced.

"Just as we have reduced our studio waste to the very minimum," Mr. Laemmle continued, "so will we reduce our selling costs to the very minimum, especially in next fall's selling campaign. And, what's more, those exhibitors who help us reduce selling costs will receive the lion's share of all that they help us to save.

"There is no scheme, no mystery about this. It is straight merchandizing of the simplest sort and if every company will follow our lead in this, the great extravagances that have characterized the distribution end of the business in past years will become merely a memory.

"Our plan is simply this: We have goods to sell. The exhibitor wants some of them, or all of them or none of them. It will depend entirely upon how good our pictures are whether he wants many or few or none.

Save by Reducing Costs.

"If he has enough confidence in our goods to feel safe in booking far ahead on the series plan, we will book pictures to him just that way. If he does this, he saves us a lot of selling cost. We will, therefore, sell to him on the lowest possible basis. If, however, he only wants to select a picture now and then, he thus requires us to keep our salesmen calling upon him regularly. This runs up the selling cost and makes it necessary for us to get more money per picture.

"In other words, we will first fix a fair price on each and every picture and then sell the exhibitor anything he wants. This means that he will buy what he wants and reject what he does not want. It is more than a mere 'open market' plan; it is an elastic plan that fits itself to the needs and to the desires of each individual exhibitor.

Eva Is Twentieth Century for "Eve."
So we would expect Eva Novak to be starring in Century comedies for Universal.

Rambles Round Filmtown

The Rambler.

Out of Cold Storage And Into the Films.

WHEN Terry Ramsaye was doing his eighteen-hours-a-day for Rivoli and Rialto, he looked at miles of pictures—some that were given the book and some that were given the hook. The far-sighted expert picked up many inspirations from what he saw in the Rialto projection room—one of which was to buy the largest atomizer the market afforded, and back it with a gallon of the sweet scented stuff they shoot into the leaden air of the jitney cinemas to keep the microbes jumping.

"We'll need this some day," said Terry. "The way films are running, something is going to happen, no matter how carefully we may try to guard against disaster."

Although Terry has passed to other fields of usefulness—his prophesy and atomizer came into play at the Rialto one Sunday morning when "Come Out of the Kitchen" was first shown in public.

Marguerite Clark, in her efforts to get away from membership in the Chef's Union has occasion to fry some eggs for her lord and master's breakfast. The egg chosen for the demonstration was sic'k of its former job and eager to get into pictures. When Marguerite broke its shell—Hugo Riesenfeld shouted for the atomizer.

After the fire escape doors had all been opened and the stinking stuff from the mammoth squirt-gun had counteracted the effects of the egg, Mr. Riesenfeld dispatched the reel to the exchange it came from with an order to send back an issue of "Come Out of the Kitchen" that featured only odorless eggs.

Thus was Terry Ramsaye's foresight vindicated and acclaimed.

Publicity Writer.—One who deals with the advertising department and thus trys to force into print stuff that only his boss will read. Printing it is a double waste of energy, because his boss has already seen the matter in carbon copy form. Very likely said boss had edited several drafts of the matter before it finally went to the mimeograph.

News Writer.—One who deals with the editorial department. His copy tells of events of general interest to the trade; information for picture showmen who play the product his boss is striving to make profitable on Broadway and in the sticks. The news writer gets fired much oftener than the publicity writer—but that's part of the difference between a news writer and a publicity writer.

NEWS of an interesting incident is wafted from the last Eastward trip of the George Washington. On the fourth day out, after the famous European commuter had looked at every film that had ever been made (up to the time the Washington sailed from Hoboken on that trip), President Wilson appeared at the door of his special projection room with two cans of film under his arm.

After he had waded to the center of the room, through millions of feet of pictures the publicists had put on board their mimeographs, Mr. Wilson said to the spool-boy:

"Please run these Christie comedies for me. Mrs. Wilson declares they are to laugh, and that's me all-over-the-ocean on these trips I am making in the interest of film press agents."

Mr. Williams Opens a Controversy.

WHETHER you agree with him or not you are bound to admit the statement of Mr. Williams which THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD prints this week is a mighty readable article. The manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit forcibly presents one phase of an argument which is bound to be much under exhibitor discussion in the months to come. He illuminates the subject without generating an undue amount of heat. While no names are mentioned there is every outward indication that the statement is framed as a reply to the announcement issued last week by President Price and General Manager Abrams of the United Artists' Corporation.

In that anouncement the two chiefs of the new distributing organization stated that the company "will deal with exhibitors by the single picture only." "We intend to market the pictures of the United Artists individually, picture for picture, each production on its own merits," said Mr. Abrams in a supplementary statement. "We will not sell in any other way."

"To every one with whom I have discussed the matter it is so obvious that the program system and the star series system are for the sole purpose of protecting the 'weak sisters' on the release lists," continues Mr. Abrams in explanation of his company's position, "that I marvel that producers and distributors persist in these practices when the entire trade knows why they exist."

These pronouncements define the issue so far as the United Artists is concerned.

Mr. Williams accepts the gage. "This method wipes out, at a single stroke," he says, "the most vital principle of business practice in the industry—exhibitor protection." He goes on to point out how an exhibitor in a given locality may spend much money and energy in exploiting a certain star in one production only to have the cumulative effect of that investment capitalized by a competitor who may be the successful bidder for the succeeding subject of the player. As an analogy he cites the practice of the producer signing up an actor or actress for a given number of productions before investing heavily in an advertising campaign.

There can be no doubt that the United Artists has not entered lightly on its undertaking, that it has given long and thoughtful consideration to all angles of the question. It will have none of the program or the star system.

Mr. Williams admits the evils of the former—his organization from the beginning has avoided it. By inference he upholds the latter, pointing out that "practically every star series contract in existence gives the exhibitors a medium of protection against the possible decline in quality in the work of any star whose releases are so booked by the one-picture cancellation clause."

It is an interesting controversy. The working out of the single picture policy will be followed with deep interest by the trade at large. Eventually the exhibitor will have much to say as to what system of booking shall prevail—whether it be the program, the star series or the single picture. It may be there is a medium ground. It may be the single picture, with the star series optional. What say you, distributors and exhibitors all?

When Lawmakers Overplay Their Hands.

THERE'S an unusual censorship situation in Boston, one that may afford a grain of comfort to many who have felt the sting of the censor's lash. Religious organizations have been among the foremost to insist that the showing of pictures be restricted on Sunday; and the objection has applied in the case of practically all kinds of subjects. In the present instance, however, the complainant against the interpreter of Bay State laws is the New England manager of the Catholic Art Association, and his disturbed state of mind is due to the action of State Police Chief Plunkett.

"Eternal Light" has been on exhibition at Tremont Temple. Carrying, as it does, the life of the Saviour necessarily it contains what under a Puritanical conception of the law may be classified as "scenes of violence." The Art Association manager claims the production should be shown on Sundays in preference to weekdays. Chief Plunkett says the law compels him to make the eliminations, which means, according to the manager, "every scene from the time Christ appears before Pilate until the ascension." The manager insists if such be the law the law should be changed.

There are many exhibitors throughout the country who will sympathize with the officers of the Art Association—that is, to a degree. There will be a corresponding tendency to indulge in a mild chuckle over the manner in which the antis overplayed their hands; in other words, to express a slight measure of satisfaction at the unexpected manner in which the efforts of the opponents of a moderate Sunday have been uncovered.

The situation affords an excellent demonstration of the narrowness of some of the persons opposed to the men who make and exhibit pictures.

Brookline Does Not Want Motion Pictures.

THERE is one community in the United States where a motion picture theatre is not wanted. In this instance it is not a case of the screen being barred on account of the opposition of a small official board; but the citizens, by a vote in town meeting, have after deliberation declared, 203 to 85, they do not want a theatre in their town. Brookline, Massachusetts, is the community in question. By way of explanation it may be stated that Brookline is one of the richest townships in the country. It is a suburb of Boston. The residents may slip into the Hub for their entertainment, and they are not dependent upon the street cars.

It is of interest to note that one of the principal spokesmen for the granting of a license to one of the three applicants was a clergyman, who based his plea on the number of men who by reason of the coming of prohibition would be deprived of their usual evening diversions.

New York's Local Option Law Winning.

THE local option law has been on the statute books of New York but a few weeks. Already the Empire State is reaping benefit from its plunge into seas declared by many vociferous protestants to be dangerous. The predictions of moral deterioration in communities urban and suburban where the picture theatres were opened on Sundays have failed to materialize. On the contrary, reports from various parts of New York State are to the effect that the moral atmosphere of the towns opening their picture houses on Sundays has been raised.

The New York State Conference of Mayors, from its headquarters in Albany, has sent out inquiries chiefs of police in the towns affected by the change in the law. "Thus far every reply which has reached the hands of Secretary Capes speaks in the highest terms of what really has been accomplished by the Sunday movies," says the Albany correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in his story printed elsewhere in this issue.

One of the first results of opening the houses has been the noticeable disappearance from conspicuous corners of young men who made a practice of congregating there to the consequent annoyance of unescorted women. It has been remarked also that these young men have become regular patrons of the theatres. There has been a decrease in the number of misdemeanors.

In Oswego the trade unions have initiated and put through action that will eliminate one of the chief arguments against the opening of theatres on Sunday. That is the enactment of a ruling that workers in houses thus thrown open shall be assured one day of rest in seven.

New York is blazing a trail for other states in the Union. It is demonstrating that the predictions of disaster so freely uttered whenever the Sunday problem is up for adjustment are based on nothing more substantial than prejudice. It is proving to those who oppose the opening of theatres on Sunday that such action really is in the interest of public order—proving it to those who are open to conviction; and those who are not open to conviction are not worth serious consideration.

As to Tequila, Have a Care.

TOWNS in Mexico bordering the Rio Grande are preparing to reap the benefit of prohibition restrictions expected soon to be in force on the American side of the boundary. The Mexican government already is facilitating communication between the two countries, issuing cards in place of the time-honored passports. Many moving picture theatres will be opened in border Mexican cities, in most of which pleasure resorts will be opened on a wholesale scale, according to our Texas correspondent.

Also it is said these cities on the other side of the Rio Grande are preparing to give thirsty visitors everything they have, from horse racing and cock-fighting to cold beer and Tequila.

To those film men who may have occasion in the course of their travels to visit El Paso we would impart a friendly word. Have a care as to that Tequila stuff. It may not be distilled from the largest thorns of elephantine cactus, but it well might be. Its fuel value may not be equivalent to molten granite raised to 2,500 degrees Fahrenheit—and then again it may be.

Much space has been devoted to a certain famous rabbit that spit in a bulldog's face. Will Winch, of El Paso's Wigwam Theatre, told us a story—we believed it then and we believe it yet—of a timid and stunted Mexican adult male who strolled into Juarez and squandered a month's concealments on three drinks of Tequila—or it may have been two—after which he kicked in the shins the worst desperado in the town, took away his horse, and announced in the chill-inspiring, soft-toned voice of the genuine bad man that he was going to cross the bridge and lick the United States. Thanks to timely telephone information supplied by an alarmed American two well-aimed bullets terminated the invasion even as it began.

If by chance in El Paso you meet Winch—and if you don't meet him you will miss one of the factors in that fast-moving municipality—and he points across the bridge toward Juarez and says "Let's go!" take him on. But if on the other side he says, carelesslike, "Let's have a little Tequila," just smile; let not even a "little" tempt, for a drop is equal to a drink of an ordinary man's rum.

But a drink of Tequila? It converts drear Mexican deserts into a paradise; makes a border gambling dump look like four Canfields rolled into one; transforms a filthy Mexican market into a Back Bay Horticultural Show; paints drab hills in the glories of the Grand Canyon; under its elevating influence a fifteen-cent meal takes on the gilded proportions of a film banquet in the Astor's yacht room.

And the after effects of Tequila? Why, if by chance your friends are enabled to get you back to El Paso you will discover your thirst in the ordinary sense has been dissipated—dissipated is the exact word. No longer will horseshoes float on the top of the contents of the blackest bottle; the fiercest redeye that ever was jolted through alkali dust becomes as innocuous as infant's A1 certified. In fact, your thirst is ruined.

Again we say, have a care as to that Tequila stuff.

SUNDAY LAWS HIT BATHING BEAUTIES

Deferring to the Indianapolis Regulations Sennett's Mermaids Appear Without Costumes

SIX of Max Sennett's "bathing beauties," accompanied by Bothwell Browne, starring in the Sennett film, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," appeared in person and on the screen at the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, during the week of May 11, and were greeted by record-breaking crowds at each performance.

Browne and the "beauties" first appeared in "The Dance of Jealousy," in which the film star demonstrates his ability as a dancer.

After the applause subsided, the bathing girls then appeared in several poses, each wearing the latest creations in bathing costumes. While the audience was looking 'em over, Virginia Eastman —one of the "beauts"—sang several popular songs.

In compliance with the Sunday regulations for Indianapolis theatres, which forbid the appearance in costume of singers and dancers on that day, Mr. Browne and the "beauties" were merely introduced at the Sunday performances by S. Barret McCormick, Managing director of the theatre.

Besides the film "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the program at the Circle for the week included an International News reel, Topical Tips, edited by Mr. McCormick, and popular music by the Circle orchestra under the direction of Signor Natiello.

Edward Davis Was at One Time a Western Minister

THE unique record of being probably the only ecclesiastic to engage in a professional stage career belongs to Edward Davis, who is now playing an important role in support of Creighton Hale and June Caprice in the "Unknown Dancer," the co-stars of the second Capellani production. In addition to his work before the camera, Mr. Davis is also playing a stage engagement at the Lyceum Theatre, New York.

Prior to embarking upon his stage career, Mr. Davis was a Western minister, and for many years served in California and Illinois pastorates. He began his histronic career some twenty years ago when he played the part of the Viceroy of India in "The Cherry Pickers."

In addition to being one of the most finished character actors of the stage, Mr. Davis also has won distinction as a dramatist and producer. The most notable contribution from his pen was "The Seventh Commandment," in which he played the principal role and which enjoyed a long run on Broadway. Mr. Davis also made a highly successful dramatization of Oscar Wilde's "Dorian Grey."

Of recent years Mr. Davis has been devoting his time almost exclusively to the vaudeville stage writing and acting in his own playlets. Mr. Davis has recently been elected to the presidency of the National Vaudeville Artists.

CRANDALL SOUNDS WARNING ON TAX

Calls Attention to 50 Per Cent Impost on All Sums Above the Regular Price of Admission

THAT exhibitors are likely to run up against a lot of trouble because of their lack of knowledge of the revenue law is the statement made by Harry M. Crandall, head of the Crandall string of theatres in Washington, following a controversy among a number of theatre men relative to the imposition of the admission tax.

"There are very few exhibitors," said Mr. Crandall. "who realize that when they increase their price of admission temporarily they are subject to an additional tax. A great many men will run an ordinary program for days and perhaps weeks at a time. Along comes a big feature costing perhaps more money than they are in the habit of paying, and during the run of that subject they jump their admission prices. A house might be charging, for instance, ten cents for ordinary subjects, and ask fifteen cents when the big feature is exhibited.

Tax on Half of Surplus.

"There has been a great deal of complaint in Congress during discussions of measures such as these. The larger part of the complaint has been recorded against the speaking shows, because of the habit of increasing prices when a big star or big road show is put on. There were many members of Congress who were for stopping this practice, and so a clause was inserted in the law providing a higher tax. This provision, as furnished me by the Treasury Department, says: 'A tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employes of any opera house, theatre, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in Section 903, by the person selling such tickets.'

"I think the language of the law is plain enough, and if exhibitors want to escape trouble, they will study its wording. Being located at the Capitol, I have had a number of inquiries concerning this matter, and so I looked into it."

Screen Aspirants Victimized.

A complaint registered at detective headquarters in Atlanta alleges that Jack ("Tex") Hilliard and Mrs. J. G. Thatcher, supposedly a former prima donna in burlesque, had left Atlanta unannounced after obtaining about $5,000 as tuition from about 50 young amateurs who had been promised contracts as players with "The Standard Dramatic Company," a motion picture producing company organized here two months ago by Hilliard and Mrs. Thatcher.

Michigan Passes Negro Bill.

The Condon bill, which passed the Senate and House at the last Michigan Legislature, has been signed by the Governor. This bill makes it illegal for the proprietor of any public resort to discriminate against any one because of race or religion. The bill is designed to give negroes equal privileges with whites in theatres, hotels, etc.

New Outing-Chester Exchanges.

Two new distributors were added last week to the exchanges handling Outing-Chester Pictures—Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, for Eastern Canada, and the Electric Films Corporation, of Washington, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

World Man Visits Ince Studio and Learns of One Story Containing Many Stiff Punches

By Giebler

OUR fair city is very fair these days. Flowers are blooming everywhere; California poppies are popping up on every vacant lot; Bennie Zeidman is wearing a pair of trick trousers as white as the driven snow; Mark Larkin is going to get a pair just like them—only longer; the frozen oranges are all gone and loquats are ripe. "Ain't nature wonderful!"

The old colony is as lively as a nest of crickets.

Fatty Arbuckle has got his ball team in working order; Jess Willard is among us to make a picture; Cecil De Mille has got his atmospheric omnibus ready for service, rates $1 per mile.

The Lou Tellegens are here. Albert E. Smith has gone back to Brooklyn. The Los Angeles Board of Trade is getting ready to cultivate the picture industry at a luncheon. John Fairbanks caught the biggest trout ever snagged in Bear Valley—14 pounds 9 ounces on the drug store scales.

Jack Cunningham is back from location. Howard Hickman, who has been sick, is better. Margarita Fisher from Santa Barbara, paid the colony, the big stores and hat shops a visit. Harry Sherman has come back to the Coast.

Vernon Fans Move to Culver City.

One fair day I went out to Culver City, and over to the Ince studio, where Jerry Storm was making a big prize fight feature with Charles Ray as the star, three hundred fight fans, and the greater part of the pugilistic population of Vernon as advisors and assistants.

It was some scene, and some scrap! Some scraps would be better, for they kept going all afternoon. I never saw such atmosphere. It was perfect. The extras were fight fans to a man.

There was a real referee, De Witt Van Court, trainer and instructor from the Los Angeles Athletic Club, who taught Jeffries, Corbett, Britt, Kauffman and all of the big ones how to fight.

Al Kauffman was at the studio taking a part in the feature. I talked to Al and found him a most interesting chap. He showed me his "scrap" book, with a long list of battles:

Here's A Real Scrap Book.

"Thirty-nine rounds with Jim Flynn. Jack Johnson to a draw. Knockout for Bill Lang, Australian champion. Fights with Jim Barry, Sam Langford and a dozen more. Main events, all of them."

Ray Kirkwood, fighter as well as actor, who is remembered for his scrap with Jimmy Kilbane and other middleweights, was there in a part; Cliff Jordan, Jimmy Fortner, local scrappers, and Crouching Jesse Glasser, fly-weight champion of the West coast, were also cast in the fight film.

George Williams, manager of the Vernon fights, and Fred Moore, his assistant, were there to see that things were technically correct from a pugilistic standpoint; and in addition to all this, Tom Ince giving his personal supervision and putting the T. H. I. touch to the whole thing.

Pug Gives the Lowdown on Ray.

The scene represented the interior of a gymnasium where weekly fights are held. Three hundred persons filled the seats that rose in tiers to the roof. I talked to the extras, the fighters, the soda and peanut butchers, to Van Court, to Charlie Ray, to Jerry Storm, to everybody. One of the fighters explained the story of the scene to me.

"Here's the way it goes," he said. "Charlie—say! there's a great kid. 'Course I wouldn't want to take him away from the movies, but I'd like to train him and manage him in the ring. Can he fight? Can—he—fight!!! Say! that boy's got an awful wallop. I know, I been working out with him. Ask Al Kauffman.

"You see Charlie's a raw kid that comes to the gym for a chance to learn the game. We try him out. He's no good, too soft, bad foot work, poor wind. We offer him a job at the gym, though, and he sticks around.

"There's a big mill coming off between two champs. Al Kauffman and Jack Connelly are the fighters.

Right Here the Kale Enters.

"Charlie finds out that Kauffman is going to lay down—take the count—you know what I mean, frame the fight. Charlie's square. He nails Al about it, and Al says: 'I'll fix you, kid,' and tries to hand Charlie a bunch of kale, you know what I mean, hush money. And Charlie says: 'T'ell with that,' and passes him a jab that puts him out.

"This is just after the preliminary bout where Ray Kirkwood and Jimmy Fortner mix four rounds. The main event is next, and Charlie has to take Kauffman's place and go on and fight Jack.

"Of course there's a lot more to the play, a girl and a lot of love stuff. You'll have to get somebody else to tell you about that, though. The fightin's all I'm interested in."

Charlie Ray said: "Do I like this kind of a part? Yes, it gives me a chance to get some exercise that I need. This certainly limbers a chap up. It's great stuff, and one more example of the variety that makes screen acting the most fascinating game in the world.

Screen Acting That Leaves Its Mark.

"One week I'm doing straight stuff, maybe a society part, then something like this the next. A short time ago I had a horseback part to do. Did you ever do any horseback riding with about two years between the rides?"

I acknowledged that I have had that painful experience.

"I should have trained for that horseback work the same as I did for this fight," he said, in reminiscent tones.

I did not press him for details, but I am sure that horseback work must have left marks on Charlie, either anatomically or mentally, that were not pleasant.

Jerry Storm came along then. Jerry was getting things in shape for the fight. He climbed into the ring and panorammed the arena with his eagle eye. It all looked pretty good to me, but it didn't suit Jerry.

"Hey, you fellow with the red tie, and you with the whiskers—move over to the right."

Whiskers and tie shuffled themselves to new positions.

Injecting Atmosphere.

Jerry made more changes—picked out three short extras and mixed them up with some of their tall brethren; spotted a fan who looked sleepy, and woke him up; told one to put his hat on, made another take his lid off—did things no one but a clever director with an eye to atmosphere could have thought of. And it made a wonderful difference. The whole crowd looked more natural—snappier—more like the real thing.

Charlie Ray and Jack Connelly climbed into the ring. Van Court took his place; seconds, with towels, bath robes, sponges, palmleaf fans, got in their corners.

"Let's go," said Jerry. The camera began to function.

Jack took a poke at Charlie. Charlie ducked. Charlie took a punch at Jack, landed, and Jack grunted. The fight fans up in the seats began to take notice of things.

Converting Actors Into Fight Fans.

Charlie rushed Jack and Jack turkey-trotted away. They came together again, clinched, and Jack got in some short jabs in Charlie's ribs. Van Court separated them. Jack took a long shot at Charlie s shoulder and landed a swiping blow that left a long red mark.

Then Jack took the offensive, made a long jab, and the floor of the ring rose right up and hit Charlie on the back. But not for long. Three seconds and Charlie was up and they were at it again.

The extras howled. They had stopped being extras, they were what they were supposed to be, fight fans at a good lively fight. They had come here, as they supposed, to see a couple of actors go through a fake fight, but it had turned out to be a real scrap, with none of the ladylike fighters they had looked for.

No Acting in This; It Was a Fight.

It did not matter to them that one of the fighters was a famous actor—he was a fighter to them. They rooted, they coached, they took sides. They got up on their hind legs and hollered. And a most beautiful smile of satisfaction spread over the face of Jerry Storm, director.

Jerry was getting just what he wanted out of the crowd. He was getting the real atmosphere of a fight.

We had three rounds of it—jabbing, slashing, punching, milling it in good shape.

Then they made a close-up, sharp, short, brutal work.

Charlie knocked Jack to the ropes, and as he straightened up and staggered toward the center, landed one of the finest blows of the fight on his opponent's neck. But in the next minute Jack got back by drubbing Charlie on the ribs till it sounded like thumping on an empty barrel.

Many Little Hits to Make One Big One.

It was a beautiful scrap.

To be sure Julian Josephson had written it down in the scenario that Charlie wins the fight, but that did not make any difference, it was a real fight just the same, and if it had been a real match, it might have gone on round after round. The boys were well matched and well trained, and it would have taken more of an expert than I am to have placed a bet with a chance of winning.

Of course, as my pugilistic friend said, there is a lot more to the story of the film—a girl and a lot of love stuff. Colleen Moore is the girl, and J. P. Lockney, George Williams, Otto Hoffman, Edward Jobson, Arthur Millet and Bert Moore all have good parts.

If the other part of the story has as much punch to it as the fight has, it is going to be another Ray hit.

Dorothy Green to Star in Series of World Pictures

MISS DOROTHY GREEN, who appeared with Montagu Love in "The Rough Neck" recently on the World program, has been engaged by World Pictures to star in a series of productions which will be made at the World Peerless studio at West Fort Lee, N. J. Miss Green, who has been starred as a "vamp" in a number of productions made by other concerns, will essay an entirely new line of screen impersonations in her coming World pictures—she will be seen as a young society girl in several of these productions. Frank Reicher has been engaged to direct her and the working title of her first World picture is "The American Way."

Miss Green has just completed work in "The Dark Star," an International Film production directed by Alan Dwan. This was her first work after recovering from an attack of influenza which prostrated her shortly after she had finished the World picture "The Rough Neck."

Dorothy Green
World star, presents our idea of a "movie fan."

It was in an odd manner in which Miss Green entered pictures. While she was in London on the speaking stage a contest was conducted to secure for pictures the most beautiful woman in England for the role of vampire in coming film. Miss Green's picture was submitted by a friend, unknown to her, and out of the 12,000 contestants she won first prize and made such a hit in this production that she later was engaged to "vamp" in a number of other films.

Hughes Engaged for Talmadge Picture.

Gareth Hughes, who came to this country originally with the Welsh players in the production of "Change" and who later made a pronounced success in "Moloch," has just been engaged for an important role by Joseph M. Schenck, for Norma Talmadge's newest picture, "By Right of Conquest." Mr. Hughes will play opposite Natalie Talmadge. Gareth Hughes recently appeared with Marguerite Clark in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," with Florence Reed in "The Woman Under Oath," with Charlotte Walker in "Every Mother's Son," and with Evelyn Nesbit in "Woman Woman."

Godsol Is Congratulated on His Full Vindication

FRANK J. GODSOL, widely known throughout the film industry both in this country and abroad, who became a character of international interest some months ago when the French government charged him with having exacted millions of dollars in commission on automobile orders for the French government, has just received a letter from Charles D. Newton, attorney, general of New York state congratulating him upon his complete vindication of the charges made against him.

Newspapers throughout the country treated the Godsol case at great length when the French government's charges were made and reports of it found their way into the moving picture trade journals, because of Mr. Godsol's connection with the general amusement business. Mr. Godsol had represented Al H. Woods in Europe, with offices in Berlin, prior to the war, and before that time had been associated with well-known American film exporters in their European business. When the war broke out Mr. Godsol was obliged to leave Berlin and came to this country, where he was active in handling purchasing contracts for the French government.

As the result of the charges which were preferred against him, Mr. Godsol was arrested, and for a time was in danger of being extradited to France, where, he contended, it would have been impossible for him to secure a fair trial because of existing public sentiment and the nature of the charges which had been made against him. Only through the efforts of some of the ablest lawyers in the United States was his extradition prevented. His complete vindication followed before the Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia.

Newark Metropolitan Moves.

Under the headline "Progress," the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company of Newark, N. J., announces the fact that it has moved from its old offices in the Strand Theatre building at 118 Market street to larger quarters at 25 Branford place, where it occupies the entire second floor. The Metropolitan claims the distinction of being the oldest and largest film exchange in New Jersey.

Cohen Leases Bronx Strand.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors League, has leased the Bronx Strand Theatre at Westchester-Union and Prospect avenues, New York, for a long term of years at an aggregate rental of about $175,000. The property consists of a closed and open-air theatre with a combined seating capacity of 2,200.

EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGEMEN DINE

Theatre Managers from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and the District Are Convinced That Trade Rules Are Beneficial in Effect—Jolly Time Follows

SPEAKERS at the dinner tendered by the exhibitors of Washington City territory to the local exchange managers, confining themselves to less than twenty-five words each, created a great deal of surprise when they arose and declared: "We have no axe to grind and we are glad to be here with you." It was like the end of a perfect day. There had been a great deal of complaint on the part of a few of the exhibitors against the trade rule adopted by the Washington Exchange Managers' Association. It was proposed that a gathering of exhibitors from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and the District of Columbia be held in Washington, May 15, and the whole matter discussed.

Aimed to Equalize Competition.

When the exhibitors began pouring into the city from distant points it looked as though they were out for scalps. They made their headquarters at the New Harrington Hotel and the exhibitors of each state held separate meetings in the morning. There was a meeting of the grievance committee made up of three exchange managers and an exhibitor from each of the states and the District of Columbia in the offices of Harry M. Crandall at noon, and a general meeting at the Harrington at 3 o'clock.

All of the meetings of the exhibitors were held behind closed doors and what transpired is not known. It is understood, however, that those most familiar with the entire matter persuaded their fellows that the exchange managers were not "out to get the good exhibitors, but to make bad exhibitors change their methods and equalize the competition between good and bad." At any rate, when they came out of the meeting a different idea was had of the situation and when exhibitors and managers got together at Harvey's for the dinner everything was lovely.

Eighty-four men lined the tables in the big dining room at Harvey's. During the serving of the several courses all speeches but one were tabooed. That speech was made by President Robert Smeltzer, of the Exchange Managers' Association, incident to the presentation of a handsome silver cigarette case to George Lenehan, who was to sever his connection with Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, for whom he has been manager here, to go to New York for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Give Lenehan a Send Off.

Mr. Smeltzer voiced the sentiments of exchange managers and exhibitors alike when he said that "George is one of the best liked men in the game today, and we are sorry to see him go." The case bears the inscription on the inside, "Good is not good enough, the best is not too good. From the Exchange Managers' Association of Washington, D. C., May 15, 1919."

There were many among those assembled around the tables who did not know their fellows, and at the suggestion of Harry M. Crandall, who acted as toastmaster, starting at one end of the big table, each guest arose and announced his name and that of his theatre or the exchange with which he was connected as the case might be.

Every time Harry Crandall got on his feet to make a speech, and he's no speechmaker, according to his own statements, Julian Brylawski, of the Cosmos Theatre, had some sort of a surprise to hand out. First it was two young women who came in to sing and play the piano—then it was a whole jazz band that came near breaking up the meeting and attracted all of the diners from the other rooms in the building.

There's Entertainment a Plenty.

Edwin A. Sherwood, of Pathe, delighted his audience by his piano selections and parodies on popular songs, and Nick Weems sang while everyone applauded, for he has "some voice."

The various speakers, including Jake Wells, president of the Virginia Exhibitors' League; Tommy Goldberg, vice-president of the Maryland League; Lewis Thompson, special representative of Mary Pickford; H. P. Lovelace, assistant to the president of the United Artists; Walter Rand, representative of Douglas Fairbanks, and "Bob" Smeltzer, of the World Film Corporation, merely stated their pleasure at being present.

The whole trouble was with Abe Dresner, who was afraid that the crowd would miss the opening numbers of "The Broadway Revue," in the Lyceum Theatre, next door. It developed afterward that he had fixed things up with George Douglas, manager of the troupe, to pull some jokes at the expense of the movie men, and thereafter there were phone calls for W. A. Busch, telegrams for Bob Smeltzer, and girls for some of the unmarried (?) men. Some of the boys wanted to see the show from the wings and toward the end of the performance Mr. Sherwood was escorted to the center of the footlights and made to go through a portion of the act with the leading woman. He sang and danced and was encored, sharing the honors with Dresner, the arch plotter.

Just Who Was There.

Those who participated in the meeting were:

Harry M. Crandall, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the District of Columbia; Jake Wells, of Richmond, president of the Exhibitors' League of Virginia; L. Schlichter, president of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland, operating the Bridge and other theatres in Baltimore; Robert B. Smeltzer, manager of the World Film Corporation exchange and president of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, and the secretary of that organization; Oscar A. CANADIAN SHOWMEN HOLD BUSINESS MEET

To Assess Protective Association Members Cost of Campaign Securing Amendment to Ontario Act

THE members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario held a follow-up business meeting on Tuesday, May 13, at the association headquarters, 143 Yonge street, Toronto, to consider a number of matters that had been discussed at the convention of Canadian exhibitors held in Toronto on Monday and Tuesday, May 5 and 6. About forty members of the organization attended the conference, the chairman of which was J. C. Brady, owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, the president of the association.

Announcement was made that the expenses for the convention in Toronto, which had been attended by almost 200 exhibitors, wives and others, had exceeded the contributions for the purpose by only $7.98. Manager J. Crang, of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, covered this deficit with a personal donation so that not one cent of the cost of the convention would have to come out of the association's treasury or be charged up to the Canadian Exhibitors' Film Exchange Company, Limited, for the direct benefit of which the convention had been called.

Scott to Make Trip.

F. Guest, of Hamilton, Ontario, asked the Ontario association for the services of Secretary Thomas Scott for the new co-operative exchange company and it was finally decided to loan Mr. Scott to the new company. He is to make an extensive trip for organization purposes and to arrange bookings, etc., for the new exchange. The Ontario association decided to pay half of both the salary and expense of Mr. Scott during this organization work.

A. W. Herron, of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, congratulated the association on securing the amendment to the Ontario Act which provides for the admission of children to theatres on Saturday and holiday afternoons without parents or guardians. J. A. Morrison, of Meaford, Ontario, suggested that the exhibitors of small towns would have preferred to have the children's matinee privilege on Tuesdays. In cities of less than 5,000, different conditions prevail on Saturday from the large cities, he argued. No action was taken by the meeting.

Members to Pay Campaign Cost.

The members of the association are to be assessed for the cost of conducting the campaign to secure the amendment which permits the children's performances in Ontario. Many letters congratulating the association on the securing of this concession were read, these communications having been written by W. H. Roenigh, of Lindsay; R. S. Tickner, of Toronto; G. Swanwick, of Hamilton; J. Sullivan, of St. Catharines, and others.

No announcement was made at the meeting regarding the film features or service, which the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange Company would handle. The out-of-town members present included F. Guest, Hamilton; J. S. Smart, Port Hope; G. Swanwick, Hamilton; A. Bugg, Midland; E. Moule, Brantford, and J. A. Morrison, of Meaford.

Local Big "U" Holds Luncheon at the Astor

AN opening gun in the Universal drive was fired Saturday, May 17, when some of the department chiefs from the home office dined with the sales force of the Big U Exchange in the Yacht Room at the Hotel Astor.

Sam Zierler, general sales manager of the Big U, was responsible for the luncheon, and seated around him were Harry Berman, Joe Schnitzer and E. H. Goldstein, the trio chiefly responsible for Universal's national sales policy.

All of them told how the New York exchange could win the prize which is being run to spur the men on to the greatest kind of celebration for the seventh birthday of the company: a Universal picture in every house during the months of June and July. Harry Levey, who takes care of the industrial and educational films for Universal, told how in Chicago, from whence he had just returned, the boys were all on their toes determined to bring home the bacon, and that the New York bunch would surely have to go some to win.

Charley Moses, a prominent Staten Island exhibitor, was a guest of the chairman.

Those present were Sam Zierler, Charley Moses, Joe Schnitzer, Harry Berman, E. H. Goldstein, Harry Levey, W. C. Herrmann, W. W. Kramer, C. H. Shock, W. R. Wilkerson, Charles Rosenzweig, Lou Levey, Fred E. Baer, A. Reinleib, Edgar B. Haines, L. Kutinsky, Dave Sohmer, James Holden, E. Nathan, George Steiner, George D. Uffner, Henry Huber, Phil Winnick, L. B. Sherwood, Leo Abrams, Ben Appel, Leo Fox, H. Furst, Nat Goldberg, H. Sacks, Nat Liebskind, Joe Miller, Frank Williams.

Films Destroyed at Theatre Fire.

Two projection machines were ruined and several reels of pictures were destroyed at the new Burell Theatre, Ware, Mass., when a spark ignited the film being displayed. Fire spread to every part of the asbestos booth. It was the second performance at the theatre, and about 300 were in the audience.

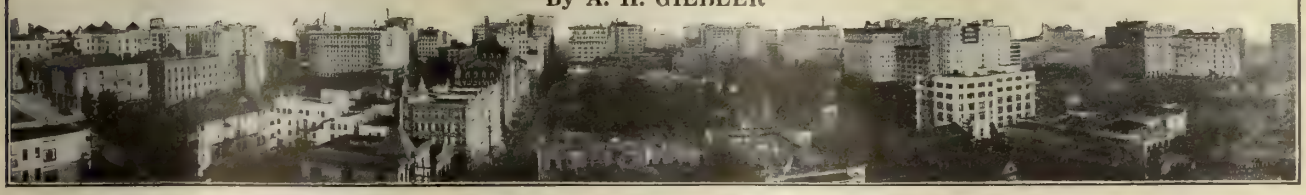
The orchestra kept playing, and the audience filed slowly out of the auditorium without the slightest trace of a panic. Lee J. Shuster and his wife were in the booth, and in attempting to extinguish the blaze both were burned about the hands and arms. Mr. Shuster said the fire was caused by the "stiffness" of the new machine.

Buys Foreign Rights to Kenyon Films.

Bech, Van Siclen & Company, Inc., exporters, has purchased the foreign rights to three Doris Kenyon pictures which were purchased from the Parex Film Corporation. The Pictures are "Inn of the Blue Moon," "Street of Seven Stars," and "Twilight."

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER



Deny They Will Leave Los Angeles.

IN regard to the rumor that has been floating around Filmland that the members of the United Artists' Association will leave Los Angeles to locate permanently in New York, representatives of Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks stated that not one of these artists had any intention of leaving the west coast, now or in the future.

D. W. Griffith is at present making a production in the East, but no announcement has come from him that he intends to remain in the East permanently. His manager, E. C. Bidwell, admitted that though Mr. Griffith is producing in the East, his activities are concerned only with his own company, and that his plans will not affect the plans of the other United Artists.

John Fairbanks stated that with all the improvements his brother Douglas has been making on the Fairbanks plant, it would be bad policy to abandon it at this stage of the game to move East.

Speaking for Mary Pickford, Studio Manager Benson said that Miss Pickford intended to remain in the West permanently.

Edward Biby, in speaking for Chaplin, said that Chaplin is located permanently in the West and would not consider any proposition to move his organization East.

United Picture Theatres Offices in Los Angeles.

According to an announcement made a few days ago by William Alexander, western division manager of the United Picture Theatres of America, the general offices and entire distributing organization of the United Theatres will be moved from New York to Los Angeles, making this city its permanent headquarters. There are upward of eighty officials and employes in the New York offices, and most of these will come West.

J. A. Berst, president, will perhaps make his home in Los Angeles, as he spends a great part of his time on the west coast, on business connected with the several producing companies making pictures for his program.

Miss May, known as Doris Lee, has appeared in several Charles Ray productions, and Douglas MacLean has appeared as leading man for Mary Pickford, Enid Bennett and other feminine stars.

New Lehrman Company.

Henry Lehrman, whose new studio in Culver City is nearing completion, has organized a producing company, and will begin the filming of comedies within two weeks.

Harry Sherman, manager of the company, has just returned from a trip to New York, where he closed a deal involving nearly a million dollars with the First National Exhibitors for a series of twenty-four Lehrman comedies at $40,000 each.

Moorhouse, a member of the Bull's Eye Motion Picture Company, was seriously injured one day last week while depicting an inebriated man riding in a tub-shaped car on an amusement concession at Venice, for scenes in a comedy. Clara Horton Falls Off Boat.

While working in a scene on the steamer Cabrillo, off the coast of Catalina, Clara Horton was standing near the deck where part of the railing had been taken off, watching a "burial" at sea for a Rex Beach production. The steamer was rolling heavily, and one of the rolls took Miss Horton clear off her feet, throwing her into the ocean. A sailor standing near jumped in after her and brought her back on board before any great harm was done.

Bulk of Estate to Charity.

The will of the late Daniel Gilfether, character actor in films, who died on May 2, leaves the bulk of his estate, valued at $10,000, to the Little Sisters of the Poor, of Boston. A bequest of $500 was left to the actor's brother, Thomas Gilfether, of Oakland, and several small sums to fraternal societies, among them the Actors' Order of Friendship of New York, and the Long Beach lodges of the Elks and Knights of Columbus.

Elliott Dexter will play the title part, and Gloria Swanson the leading feminine role.

Fatty's Team Loses and Wins.

The first game of the Vernon Tigers, Fatty Arbuckle's ball club, with the San Francisco Seals on May 13, was the occasion of a number of baseball comedy stunts being pulled off on the field before the regular game began by Fatty Arbuckle himself, his leading woman, Molly Malone, Al St. John and Buster Keaton, all in the uniform of the Tigers. Comedy balls and bats were used, and the fans who had come early for the game enjoyed the show immensely, while the battery of cameras shot the action from many angles. The Tigers lost the first game to the Seals, but they won the second day's game.

The Scream Club Party.

The Scream Club party given at the Dome Cafe in Ocean Park by Clark Irvine on the evening of May 10, was attended by a large number of old Screamers as well as many new ones. No dues are collected and there are no formalities to be observed. The next meeting will be held at the Sierra Madre Club.

Three Poppy Comedies Ready.

The first showing of the new "Poppy" comedies featuring Mack Swain, was given at the California Theatre last week by Harry Leonhardt, president of the Poppy Comedy Company. The comedies are a departure from the usual slapstick and depend on plots and complicated and humorous situations, that develop the plot, to register. The comedies might be called polite comedies with just enough impoliteness in them to make people laugh.

The three films now ready are each one reel in length and are entitled, "Ambrose's Day Off," "Herioc Ambrose," and "Daddy Ambrose." Lottie Cruse plays opposite Mack Swain, the films were directed by Harry C. Raymaker and W. S. Frederick, and the photography, which is worthy of special mention, was in the hands of Park J. Ries. The Poppy Comedies will be released by the Frohman Amusement Corporation through state rights exchanges.

Garrick to be First Run House.

Manager J. Halsell, of the Garrick Theatre on Broadway, has decided on a policy for the future of showing first run films of a semi-sensational nature.

"B.B." Means "Beauteous Blonde."
Also Bessie Barriscale, star of the "B.B." features, released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

"I find that the larger houses are afraid to book films that are radically different or melodramatic," says Mr. Halsell. "They stick to a conservative line of program because they must cater to the masses and must play to capacity. With a house like the Garrick, I can't expect to play to everyone in town, because I haven't the capacity. I can only run pictures that appeal to a small class of the public, and I mean to play to those who like unusual stuff as long as the supply of high class attractions along this line holds out. There are several mighty classy films of this kind on the shelves in local film exchanges, and I'm going to run them."

Vitagraph Wants Theatre.

Negotiations have been started by the Vitagraph Company for a lease on the Rialto Theater on Broadway, to be used as a first run house of Vitagraph productions. The Rialto is now being operated by J. A. Quinn, who is in the east for the purpose of launching a new studio proposition. The deal for the theatre will probably not be closed until after the return of Mr. Quinn.

Alarcon to Exhibit in Mexico, Guatemala and San Salvador—Would Amend Mexican Copyright

UNDER management of Senor J. de la C. Alarcon, general manager of the International Amusement Company, which owns six theatres at El Paso, Vitagraph films are going to be exhibited in Mexico, Guatemala and San Salvador.

Senor Alarcon was in Dallas May 18 and discussed plans for his new venture, which calls for the opening of film exchanges by the International at Monterey, Mexico City and Juarez. He has arranged for the exhibition throughout the Mexican republic of several hundred new pictures with titles in Spanish. In places where the express service cannot be relied upon the film boxes will be forwarded by special messenger. Senor Alarcon has the assurance that Mexican government officials will further his enterprise, especially since many of the films to be exhibited are of an educational nature. Should the business experiment prove a success, film exchanges will be opened in Yucatan, Tampico and Vera Cruz.

Mexicans Strong for Serials.

"I believe that Mexico offers a great opportunity for film exhibition," says Senor Alarcon. "The Mexicans are human like everyone else and prefer to see really good pictures rather than the junk which they have been forced to witness of late years. With the exception of the Universal service there are hardly any films of merit in the republic. I find that the Mexican theatre fans are long on serials. In theatres where they have a hard time getting any films they run the entire fifteen episodes of a serial in a single day. This system I am going to avoid. I plan to allow exhibitors to run at the most three episodes a day for five days. There is no money in running the serial at one sitting according to the present Mexican system."

Seek Amendment of Copyright Law.

Senor Alarcon has just returned from New York, where he has been endeavoring to get the co-operation of some of the large producing companies in an effort to get the Carranza government to amend the Mexican copyright laws as affecting films.

"The Mexican copyright law was passed when there were no films on general exhibition," Senor Alarcon says. "It lists films with books to be copyrighted, declaring that two copies of each film or book must be filed with the patent office. Now, while it does not cost much to file a couple of copies of a book, it is an expensive matter to leave two copies of each film at the patent office.

"We believe we can secure an amendment whereby two copies of the synopsis of the film can be filed. We have made formal request of the Carranza government for such action, which if taken will mean a better opening for high class films in Mexico. I believe there is a great future in the film business in Mexico and that is why I am getting on the ground early with my film exchanges. I know that hundreds of others will follow."

How Exhibitor Passed Word About "Our Teddy"

MANAGER LEE, of the Opera House, Lamar, Col., is convinced that the proper way to put over a big feature picture in a small town, when you really believe you have something good, is to get your publicity and advertising aids started well in advance of the booking date, then show the picture for as long a run as possible. Lee used these methods in showing "Our Teddy," the McClure authorized Roosevelt picture, and the success which he scored has led him to make it a permanent policy.

Weeks before "Our Teddy" was billed to show in Lamar, Manager Lee made it a point to come out on his stage every evening and announce to his audience that the Roosevelt film was coming and that it was a first class attraction.

Manager Lee's patronage is drawn not only from the people of Lamar, but largely from the farmers and miners in the outlying country districts. His idea in telling his folks about the production so far in advance was to insure the circulation of the news among his patrons living some distance from town.

Lee backed his announcements with front-page advertisements in the Lamar newspaper, which has a large circulation in the surrounding country. The result was that the Lamar Opera House was packed at every performance of the picture and movie-goers in the town proper formed only part of the large audience which attended. The Fords, wagons, and saddle horses parked outside Lee's theatre explained where the rest came from.

Hackensack Has Too Many Theatres for Population

HACKENSACK, N. J., has a population of 16,000. Theatres in the town are the Lyric, Eureka, Bijou, Star and Royal, with a combined seating capacity of 3,200. Hugh Otis, of the Lyric Theatre, who has been in the town about six years, believes there are too many houses in the city for the number of movie patrons. He claims they have no population from which to draw outside of Hackensack. Surrounding cities, such a Bogota and Ridgefield Park, all have theatres of their own and as the carfare is 7 cents they will not come to Hackensack.

Mr. Otis claims that not over 10 per cent. of the population attends the theatres in Hackensack. He also believes in higher prices for the productions in the bigger theatres. He can remember the time when he could get the service for $75 a week in Hackensack, and now a minimum is $75 a day.

Sam Newton, Jr., is manager for the Eureka Theatre Company, owning the Eureka Theatre, a new house costing $60,000, seating about 1,000, which opened March 10 to a good business with Nazimova in "Out of the Fog." The Eureka is a very neat little house, has a Wurlitzer organ, costing $10,000, and caters to a select crowd. The writer visited all the other theatres and only found the theatres partly filled.

POLICE TESTIFY FOR SUNDAY MOVIES

Tell New York State Mayors' Conference That Moral Atmosphere Has Been Bettered in Many Cities Where Shows Are Permitted—Question as to Proper Fees

By C. L. Grant

THAT the operating of motion picture houses on Sunday in a number of cities in New York State has had the effect of bettering the moral atmosphere, particularly among the young men and women of the cities, is evident from replies which are now being received by the State Mayors' Conference headquarters of Albany in answer to a letter sent out last week to the chiefs of police of such places, asking them to give their own opinion as to whether or not Sunday shows have been detrimental and have worked at cross purposes to the police. Thus far every reply which has reached the hands of Secretary Capes speaks in the highest terms of what really has been accomplished by the Sunday moving picture performances.

Decrease in Misdemeanors.

Take the city of Jamestown, for instance, the chief of police has informed Mr. Capes that the Sunday motion picture shows there have served to rid the streets and corners of young men who formerly congregated on Sunday evenings, and that it was noticeable that as the weeks have passed these young men have become regular patrons of the show houses and that there is no more trouble from men of this type annoying women who passed. Furthermore, the chief of police expressed the belief that the atmosphere of the city was perceptibly raised by the type of pictures being shown. There has been a decrease of misdemeanors which might possibly have continued had it not been for the opening of Sunday shows which serve to entertain young men and women in a clean and attractive manner. There has been no case of any burglary being inspired by movies, this contention having been one of the points in the argument against Sunday motion picture shows and the needs of censorship in this state.

Mayors Are Seeking Facts.

Similar letters have been received from Lacakawanna and other places about the state. The Conference of Mayors, while taking no sides in the present discussion, which is being waged in many cities, is, however, collecting data for the use of these cities which will furnish them authentic information as to the effect of Sunday motion picture shows in the various municipalities, the amount of tax which is being charged by cities enjoying Sunday shows and likewise what provision is being made towards guaranteering the residents of a city that the pictures will measure up to a given standard.

A new feature has arisen, however, during the past week. Organized labor is taking an active interest in the efforts on the part of the cities through their municipal governing bodies to settle the question as to whether or not the residents shall enjoy Sunday shows. In Oswego, organized labor is demanding, and has secured, the provision of one day of rest in seven, a feature which many now think should have been incorporated in the bill.

License Fees for Sunday Shows.

Schenectady, which has been more or less in the limelight on the question of Sunday movies for two or three years past, on account of the fact that the shows were closed through action on the part of the courts, is now seeking to reopen its show houses on Sunday and through the State Conference of Mayors is seeking much information with the idea of enacting a most comprehensive city ordinance.

The ordinance, as it has now been drawn up, provides that the proprietors of the theatres should pay a license fee based on seating capacity and the prices charged for admission, and also states that the picture to be shown on Sunday must be announced to the Mayor three days previous in order that he may pass on the merits of the film.

The first flat rate in connection with the license fees is based on the seating capacity of the house regardless of the attendance, the rate being 20 per cent. of the capacity up to 500, at the rate of admission charged. In addition, there is a proposed levy of $2 for every 100 persons admitted over a capacity of 500. In the case of theatres seating 500 and charging 10 cents admission, the first levy will be $10 a Sunday. The price of admission is not to be advanced over that charged on other days of the week. Where different prices prevail for seats in a theatre, the flat assessment is to be based on the maximum price of admission.

Sunday Show Fight in Watertown.

One of the hottest fights being waged in any city in New York State at the present time in settling the question of Sunday motion picture shows, is taking place in Watertown, with the outcome apparently an even toss-up. The city has a resident population of 30,000 served by a half dozen motion picture houses, which have always enjoyed a good business. In addition, there is a large outlying population which the shows in Watertown attract.

Practically every church in Watertown had special sermons on May 18 against Sunday movies, these being what might be termed "opening guns" in the present campaign. Those opposing the proposition voiced the opinion that the existing sentiment among the church going public is sufficiently large to influence the common council not to pass the measure. On the other side of the fence, however, over 6,000 persons have signed petitions, asking the city fathers to accord Watertown Sunday shows from now on.

Jamestown City Fathers Split Over Sunday Opening

AN open split has occurred in the city administration of Jamestown, N. Y., with the question of Sunday moving picture shows as the dividing wedge and the mayor and aldermen on opposite sides of the fence. Feeling is running high and it is openly avowed that new fusion parties will be organized, the political structures of which shall be builded straight up from the plank in their platforms favoring or opposing Sunday amusements.

As an evidence of the way the public feels, the largest number of voters who ever went to the polls in a local election voted on a referendum of the question. As the result of hard campaigning ordinances were introduced in the Common Council, one to forbid and the other to permit such exhibitions. Real fireworks began when they passed the ordinance forbidding any form of Sunday amusement, specifically mentioning the moving pictures.

Mayor Carlson immediately called a special election on the straight question of whether Sunday moving picture shows and baseball should be permitted or forbidden. The result was that the number of votes cast exceeded those of any previous election. Sunday amusements won their day by more than two to one.

LONDON THE WORLD'S FILM BOURSE?

John D. Tippett Productions Based on the Premise That International Distribution of Pictures Will Be Dominated by English Interests—Opposing Views

THE silence surrounding B. P. Schulberg's recent resignation from the United Artists Corporation to identify himself with a new English film distributing company, as he at that time stated, is now dispelled in the announcement of John D. Tippett Productions, a corporation just created, which will operate film distributing depots throughout the world, and the principal of which is John D. Tippett, managing director of the Transatlantic Film Company, Ltd., of London, which is the European corrollary of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of America.

Mr. Tippett is known throughout Europe as one of the prominent film executives abroad. He left America for England six years ago and inaugurated and conducted the European distribution of the Universal pictures. He founded the Transatlantic Film Company for this purpose, and has since made this trademark a potent factor in European film circles.

Tippett Well Established Abroad.

He is the only American in the history of the motion picture industry to operate consistently throughout Europe through his own offices. Other American concerns have been following the practice of combining with European film houses for this purpose.

The plan of John D. Tippett Productions is to operate distributing offices in all the principal cities of the world, with its chief office in London. Immediately upon his arrival in America Mr. Tippett engaged B. P. Schulberg as manager of the enterprise in America.

With this combination of international film experience it is said that the Tippet forces contemplate the construction of an international film company which will be of service to the industry on both sides of the Atlantic, with an international exchange throughout the civilized world. Mr. Tippett believes that London is the natural capitol of the commercial branch of the film industry, and that in the future the English film mart will dominate the moving picture markets of the world.

His Location Backs His Theory.

In selecting London as his chief base of operations, therefore, he is only consistent with his theory that the commercial future of the industry will be dictated from the British capitol. It is said that the motivating reason for the creation of John D. Tippett Productions is his recognition of the trend in film circles which is leading the motion picture toward special production individually exploited.

In line with this thought, in a statement which he left for the American trade press just before he sailed for London a few days ago, Mr. Tippett said:

"For a long time it has been borne in upon us in Europe, as it must have been upon the trade in America, that the new era of special productions distributed on an individual basis, with each picture considered as a unique and distinctive attraction, is fast approaching, if not indeed already here. Under these circumstances, any far-seeing film executive would be induced to adjust his organization to adapt itself to the new system of specialized distribution. Therefore, in taking this radical step, I am doing what any far-sighted business man would do, with the dawn of a new distributing regime showing itself so clearly over the film horizon.

"There is another very important factor in the situation which I believe is not being given sufficiently serious consideration by American film men—that is, the necessity for recognizing London in the future as the center, from a commercial viewpoint, of the film activities of the world. Geographically and financially situated as it is, nothing that I can foresee can disturb the conclusion that London is the logical bourse of the film industry.

John D. Tippett
Managing director of John Tippett Productions, London.

"This statement may cause a controversy among film men in America, but I am prepared to meet such a contest of opinion with facts that are beyond dispute. London will undoubtedly dominate the film markets of the world in the future, because the European market, now that the war is over, will assume more and more importance to the American producer, and London is the natural key to the entire European film situation.

"It will be part of our plan to acquire all foreign rights, outside of United States and Canada, to the most meritorious American subjects obtainable, and to introduce into America the most ambitious film offerings of Europe, thus maintaining the first effective international film exchange ever established, and the only one ever devoted to this single purpose.

Glad He Has Ben P. Schulberg.

"I am deeply gratified to have been able to secure the services of B. P. Schulberg to manage our affairs in America. His personal integrity and long and conspicuous standing in the film industry in the United States bespeak that high standard of business ethics with which we will manage our offices throughout the world, so that any transactions with us will be not only a profitable, but a pleasant, process."

Mr. Schulberg is now arranging for the inauguration of distributing offices in South America and the Orient, and the company began active operations immediately upon Mr. Tippett's return to London, where he arrived May 17.

Is New York Really in Danger?

Mr. Tippett's statements that London is to become the "logical bourse of the film industry" and that "London will undoubtedly dominate the film markets of the world in future," caused Moving Picture World to occupy the little time that remained before going to press (after receiving from Mr. Schulberg the foregoing matter) in questioning a few leaders of the industry on the subject. Americans whose business interests center in this country are not apt to believe that the center of film activities is likely to move from New York, for distribution, and Los Angeles for bulk of manufacture.

F. B. Warren Knows Differently.

Fred B. Warren, general manager of W. W. Hodkinson's interests, expressed himself as skeptical to a degree. Mr. Warren has had an abundance of experience in the export field as well as in domestic distribution of films. He has traveled South America from end to end and knows the foreign field as well as he does the details of production and distribution here at home. Mr. Warren doubts very much whether London will ever dominate the world situation. With the Government showing proper appreciation of America's export opportunities, he is of the opinion that the United States and New York will not be disturbed in film supremacy.

J. D. Williams Locates the Center.

James D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, who has traveled the world round a half-dozen times; who "put films on the map" in Australia and who knows the export business in minute details declared:

"The center or pivotal point of any industry is at the center of production. Grand Rapids, Mich., is the furniture center of the United States because it operates the greatest furniture manufactures in the country. Detroit is the center of the automobile industry.

"London may have certain geographical advantages as a shipping and distributing point, for world commerce in films, but it lacks climatic essentials which bar it as a logical center for production. Los Angeles is the pivotal point in the motion picture industry. As the chief producing center, it is the very heart of the industry.

"I do not believe the time ever will come when foreign producers will compete successfully with American producers in providing screen entertainment for the American public. Much more than half of the total footage produced in the world is made in America.

"And on the premise cited in the first sentence, that the center of majority production in any industry always is the pivotal point for that industry in national or international commerce, the United States, with a film consumption many times greater than that of any other nation, and with output accordingly in volume, will always be the real center for the motion picture industry."

Lewis J. Selznick Doesn't Believe It.

"Personally, I think Mr. Schulberg must have been enjoying a little joke when he came across with this astounding information," said Lewis J. Selznick. "How can a man who has been engaged in selling motion pictures not know that New York is the center around which the entire motion picture industry revolves? He is like the fly on the center of a cartwheel—unable to tell how much dust his own travel was raising.

"At the present time, less than ever before, London is far behind New York as a controlling center of motion picture activities. I see nothing to indicate that this position will change."

Opens Projection Rooms to Soldiers.

Vitagraph's half-dozen private projection rooms at the Brooklyn plant are being thrown open daily to wounded soldiers able to make the trip there. All the latest Vitagraph productions are being screened for the benefit of the convalescents. Arrangements to this effect were made by Private F. R. Hirsch, of the Fifth Regiment, U. S. Marines, with Frank Loomis, studio manager. The arrangements provide for the transportation of parties daily to the studio from the Red Cross convalescent house at Pelham Bay.

"Sin" Opens in Buffalo June 1.

Messrs. L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, who acquired the rights in New York State and all foreign countries to Harry Garson's big feature production of "The Unpardonable Sin," are showing the popular Rupert Hughes story in the Broadway Theatre, New York, the Majestic Theatre, Brooklyn, and are announcing its presentation at the Majestic Theatre, Buffalo, beginning next Sunday, June 1.

Smith Now with "Big V" Comedies.

Noel Smith, long associated with the Lehrman comedies, has joined Vitagraph's directorial forces, active on the West Coast studios at Hollywood, Cal., as director of the "Big V" comedies starring Jimmie Aubrey. The first comedy to be directed by Mr. Smith under Vitagraph auspices is entitled "Tootsies and Tamales." It will reach the screen May 19.

Rothacker Again Wins Commendation on Prints

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER'S printing and developing plant in Chicago isn't at all limited to good work on First National attractions, according to a letter to Mr. Rothacker from Lee L. Goldberg, secretary of the Louisville Big Feature Rights Corporation, owned by Colonel Fred Levy. The Circuit recently gave the Rothacker service a strong indorsement.

"With all due credit to Harry Garson, Marshall Neilan and other associates responsible for the magnificent production of 'The Unpardonable Sin,'" writes Mr. Goldberg, "we feel that a little tribute is due your organization for the well-nigh perfect manner in which you have developed and printed this film.

"Never before have we noted a picture with such wonderful, clear photography and artistic lighting. Colonel Levy joins the writer in extending you our sincere appreciation of your good work in connection with 'The Unpardonable Sin.'"

Thomas Meighan To Be Male Lead in "Peg o' My Heart"

THOMAS MEIGHAN has been especially engaged to play the leading male role in "Peg o' My Heart," the Hartley Manners comedy being produced as a Paramount-Artcraft Special in Hollywood, with William C. DeMille as director.

Thomas Meighan.

Mr. Meighan has just finished "The Miracle Man" and a series of films with Norma Talmadge. He has done three previous pictures under William C. DeMille's direction, and has been seen opposite many of the Paramount feminine stars.

Wanda Hawley will have the title role, and a splendid cast has been selected to support the leads.

Rio Grande Border Business Improving.

The modification of passport restrictions on the Mexican border has improved business in theatres in the border cities, according to T. M. Hervey, of the Unique Theatre, El Paso, who visited Dallas during the middle of May.

"Business will not be as good as formerly until the border is fully opened again," Mr. Hervey says. "The modification of the restrictions whereby passports were required from all persons crossing the line and the fact that cards are now issued for the crossing of the international bridges, has improved things."

Richmond Plans Splendid Reception for Leah Baird

LEAH BAIRD, star of Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks," distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is to be one of the honored guests of Richmond, Va., at the movie ball for the benefit of the Soldiers' Home on Saturday, May 24.

Miss Baird received a telegram on Monday, May 19, from Mayor George Ainslie, of Richmond, urging her to lend her charm to the occasion and incidentally please hundreds of her admirers in the Virginia capital. The star wired her acceptance.

At the request of Mayor Ainslie, Miss Baird has sent 500 autographed photographs of herself which she is to sell to her legion of admirers between dances at the big affair. A splendid reception awaits the star in Richmond Saturday morning. Major Lawrence T. Price, chairman of arrangements for the benefit, has notified Miss Baird that the Richmond Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will take her in charge the moment she arrives.

Billie Rhodes Stays for Ball.

Richmond has also completed arrangements for a royal welcome to Billie Rhodes. Miss Rhodes, while in New York last week, also received a telegram of invitation from Richmond's mayor and Major Lawrence T. Price.

Though the star had made all arrangements to leave for the Coast on Friday, May 23, she at once re-arranged her affairs and accepted.

Lewiston Pulpit Now Home of Moving Picture Screen

IT all goes to show that in this day of transatlantic flights and conductorettes it is hardly safe to wager that a church will always be a church or that Fifth avenue bus might not suddenly undergo a metamorphosis and become a duck boat or a sea-going calliope. Harry F. Campbell, district manager of the Fox New England territory, just came face to face with this fact when he saw the Pine street Baptist Church at Lewiston, Maine, in the final throes of being converted into a motion picture theatre.

Dr. Wiseman is the man who is responsible for this radical turnover, since he purchased the church and started work at once. Crews of workmen have been busy for several weeks past relaying the floors, constructing a balcony, and overhauling the pulpit until it no longer bears the sedate look of yesterday. The theatre will have a modest name, however, which will serve as a reminder of the building's former status. The house will be known as "The Priscilla."

A five-piece orchestra has been engaged and Dr. Wiseman has signed contracts for the best and most discussed pictures of the day. The theatre opens on Monday, May 26, under the management of George N. Heald.

LORIMORE REVIEWS AUSTRALIAN WORK

Famous Players-Lasky Branch Has Built Up Service Which Extends Even to Training of House Managers

THE theatre situation in Australia is very difficult to understand by anybody accustomed to great centers such as New York, Chicago, and other film centers in the United States." The above is quoted from a letter sent to the publicity department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York, by Alec Lorimore, managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., by which name the Australian branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is known.

"In Australia," continued Mr. Lorimore, "we have a very sparse population in a huge continent, the total of which is somewhere around five millions of people. There are two main centers of film distribution—Sydney and Melbourne. Then there is a third city, Adelaide, and two other cities of less population, although no whit the less photoplay enthusiasts—Brisbane and Perth.

Appreciate High-Class Productions.

"It can be authoritatively said of Famous Players-Lasky productions, as distributed by Feature Films, Ltd., that they are shown in the great majority of the theatres in the larger cities, and are distributed to theatres in practically every community of importance in Australia.

"With the country as it has been for some three years," continued Mr. Lorimore's letter, "practically all of the best film men of experience were away at war, and recruits for the management of the theatres, as well as the distributing points, had to be selected from the big stores and other walks of life, where they had some training in advertising and salesmanship, and these men had to then be carefully trained in film matters. And you have no idea," continued Mr. Lorimore, "how the public appreciated high-class productions at a time when clean, healthy theatrical amusement was at a premium, and the public greatly in need of diversion."

"Today in the head office of this great organization we have our own electrical and engineering works, where projectors and other electrical accessories for the motion picture business are manufactured or repaired.

Thorough Service Rendered.

"We also have our own slide-making department, lobby display, sign-writing, and photographic departments. We produce our own weekly gazette; have our own carpentering and cabinet-making department for the purpose of helping the exhibitor.

"Service rendered to the exhibitor has not stopped at the mere sale of the film, and the supply of publicity data and advertising suggestions, but it has also embraced the vital matter of taking over a man's theatre for a short period, staging his productions, and controlling his theatre until such time as he was able to find it a paying position.

"This institution trains theatre managers in all the essentials of the business, and then finds them positions throughout the country.

"Today Paramount controls, under mutually satisfactory contracts, the leading houses in every big center or city throughout Australiasia, having the premier position with the foremost exhibitors. All the best and biggest theatres in Australia today show Paramount pictures for one week's uninterrupted run."

Alec Lorimore.

Famous Actress Seen in "Love and the Woman"

AMONG noted actresses who have made theatrical history who are appearing in "Love and the Woman," a World picture in which June Elvidge is the star, is Laura Burt. This famous actress was the original Madge in "Old Kentucky," a play that toured for twenty-four successive seasons and made a fortune of over a million dollars for the late Jacob Litt. Miss Burt claims to have inspired the author of "'Way Down East" to write his play for her, but being unable to come to terms with the producer lost her golden opportunity.

While at the World studio last week watching the filming of "Love and the Woman," the writer, in conversation with Miss Burt, spoke of the radical difference between the staging of a play and the making of a picture. Miss Burt said: "The day will come when the motion picture will make a long stride in advance of the methods now employed in developing the story into the photoplay. The biggest step will be registered when, instead of taking all the scenes that have the same setting and then going to the next scenes, in which time is saved by grouping scenes, the director will begin at the very first scene and proceed to the end as it is written. Skipping here and there gives the actor no chance to develop his part and 'grow up' in it. As matters stand now the director has to have the memory for the entire cast."

Mme. Elvira Amazar

More Film Firms Join National Association

THE membership ranks of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have been materially strengthened by the receipt of the application of the Blackton Productions as members of the Producers' division, which will be represented by President J. Stuart Blackton. Several other producing companies have the matter of affiliating with the National Association under advisement, and two prominent companies have advised that favorable action is anticipated at the forthcoming meeting of their directors.

The Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation has filed application for membership in the distributors' division, succeeding the Mutual Film Corporation, which resigned about a year ago. President William J. Clark is designated as the representative of the Exhibitors Mutual with Charles C. Pettijohn as alternate. The addition of this company makes a total of fourteen companies affiliated with this important branch of the National Association, which now represents 95 per cent. of the companies distributing motion pictures in this country.

Abe Stern on Way to Los Angeles.

Abe Stern, secretary and treasurer of the L-Ko Motion Picture Kompany, made a trip to the West Coast studios of the company at Los Angeles last week.

The announcement was given out at the Broadway offices that the future policy would be discussed at the West Coast studios and the results would be made public when Mr. Stern returned to the home office.

Gladden James Again on His Toes.

Gladden James, who played opposite Alice Joyce in "The Third Degree," has been engaged to play an important part in a Harry Morey picture. Mr. James is starting to come to the fore again after an illness which lasted over six months.

TO MAKE BIG SERIAL HERE AND ABROAD

Universal to Produce Chapter Play Picture in California and Europe—Eddie Polo Heads Company

TO send a company of players more than half way round the world and for the company to travel more than 10,000 miles in five different countries to produce a great serial picture is the project set forth by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

The carrying out of this plan sets a record in the history of serial making. This is the announcement of one of the surprises Universal has promised for the coming season. Headed by Eddie Polo the group will leave Universal City for New York on May 24, and will sail for London on June 7.

This announcement comes from Mr. Laemmle as the result of the statement he issued sometime ago in which he said he believed that serial pictures were increasing in value with the exhibitor and the public. Mr. Laemmle has made an exhaustive study of the serial idea, and a few months ago created a separate serial department in the Universal organization. This department consists of four companies.

Four Months to Make Picture.

Eddie Polo, Universal's serial star who is known not only in the United States but in foreign countries as well, has been chosen to play the leading role in the serial. It will be international in scope. The tentative title selected is "The Broken Idol." No expense is to be spared in the making of the serial and according to Mr. Laemmle more than four months' time abroad will be necessary to make the picture.

The story will contain throughout an element of mystery, and Polo will be cast as a young and fearless detective who is sent all over the world to solve mysteries and capture criminals. John P. McGowan will direct the serial as well as play the leading heavy role. James Wilkinson will be one of the party. He will be assistant director and chief film editor.

Nancy Dare will be the leading woman and Jean Perkins, who doubles as cameraman and daredevil stunt actor, will be the assistant cameraman and supervise the making of stills. Virgil Miller will be chief cameraman. Ernest W. Smith will be the chief property man and Earl O. Miller will act as chief electrician. Hope Loring will go on the trip as continuity writer. Earl W. Kramer, of the New York Universal exchange, will be business manager.

Scenes in France and Great Britain.

The opening episodes of the serial were taken in the West, several of the scenes being taken at the cattle round-up at Kingman, Arizona, and other scenes have been taken on the Catalina Islands. Tom Lingham, Leon De Lamothe, and Alfred Allen, who have been starred in recent serials produced by Universal, have participated in the episodes taken in the West.

Upon their arrival in New York several scenes will be made here, and Director McGowan is planning upon using many of the stage and screen stars of the east in the New York scenes.

The foreign scenes of the serial will be laid in Ireland, Scotland, England, and France. It has been planned to obtain the services of many of the well-known European stage and screen stars in many of the scenes and the extras in the different episodes will be selected from the natives and people living in the country in which the episodes are filmed.

Complete equipment will be taken along with the company and few accessories for the filming of the scenes will have to be purchased in the foreign countries.

Franklyn Farnum Reappears in Films in "The Gutter"

WITH the release of "The Gutter," in which Dolores Cassinelli makes her bow as a star of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., Franklyn Farnum, one of the screen's most prominent figures, makes his reappearance in motion pictures after spending several months in touring the country as a vaudeville headliner. Mr. Farnum will signalize his return to motion picture work by essaying a role that will mark a distinct departure from the type of characterization with which he has heretofore been identified.

Known to the theatre-going public chiefly as a light comedian, Mr. Farnum in the new Capellani production discards his winning smile and breezy manner to assume a semi-heavy role, that of a French nobleman. The part calls for Mr. Farnum's active participation in a number of forceful dramatic situations and according to Albert Capellani, who is personally directing the production, he rises splendidly to the requirements of the role.

"In engaging Mr. Farnum for the part of an irresponsible nobleman," said Mr. Capellani, "we felt that his ability to embellish the character with comedy touches would provide the necessary relief from the tensity of the dramatic situations. Accordingly, it was our intention to confine his part to that of a comic foil. But in the few scenes in which he was called upon to do some strongly dramatic acting, Mr. Farnum displayed such a surprising aptitude for this line of work that we immediately revised the original script so as to provide him with a greater opportunity to demonstrate his ability in a serious role."

Put on Two Chaplins and Shut Box Office for Hour

JOHN O'DELL, manager of the Frontenac Theatre, Detroit, has a seating capacity of 930 and standing room for 400 more. Tuesday is John's poorest day. He has tried all sorts of stunts and expensive special features on Tuesdays, with the hope of making his losing day profitable, but nothing seemed to help his receipts.

For several weeks past the Madison Film Exchange has been trying to sell exhibitors the idea of using "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" on the same day, and although these productions have played the majority of Detroit theatres several times, it was contended as a joint bill the combination would "bring home the bacon."

As a last desperate attempt to build up business on his "hoodoo" day, John O'Dell decided to take advantage of the "tip" and booked Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" as a double bill on the same night, Tuesday, April 28.

The idea was new and original, but exhibitors were skeptical, so John was the first exhibitor to tackle the proposition, with the result that the attendance was so great he was forced to stop selling tickets for one solid hour.

Makes Ice Cream Parlor Part of Movie Theatre

SO well does the prohibition proposition look to E. B. Cridler, manager of the Dansville Theatre, Dansville, N. Y., that he is preparing to rake in the shekels that formerly went into the cash register behind the bar. Even as those who spent money most freely were wont to seek out the most attractive cafes, so Mr. Cridler thinks that the average person will just naturally drift to the place where pleasure is most fully satisfied. At his theatre he is determined that nothing shall be lacking in the way of things for the comfort and amusement of his patrons.

In an annex to the theatre a luxurious and commodious ice cream parlor has been laid out, and every effort will be made to co-ordinate the operation of this with the theatre. Mr. Cridler has not the slightest doubt that the annex will prove just as great a drawing card as the rathskellers frequently seen in connection with burlesque and other houses. To illustrate the scale upon which Mr. Cridler is entering into the proposition, it may be mentioned that he has installed a plant for the manufacture of ice.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SALES HEADS DINED

Company Gives a Beefsteak in Honor of Its Visiting Members and Home Office Staff—Many Speeches

IN honor of the district managers and special representatives in session in New York the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was host to the visitors and members of the home office organization, to the number of nearly one hundred, on Thursday evening, May 4, at Castle Cave. All of the company's Eastern executives were present.

Following a delicious repast, of which beefsteak and broiled chicken were the pieces de resistance, and a varied and altogether satisfying program of entertainment, Arthur S. Friend assumed the duties of toastmaster. As a preliminary to the more formal responses, Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, proposed that inasmuch as many of the guests had come from distant points and were not intimately acquainted with the personnel of the home office, each one in turn should introduce himself and tell briefly what he did in and for the organization. The suggestion proved a most happy one.

Zukor Speaks on Loyalty.

As president, Adolph Zukor arose in response to Mr. Friend's introduction he was greeted by rounds of cheering. Mr. Zukor spoke with feeling on the spirit of loyalty, which not only was manifested by those present, but which he knew, he said, permeated the entire organization. He congratulated the distributing executives upon their splendid success of the past years.

Jesse L. Lasky spoke about the plans of the production department for the coming year, stating that it had anticipated present conditions in the industry by fully six months and assuring those present that the quality of productions would reach a plane hitherto undreamed of in motion pictures.

Walter E. Greene added a word of the warmest praise for the members of the distributing organization and commented upon the enthusiasm and unanimity with which the new booking plan had been received.

Outlook Good in Foreign Market.

Walter W. Irwin spoke of the policies and ideals of the company and took occasion to comment upon the influence wielded by the company's national advertising policy.

Assistant Treasurer E. E. Schauer, head of the foreign department, who has just returned from Europe, brought a message of extreme optimism regarding the outlook for business in foreign markets.

John C. Flinn, in speaking of advertising plans for the future, gave expression to his appreciation of the work of his assistants.

Other speakers were Whitman Bennett, Frank E. Woods, Al Lichtman, Ralph Kohn, Capt. Albert A. Kaufman, Sidney R. Kent, John W. Allen, Herman Wobber, Harry Asher, W. E. Smith, F. V. Chamberlin, H. H. Buxbaum, Louis Marcus, Arthur Whyte, C. E. Holcomb and Myron H. Lewis. The entertainment was in charge of Pete Smith and Norris Wilcox handled the dinner arrangements.

Hand Grenade Wrecks Camera.

A motion picture camera was wrecked and several feet of unexposed negative were destroyed recently when a Mills hand grenade accidently exploded at the Fort Lee studio of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc. Fortunately, the accident occurred during lunch and the only person to witness the explosion was Lucien Tainguy, a member of the Capellani photographic staff, who narrowly escaped injury from the flying shell fragments. The grenade was the property of Tainguy, who had secured it from Camp Dix, where he served as a photographer for the United States Signal Corps.

Moss Engages Langsfield.

B. S. Moss has engaged Leon Langsfield to manage his Broadway Theatre, New York. The latter has been in charge of the Stanley Theatre for the past two years. He was formerly in charge of the Broadway, and is a showman of much experience.

FILM COMPANIES TAKING QUEER NAMES

New York Has so Many Picture Concerns That It Is Hard to Find Proper Titles—Some Specimens

WITH the large number of motion picture concerns incorporated in New York State, and with the number that are still incorporating at the rate of a dozen or more each week, the selection of an appropriate name, or one which has advertising possibilities, must be daily becoming more of a task, judging from some of the names under which companies have been incorporated here during the past few days.

For instance, the "He and She" corporation of New York City filed its papers with Secretary of State Hugo, May 19, in which the concern stated its intention to produce a play to be known as "He and She," and to buy and sell motion picture rights. The incorporators were Joseph Kirkpatrick, H. P. Heath and P. L. Woodward. The company begins business on $10,000.

The Solitary Sin Corporation was incorporated during the last day or so to enter in the motion picture industry, being capitalized at $50,000 with Henry Herzbrun, Samuel H. Kaufman and Leo M. Haiblum, the incorporators.

Among other concerns incorporating for the motion picture business in New York State during the last few days were the Eastside Beauty Amusement Company, $10,000, Charles Frankel, Joseph Finger, Archie T. Karman, of New York; the William Morris Enterprises, $5,000, William Morris, Abraham Lostfogel and William Morris, Jr.; the Grossmuth Productions, $100,000, Henry B. Culver, Amy Levy and Frieda Rosenberg; the Filmclas Corporation, $50,000, Erwin K. Nadel, David Steinhardt and Fred A. Brant of New York; the F. B. Productions, $25,000, C. H. Ferrell, Roy M. and Antinette Barcoe, of New York; Screen Products Company, $1,000, Charles Hollender, Jacob Podell and I. M. Schwartz, of New York; the Tree Film Company, $5,000, D. F. Tregary, Elsa Klinger and E. Barry, New York; the Roebling Amusement Company, $5,000, Elias Mayer, L. S. Schneider, Isidor Resnikoff, Brooklyn; the White Heather Amusement Company, $500, Clifton Crawford, M. A. Harris, Edward C. Raferty, New York; the Film Novelties, $1,000, Charles Frankel, Joseph Finger and Archie F. Karman; the Laurand Players, $1,000, Arthur Wright, Siegbert Lewin and Leon Spachner; the Leavitt Deep Sea Salvage Company, $100,000, which states its intention of salvaging sunken vessels, catching fish and engaging in the motion picture business, B. F. Leavitt, H. H. Leavitt, Elmer Kelly, Brooklyn.

Board of Trade Chooses Officers.

Owing to the departure from San Francisco of Myron H. Lewis, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for New York, where he will take up work as special representative for this concern, it has been necessary to choose new officers for the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, of which he was the first president. At a recent meeting Ben F. Simpson, manager of the local Triangle branch, was chosen president, and Floyd St. John, manager of the World office, vice-president. Louis Reichert, of Metro, continues as secretary-treasurer.

Elks and Uncle Sam Aid in Reaching Maimed Men

UNCLE SAM and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks have taken a hand in motion pictures to the extent of reaching soldiers, sailors and marines who were hopelessly crippled in the world war, and letting them know of opportunities which the Federal Board for Vocational Education holds out to them.

Pictures dealing with maimed fighters and the work of the Federal Board and the Elks have just been completed, and within a few weeks they will be shown throughout the country under the auspices of the National Elks' War Relief Commission. The big feature of these screen productions is a five-reeler called "The Greater Victory," in which Claire Whitney is the star, and which was directed by Herbert E. Hancock. The play was picturized from R. J. Huntington's story, "Play Ball."

Another Elks-Federal Board picture is a 2-reeler named "The Spirit of Elkdom."

How Kewpie Dolls Helped Advertise "Cannibals" Film

KEWPIE DOLLS in their ordinary humorous garb might pass with but little attention if adorning the window of a specialty shop. But dye these same dolls black, dress them up in grass skirts and give them the further appearance of cannibals by placing rings in their noses and ears, and you will have an attraction that will cause no end of comment.

At least this was found to be true by the management of the Verdi Theatre, Thirty-fifth street and Armitage avenue, Chicago, during a recent run of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," which Robertson-Cole released through Exhibitors Mutual.

This novel idea augmented a wonderful lobby display arranged by the management, in which the front of the house was turned into what might have been a village in the South Seas. These little dolls were placed in many of the store windows in the neighborhood of the Verdi.

In arranging his lobby display, the Verdi manager took a leaf from the exploitation book issued in conjunction with the Cannibals by Exhibitors Mutual.

The exits and entrances to the auditorium proper were made to resemble the openings to straw and mud huts in the South Sea islands. The box office was similarly camouflaged.

Form Gertrude Vanderbilt Company.

Gertrude Vanderbilt, now playing in "Listen Lester," is launching a movie corporation of her own, the details being arranged by M. S. Bentham. Miss Vanderbilt has watched the success achieved by Olive Thomas, Marion Davies, Ann Pennington and the other musical comedy belles who have migrated to the screen, and she intends to try the photoplay herself. Plans are materializing for the Gertrude Vanderbilt Film Corporation. Screen production will not interfere with Miss Vanderbilt's stage work.

Gun Flash Injures Thomas Holding.

A severely burned shoulder was sustained by Thomas Holding, who is playing opposite Pauline Frederick in her Goldwyn picture, as a result of a gun flash. In the scene the actor is shot by Miss Frederick, the bullet tearing through his shirt—supposedly—and inflicting a wound. To get the requisite realistic effect, Milton Gardner, assistant director, placed a gun loaded with blank cartridges inside Mr. Holding's shirt, shooting outward. The cartridge exploded with a bright flash, and burned the actor severely.

Stahl to Direct Mollie King.

John M. Stahl has sold all his interests in the Tribune Productions, featuring Florence Reed, and with the completion of the direction of "A Woman Under Oath," has joined the American Cinema Corporation, where he will direct Mollie King in a series of special productions.

NEW ENGLAND THEATRES DOING WELL

World Representative Finds Massachusetts and Rhode Island Towns Doing Splendid Business

By Nat Bregstein

EARLY to bed, and early to rise" seems to be the motto the movie patrons have adopted at Fall River, Mass. The reason is that Fall River is a mill town, and the workers figure on getting a good night's rest. This makes it difficult for exhibitors to run two night shows to capacity. In spite of this handicap, however, they are holding their own.

For instance, American Theatre, a suburban house seating 500, admission 10 and 15 cents, had a well-filled house at the time of my arrival. Louis J. Coriaty, the proprietor, says this house always does a good business. He runs Paramount, Triangle, Metro and other big features. At the other end of the town, we have the Strand. This 1,400-seater is doing well. Mr. Michaelfelder, the manager, took this house over about a year ago. The Lyric, which is right opposite the Strand, lately has been taken over under the management of Mr. Michaelfelder. The Lyric is an 800-seater charging 11 and 15 cents; uses Fox, Vitagraph, Paramount and Select. The manager says that he believes that Fall River is gaining patrons every day.

Boas Runs Downtown Houses.

Most of the downtown theatres in Fall River are under the management of L. M. Boas, who makes his headquarters at the Empire Theatre. This house was erected several months ago by the J. Bigney Construction Company, of Providence. A. Spitz formerly was manager. The Empire is a combination house, running vaudeville and pictures, and is the most up-to-date house in town. The four theatres in charge of Mr. Boas are the Bijou, Savoy, Empire, and Academy. In the future he will dictate all policies for these four theatres. Mr. Boas has been in the picture business for 12 years.

An independent downtown theatre is the Plaza, a 900-seater. Nat Yeamans, manager, just returned from the army. He informed me that he is booking productions on the open market plan.

About an hour's ride on the trolley from Fall River is New Bedford. This town supports several theatres, among them the Olympia, largest and most up-to-date house in town, seating 2,800, admission from 15 to 75 cents, running a feature, a comedy and five acts of vaudeville. Mr. Bayliss, manager, has been here since the house opened. In his opinion the theatre will finish one of the best years of its history. While chatting with the manager, the operator came into the office and showed him what was served to the Olympia in the way of a reel. He had a hand full of pieces, and said this was a part of the show that was delivered to them. Among the big features this house played to a good business was "The Eternal Magdalene," "The Better 'Ole," and "The Common Cause."

Allen Bedford Showman.

Mr. Allen controls several theatres in New Bedford. At the time of my visit I paid my respects to E. Davenport, the owner of the Rialto, suburban house, and the Savoy, a downtown theatre. Both of these houses are doing good, using Vitagraph, World and Metro.

While in Springfield recently, I called on Irving T. McDonald, manager of Fox's Theatre, and was informed that they are going to build a large house downtown.

At the Bijou theatre, we have Henry B. Schock, an old timer, who is the manager. He has been here about three years. This concern uses First National, Paramount and American Feature. He says the picture business in Springfield has never been better. Goldstein Brothers, who run the Broadway Theatre, are also holding their own. This concern has several theatres throughout Massachusetts and reports conditions favorable.

Providence Proud of Palace.

Springfield also has a supply house. John F. Gatelle has the agency for Powers machines for Western Massachusetts, and says business has never been better. A recent installation was at Red Men's Hall, South Deerfield.

Providence is very proud of its million dollar Palace. Keith's just opened up a new house. All the rest of the moving picture houses are playing to splendid business. Any night one will find the Modern Theatre with a line on the outside waiting to get in. Fay's Combination house is also doing big. So is the Strand, and our friend Mr. Cann, who has the Gaiety.

Providence also has two supply houses. H. A. & E. S. Taylor Company make their headquarters in the Case-Mead Building. This concern handles Power's machines for Rhode Island. Business in general has been booming, says Mr. Taylor. Davidson has the agency for the Simplex machine for Rhode Island. He makes his headquarters in the Strand Building, Providence. L. Butler, manager in charge, reports good business on the Simplex machine.

Pawtucket has a big advantage over any town I have ever been in. One can jitney it from Providence, and for 15 cents one can ride in some of the best automobiles made. It is about 20 minutes' ride via this route. One of the first theatres I visited in Pawtucket was the Scenic Temple. I expected to to be greeted by Mr. McNally, one of our old subscribers, and was surprised when informed by Mrs. McNally that her husband had died of the flu last October. Mrs. McNally is now taking charge, and she deserves credit—the house is doing a splendid business. The Scenic seats 1,400 and has an admission price of 17 and 28 cents.

At the Imperial Theatre Mr. Hartford is in charge. This theatre always does good business. Keith's also have a house in this town—the Music Hall; Mr. Ready is in charge.

S-L Issuing Record Size Book on "Virtuous Men"

S-L PICTURES has issued for "Virtuous Men" what is probably the largest press book ever put out, the pages being 20 by 23 inches. It is at once an advertisement and an exhibitor help, for the sixteen pages carry much material of such good quality that it is to be regretted the make-up was not planned so as to permit cutting at will without spoiling similarly good material on the other side.

The book offers a full synopsis, a shorter length for the program, advertising suggestions, program copy, promotion schemes, reprints of the service sections in the trade press, press criticisms and proofs of 39 cuts available for advertising work in different screens, and there are two full-page displays which can be cut out for lobby work, one in line and the other in fine screen, the fine printing on tinted paper making these equal to original drawings for lobby display. It is a book unusual from many angles and gives the exhibitor all the assistance he needs in putting over "Virtuous Men." For elaborateness and thoroughness of preparation it sets a record.

Rembusch Enterprises Buy Martinsville Blackstone

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, head of the F. J. Rembusch Amusement Enterprises, and national secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, recently completed a deal, purchasing from Charles Blackstone the building in Martinsville, Ind., in which the Blackston Theatre is located.

The Rembusch Enterprises have operated the Blackstone for some time as one of a string of theatres in central Indiana. The Grace is another Martinsville house operated by Mr. Rembusch. The Blackstone will be thoroughly renovated and redecorated, giving to Mr. Rembusch two of the finest business blocks on the public square.

W. J. Bradford, who manages the Grace Theatre, will also have the direction of the Blackstone. With Mr. Rembusch he will make every effort to give Martinsville the highest standard of photoplay program.

GOLDWYN OPENS TWO MORE EXCHANGES

Starts Offices in Omaha and Salt Lake City and Will Have Local Man on Job in All Large Towns

WITH the opening of two new exchange offices in Omaha and Salt Lake City, Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of sales of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, announces that Goldwyn will be in a position to give overnight distribution in practically every city of the United States. There will be twenty-two Goldwyn "Service Stations" in as many branch offices.

"The value of giving service," says Mr. Feist, "has never been fully appreciated by the exhibitor. We are going to show the exhibitor that we appreciate it. Exploitation is the task of the distributor. Of course there must be a certain amount of physical co-operation on the part of the exhibitor, but this must be minimized. In an ideal exhibitor service, the distributor must make all things meet. At the time that the picture arrives, the dealer helps must be on hand to go with it. Lobby displays, service ads, press matter and the picture must go together or efficiency is nil.

Will Have Local Men on Job.

"With regard to publicity matters, Goldwyn is making special and progressive strides in the direction of an ideal system. In every fair sized city of the United States, Goldwyn will have a press representative in a short time. Even in press matters will the exhibitor get personal co-operation. It is all right to send him a press book or a press sheet and tell him to send it out to the local newspaper, but it is much better to have a man right on the spot to do it for him.

"This publicity man can do other things beside send out notices to the paper. He can help the dealer to carry out the suggestions made by the service department. I have seen wild-eyed suggestions thrown into print and aimed at the exhibitor, telling him just what to do if he is to hang out the S. R. O. sign. But in most cases the printed appeal is not enough inspiration to make the exhibitor actually carry out these suggestions. A man on the spot will do it ten times where the mere printed idea will do it once. We must have both sorts of service co-operation, and Goldwyn Pictures, under the careful direction of Hunt Stomberg, is going to have them."

Brothers of Frank Hall Arrive with 78th Division

WITH the arrival of the 78th Division from overseas, Sergt. Harry T. Hall, 312th Infantry and Edward C. Hall, 309th Ambulance Unit, 78th Division, both brothers of Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, will step down the gangplank "somewhere" in Hoboken to meet a rousing welcome arranged by Mr. Hall. On the sleeves of the Halls will be seen three gold stripes, eighteen months having been served by them in the thickest of the fighting on the American front in France.

Frank Hall is president of the U. S. Theatre Company, operating the U. S. Theatre in Hoboken, and in recognition of the boys of the 78th Division, he has left instructions at the U. S. boxoffice that all men in uniform wearing the insigna of the 78th shall be admitted free of charge.

"Virtuous Wives" Made Clean Sweep in Irvine

ESTEILL WALLACE manages the Gaines Theatre, "The Home of Good Pictures" it is termed, at Irvine, Ky. The population of Irvine is 272. "There's no reason why a little town shouldn't have big pictures" is the way Mr. Wallace looks at it. There are not as many people in Irvine as a New York theatre could draw from a single apartment house in its neighborhood, but there are people living all around in the country and Mr. Wallace draws on them for all the support Irvine can't supply. He uses the neighborhood newspaper for big ads and goes after business with posters liberally displayed through the country.

The Gaines Theatre had been a failure until Mr. Wallace took charge of it.

"Town's too small," said the pessimist. "Not enough people here to support a picture house."

"I see quite a number of people hereabout," said Mr. Wallace to himself as he surveyed the field. "I think I can get enough business if I give them something worth while." He has run the two Tarzan pictures, "The Fighting Roosevelts," the Chaplin pictures and "Virtuous Wives." Following is the letter he sent the Big Feature Rights Corporation, Louisville, after showing "Virtuous Wives":

"You will find enclosed a check for advertising on 'Virtuous Wives.' 'Virtuous Wives' was a clean sweep. It went over bigger than any other picture I have ever played. I can certainly recommend it to any exhibitor. Can you book 'Daddy Long Legs' for May 7?"

Lonergan Joins World Scenario Staff.

World Pictures has added Philip Lonergan, one of the best known scenario writers of motion pictures, to its staff of scenario and continuity writers under the direction of Charles Sarver, editor in chief.

Mr. Lonergan began his career as a writer of short stories. His picture experience has been with Reliance-Majestic, Thanhouser, and other land marks of the industry.

For World Pictures he has written "Mandarin's Gold," which was used as a starring vehicle for Kitty Gordon and "Love and the Woman," which will be released on June 23 with June Elvidge as the star.

Hall Leases Bacon-Backer Studio.

Frank G. Hall, vice-president and general manager of the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., announces that he has leased the Bacon-Backer studio, 130 West Thirty-eight street, New York, and that it will be the home of the production work for the Miller productions, the first of which is now nearing completion with Herbert Rawlinson, Florence Billings, Stuart Holmes and Regina Quinn in the leading roles.

"THIRD DEGREE" IS WIDELY BOOKED

Picturization of Klein Play by Vitagraph with Alice Joyce Is Taken on by Many Circuits

ALL recent Vitagraph booking records were smashed this week when "The Third Degree," a picturization of the famous Charles Klein play by that company, was booked solidly by all circuit houses and for extended engagements and indefinite runs by various leading independent houses.

"The Third Degree" is being released by Vitagraph. Due to the comprehensive scope of the bookings to date, it will have simultaneous premieres in the majority of leading houses in the Eastern and New England states and in the Middle West.

Circuits That Have Booked Film.

The circuits which have closed for "The Third Degree" include Keith's and Proctor, William Fox, the Poli Chain and B. S. Moss.

In the Keith and Proctor houses, "The Third Degree" will be shown for forty-six consecutive days. Theatres under the control of William Fox will show the Klein picturization for thirty days. Poli has contracted for a twenty-five days' showing. The B. S. Moss circuit will show the photodrama for twenty days. These bookings completely cover the circuit theatres of America, which include picture plays in their programs.

Notable among independent bookings are those of several theatres within "the loop" in Chicago. The "loop" district is the heart and hub of Chicago.

In the Ziegfeld for Long Run.

No theatre in the "loop" has a greater reputation for high-class photo productions than the Ziegfeld. This theatre draws its patronage from the best class of theatregoers.

Most progressive of cinema managements in Milwaukee is that of E. C. Bostick, owner of the Merrill and Strand theatres. Mr. Bostick will run "The Third Degree" indefinitely at both of his Milwaukee theatres.

The Park Theatre in Boston, the New Theatre in Baltimore, and the Cameraphone Theatre in Pittsburgh, are leaders on the big-city list who have booked "The Third Degree," aside of its circuit bookings in the big towns.

Tells Why American Film Fails to Lead in Mexico

JOHN L. DAY recently returned from Mexico, where he has been looking after the interests of Famous Players-Lasky productions and establishing an exchange in the interest of C. M. Clay, who is to distribute Famous Players-Lasky pictures throughout Mexico. He brings back the report that American pictures occupy only a secondary place in Mexico.

"The reason for this," says Mr. Day, "is the negligence of the average American film company in checking back its stock of film from its various exchanges.

"When the Mexican moving picture patrons see an announcement that an American film is to be shown he is loath to pay his money for admission, as the class of film is generally far below anything that is shown in even the smallest towns in the United States."

Organization Is Needed.

Mr. Day stated that the possibilities for future development of the picture business in Mexico are tremendous and that all it needs is systematic organization.

Mr. Clay, who has purchased the territorial rights in Mexico from Famous Players-Lasky, is a business man of long experience with the War Trade Board in Mexico. He is installing in Mexico City an office which will have many of the facilities of the branch offices of Famous Players-Lasky throughout the United States.

George Le Guere Signed by Bacon as Leading Man

GEORGE LE GUERE, who has been seen in support of Blanch Bates, Robert Edeson, David Warfield, Irene Fenwick and Jane Cowl, and who has had a successful screen career, has been signed by Gerald Bacon as leading man for Mr. Bacon's new star, Lucy Cotten, who will be seen in the featured role of the first Bacon production, released by Frank G. Hall through Independent Sales Corporation, "Sun Up," a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner."

George Le Guere
Will play opposite Lucy Cotton in Gerald Bacon's "Sunup," released by Independent Sales.

Mr. Le Guere is one of the screen's best known leading men and juveniles having been seen in "Youth," "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," "The Seven Deadly Sins" and with Norma Talmadge in one of her late successes. His latest work for the screen was opposite Jane Grey in "The Birth of a Race." Last season he was seen in "Business Before Pleasure," one of the biggest successes on Broadway.

O'Brien a K. of C. Secretary.

Richard G. O'Brien, professionally known as Richard Garrick, for many years dramatic director for Frohman's and also for Liebler's, is going overseas as a Knights of Columbus secretary and will probably be assigned as an entertainment director with the Knights of Columbus with the Army of Occupation. Mr. O'Brien is also well known as a photoplay director.

Started Theatre with $70 and Sold Soon for $5,000

ALTHOUGH the past year has been unusually trying to exhibitors on account of war taxes, and unusual patriotic contributions by the public, nevertheless many exhibitors can point to extraordinary box office records.

An example of what gameness, foresight and real showmanship can do in the face of great odds was the case of Messrs. Braswell & Keaton, of Fordyce, a little Southern Arkansas town of only 1,500 population, where these two men less than a year ago took over the Lyric Theatre to meagre patronage. Fordyce was no "show" town, according to reports made by every previous exhibitor who had attempted to run the Lyric.

But Messrs. Braswell and Keaton had sensed popular opinion and made up their mind that Fordyce was a great show possibility if the right attractions were booked. With the unpromising capital of $70 they went to work. The other day they sold the Lyric to a Fordyce business man for a sum said to approximate $5,000, the two partners retiring to take over another theatre in Louisiana.

In an interview Mr. Braswell said: "We attribute our success mainly to Fox productions. One of our first killings was made on 'The Honor System.' Another money-making spot in our show career was Annette Kellerman in 'A Daughter of the Gods.' With 'The Spy' we got advanced prices, while 'Trouble Makers' was a strong drawing card.

"Of course, we had educated our patrons to the point where, when we advertised a Fox production, they expected to see something a little out of the ordinary. They were not disappointed."

Ohio Legislature Fails to Pass Sunday Picture Bill

CINCINNATI film men were disappointed at the failure of the Legislature to support and pass the Banker bill, legalizing the showing of pictures on Sunday. Every effort had been made to overcome objections of the religious element, but without avail. After it became evident that the bill was to be amended to death, through the elimination of the most prosperous hours of the evening and other restrictions, the sponsors of the bill moved and carried a motion for its indefinite postponement.

While the failure of the bill to carry probably will have no serious effect on the Cincinnati houses, as they always have been open on Sundays, there is keen disappointment among local exchangemen particularly. Henry Hoefle, Andrew Hettesheimer and Edward Kirsch represented the Cincinnati motion picture interests.

THIRTEEN BEST COMEDIES FOR SUMMER

For Corporation Releasing Second Edition of Sunshine Laugh-Makers at Exhibitors' Request

BY command of the exhibitors of America, we have deceided to release, with brand new prints and brand new paper, the second edition of the thirteen biggest and best Fox Sunshine Comedies."

This statement by Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is the opening gun of a campaign to meet an exhibitor demand for comedies which is said to be unprecedented in the history of the motion picture business.

These Fox Sunshine Comedies, each in two reels, are to be released as a group under the name of "The Lucky Thirteen." One will be issued each week throughout June, July and August. The first release, June 1, will be "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells."

The new prints prepared for this series are from revised and re-edited negatives and the resulting pictures are declared by the Fox organization to be even funnier and snappier than the original releases.

New Lithographs Prepared.

The new lithographs, it is asserted, will be the most elaborate and effective yet provided with Fox Sunshine Comedies, emphasizing the lions, the pretty girls and the unique situations which have been characteristic features of these productions from the very outset.

The Rivoli Theatre in New York and a host of other representative theatres throughout the country have recently played the second edition of "The House of Terrible Scandals."

Fox Theatres Also Feel Demand.

The subject of a second edition of Fox Sunshine Comedies was the first matter presented to Mr. Fox on his return from Europe. There had accumulated during his absence mail from exhibitors calling attention to the comedy situation and requesting another opportunity to run the big Fox Sunshine Comedy successes.

Mr. Fox himself, in his own chain of theatres, already has played Fox Sunshine Comedies five and six times with success and he now is planning to play them again when the second edition is released.

Selection of the subjects to be included in "The Lucky Thirteen," according to Mr. Robbins, has been made on a basis of exhibitor reports. The following list covers comedies which the exhibitors agree have produced the most laughs:

"Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," "A Milk-Fed Vamp," "His Smashing Career," "Damaged No-Goods," "Shadows of Her Past," "The Son of a Gun," "Hungry Lions in a Hospital," "Are Married Policemen Safe?" "A Self-Made Lady," "A Neighbor's Keyhold," "Wild Women and Tame Lions," "A Tight Squeeze" and "Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express."

The group plan of releasing these productions, it is pointed out, enables the exhibitor to solve a whole summer's perplexing problems with one booking.

Geleng Startles Cameramen with His Night Panorama

IN the May 17 issue of the Moving Picture World there appeared a night panorama picture taken by Louis A. J. Geleng, of the Cinema Camera Club ball held in the Estee studios on 125th street on April 26. The caption gave credit to Mr. Geleng for this unusual photographic stunt, and in the course of a few days the World had an inquiry from up-state for the address of Mr. Geleng, the writer stating that he wanted to ask him for information on the technique of night panoramas.

Mr. Geleng paid the World a visit the other day, and according to him his night panorama of the Cinema Camera Club ball is the first picture of the kind ever taken. The flashlight is the usual medium for taking such interiors, but Mr. Geleng had the big banks of studio lights to help him and couldn't resist the temptation to give the panorama a try. His results were remarkably successful.

Mr. Geleng is the chief cameraman for the motion picture department of the Newspaper Pictorial Syndicate, 500 Fifth avenue, New York. He is an expert in the industrial and commercial line and has made numerous difficult factory pictures. For the past nine months he has been in the Nyack Hospital recuperating from an operation. Previous to his hospital experience he was doing camera work for the Liberty Loans in and around New York City. He is an old timer in the industry, a charter member of the Cinema Camera Club, and his reappearence will be welcomed by a number of friends.

Montagu Love Creates Most Intricate Make-Up

WHAT is said to be one of the most original make-ups ever credited to a character actor is being used by Montagu Love, World Picture star, in his latest production "Through the Toils" just completed at the World studio, under the direction of Harry O. Hoyt. It required three hours to put this make-up on and ten minutes to take it off. Mr. Love is compelled to change entirely his appearance both as regards his body and his face. The same method employed by furriers "in pointing" a fox fur is used by Mr. Love in putting on beard, moustache, eye-brows and eyelashes.

He first begins by coating his face with fish glue and then the hairs are stuck on, and after this is completed a barber is employed to trim the hair to the desired appearance. In order to get the proper blending of shadows different color dyes are used. Specially designed symmetricals are employed to change the appearance of his lower limbs and assist in creating "a walk" in keeping with the character Mr. Love is called upon to play. His arms, shoulders, neck, ears, nose and chest are then subjected to a transformation that creates an entirely different character from the many things that Mr. Love is credited with in his illustrious career on the stage and the screen.

"The Hushed Hour" Opens to Big Detroit Business

THE Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet, had its national premiere at the Broadway-Strand in Detroit beginning May 18. The "takings" reported by the Harry Garson offices show that $1,819.70 was the first day's receipts, with $1,683.30 the following day.

"The Hushed Hour" is in five reels. The cast includes Milton Sills, Gloria Hope, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Harry Northrup, Mary Anderson, Lydia Knott, Wyndham Standing, Winter Hall, Bennie Alexander, Edward M. Kimball and Norman Selby (Kid McCoy).

Newspaper clippings displayed at the Garson offices showed enthusiastic praise for the production from the Detroit journals.

Marketing and distributing arrangements for "The Hushed Hour" have not yet been announced. In a comprehensive report Royal A. Baker, the Detroit official censor, eulogized the cast and the story.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Next Year.

FOR a second time the alleged daylight saving plan is raising trouble for picture theatres, and this year without the war for an excuse. Don't waste time next year. Start in now to kick against the moving ahead of the clocks, and work your screen and your program to educate your patron. No real good seems to be accomplished by the scheme, and it does work a hardship for amusements.

Crowded.

White space does not seem to worry the Toledo theatre managers. The pages of the Toledo papers are filled with displays that look like a thunderstorm backed up by a cyclone. Apparently the men who get up the layouts have been told that they will lose their jobs if they do not take up every inch of white paper, and no one seems to be in immediate danger of having to hunt a job. The Colonial sends in a dozen samples, and this is about the most open advertisement of the lot. It is a five-column width, ticularly because it is all so full of type. You feel that you have not the time to spare to read it all, and so you pass it over, where you might have read one well displayed selling argument. Even where cuts are used, as in the second example, they fill up the space. There is not too much to read in this second display, but it looks as though there was too much, and the reader does not stop to argue, but passes it over, unless he has taken a half hour for the purpose of picking out a show. The third example shows a pair of five fifteens, and these, too, show the same stuffing, though there is not really too much type. It just looks that way. This is not the case with the Colonial alone. The Colonial is perhaps rather better than the average in this regard, but the town seems to set its advertising in this fashion, and no one appears to have labored with the compositors to get a better display. Should any one house take the trouble to get something different, the advertising would probably make real business for that enterprising management before the other houses found out that one advertiser was getting all of the cream. Most cities seem to have some certain style of advertising, and publicity men appear to drop naturally into that style, with the result that all of the displays look alike, and, therefore, lose much of their selling value. Now and then some live advertiser comes along and changes things, but soon they are all following the new lead and the pages again look all the same. It pays to keep changing styles in order to get what the other fellow has not, and to change before he can follow you. Someone can make a huge hit in Toledo by playing up white space for a while.

Let Them Know You.

Let your patrons know you by sight. Do not hide out in your office. Be around. Make an announcement from the stage now and then if for no other reason than to get acquainted with your patrons and to let them see what you look like. This holds particularly true of the smaller houses. Be some one who is known and give your house a personal touch.

Passes for Pastors.

Charles Decker has changed from the Majestic, Grand Junction, to the Sterling, Greeley, Colo., and he is hustling as hard as ever. Lately he had "Parentage" at the house, and sent out a form letter to all teachers and ministers asking their attendance and explaining that he had planned to give a special showing for them in advance of the regular run, but that he was not able to get the film in time. Instead, he was sending them passes for the opening day, and begged them to use the enclosures. It was a well worded letter, and probably made business for a longer period than the run of that particular attraction.

Gummed It Up.

The Doric Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., ran "An Amazing Impostor" lately. In this play it will be recalled that Mary Miles Minter is the daughter of a chewing gum king, and for three days before the showing the city was flooded with packages of the jaw exerciser printed up:

Chew Hood's Gum and See

"An Amazing Impostor."

You can get gum with your own labels very cheaply by looking in the theatrical papers for advertisements, and a novelty like this is apt to work hard for the house.

Hearts Afoot.

The Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, made a clever street display for the "Heart of Humanity." A light framework was made, large enough to contain a man, and this was lettered front and back, with posters on the sides. It was effective, but we think it would not have cost much more to drape in the legs of the motive power with a red skirt and the effect would have been greatly enhanced. The skirt of the overcoat, and the feet detract from the general effect, though even as it stands, the advertisement is a good one and is bound to make business. The display for the marquise is not as elaborate as some of the Schade displays, but it is well done and effective; more so than would have been a posted 24 sheet. The cuting away around the heart adds much to the display value of the sign and is well worth the extra trouble entailed. It might not seem that so slight a thing as cutting away a portion of a display would help, but it does add greatly to the effect and will attract far more attention than an oblong. It also suggests that an attraction worthy of this special attention must be out of the ordinary. The suggestion is unconscious and perhaps not even mentally formulated, but it exists none the less.

Pomeroy's Latest.

Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman, Montreal, does not let many bets get by him. When he found that Pe'rova was booked at a drama house, he arranged to play her in film the same week, and then advertised that she was personally offering a prize of $10 for the best criticism of her work in the picture. He received hundreds of criticism, for the whole public seemed to be willing to earn ten cents a word; the criticism being limited to one hundred words. It was an unusual adroit hook up and brought a large return.

A Campaign.

To advertise "A Midnight Romance," the First National Exchange, of Washington, D. C., got out a four pager, showing Tom Moore's campaign for this feature at the Rialto. It is interesting as showing how one adroit showman handled the subject. It opened with the underline shown at the top of the left hand column, followed by a doubly fifty liner on Friday and Saturday, which is shown just below. Below that is the forty lines single that ran from Tuesday through the remainder of the engagement. The middle column shows the triple used for the Sunday display, dropping about 175 lines. The double fifty on the right hand was run Monday, and below that is the criticism from the Post. This was not an extravagant display, but the stuff is so well laid that even the single forty gives a good display. The double fifty with its inset advertisement, held in with white space and a twelve point linear border, looms large on the page, and gives better than the average hundred lines. It is not the space, but the display which counts, and as we have often shown, Tom Moore knows how to get display without buying huge spaces.

You Must Advertise.

You must advertise to get pictures over no matter what their merits, and you should advertise harder for a good picture than for one not likely to sell. It is better to take a loss on a picture now and then and lose the sale of a few tickets than to lose the patron through selling him a ticket for that particular show.

Hooking Up.

Here is an unusual example of a hook-up used by the Washington Theatre, Dallas, Texas. The house takes three sixes—eighteen column inches—and gets a double page display, for each of the twenty other advertisements lines up with the title—"What Every Woman Wants"—and runs all the way from bread to banks. The idea was first used by a Southwestern manager in connection with Mary MacLaren in "Shoes" and has been used several times since, but it is always good if you can get an apt title to play up to, and if your local paper has a live advertising man it is not even necessary to go out and get the other advertising. The newspaper will do that. But if you have to dig the ads yourself, it is worth while. Try it sometime when you have the right sort of title.

From Dan Connors.

Dan Connors, of Virginia City, Nev., sends in some more of his own typesetting to prove that he can get the best of the antiquated types of the old Enterprise, some of which had been in the cases since Mark Twain was its editor. The stuff is set by Mr. Connors himself, who has been his own compositor since the printers were drawn to the cities. The first design is a rather full two fours. The central figure we do not place, but the other six cuts are the A. T. F. "ballet dancers," which work very nicely for a circus play; better than the exchange cut shown in the second display. The lady seems to have a greater muscular development than Miss Marsh, but the cuts get attention and tell the story at a glance. In the Salome advertisement, which is a two sevens, Dan seems to have dug up another stock cut from somewhere that does just as well as Harold Franklin's special drawing. He is using this on several recent advertisements. Dan is improving as a compositor, and he did a really good job on that big bank. He could go into any big shop and hold down a job without having to bribe the foreman, and he would be a find for a paper paying attention to show advertising. And it is worth while noting that in a remote town Mr. Connors gets thirty cents for Salome and fifty cents for Chaplin, which is going some. Do you remember what a row there was in some sections when prices were first raised from five to ten cents? But who would not pay thirty cents to see the seven veils "flutter airily" from Miss Bara? That's only a little more than four cents a veil. If you have trouble with your printing office, why not follow Mr. Connor's example and learn to set your own type? It is simple once you catch the trick.

Three Language Heralds.

We have shown as many as four languages on East Indian advertising, but in this country two languages is about the limit. The Holman, Montreal, got out heralds in three languages for the second week of "The Heart of Humanity." The first example shows a throwaway printed in Hebrew on one side and in English on the other. Here the title is translated into the Hebrew and only the signature cut reads in English, but in the French four page herald, one face of which is shown, the title is not translated even where type is used. Harry Pomeroy has been quick to get the fact that the story is partly laid in Canada, and uses the fact prominently in "The first big Canadian play." Apparently there is more than a slight basis for the statement that they want home stuff in Canada. In addition to the heralds, Mr. Pomeroy used tiny red hearts, which were doubly appropriate because they were used on Valentine's day. He also used a heavy white card on which was printed a message in script with no type display to take away from the seemingly personal character of the message. To combine this with any type would have robbed it of seventy-five per cent. of its value. As it stands, it looked like a personal message and was read as such until too late to stop. That is the real trick of the imitation handwriting idea. It must look the part in every detail.

Circusy.

This advertisement from the Strand, Pittsfield, Mass., offers a decided circus touch to a circus picture. Many advertisers have seen the opportunities for Program Stuff.

The humorist of the Mikadow Theatre has discovered that "A little child shall lead them" did not apply to the Crown Prince. That's good enough to copy.

More Program Stuff.

Here's a good idea from the Eureka Community News, the four page newspaper put out by the Eureka Theatre, Philadelphia, each week. Adapt it for your own use.

In the original it is set double column in 14 point bold, but it can be worked in almost any form from a program filler to a special printing.

In Correction.

Through an error the picture of a house front printed on page 1492 of the issue for March 15, was credited to the Holman, Montreal, instead of to O. J. Evans, of the Rialto, Toronto, to whom due credit should have been given for an excellent display. We regret the accident and extend apologies to Mr. Evans.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive projectionist should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

The December 28 issue containing the lens charts was exhausted very quickly. The demand for lens charts was so great that we have had a limited number printed on heavy paper, size 11x17, for framing. Covers amperage 25 to 60 A. C. or D. C., and Plano-convex or meniscus biconvex; also gives necessary projection lens diameter to avoid waste and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Every progressive, up-to-date projectionist should have one. Price, 50 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Send U. S. 3-cent stamps or money order.

Vancouver Not Bluffed.

SOME of these fellers scattered around over the landscape, who seem to keep pretty darned close tabs on the department doings, never trouble their luxurious siestas sufficiently to write until some one rises out of the tall brush and heaves a rock in their direction. Then they wake up and reel off a flow of hot stuff that makes us wink our eyes, gasp for breath, grab our trusty typewriter (machine, we mean) and yell for help. Just listen to this one, from Brother C. B. Stear, Vancouver, B. C. I remember some one suggesting, not long ago, that Vancouver might chip in on some discussion. Think it was Griffith, but not sure. Maybe I did. Don't know. Anyhow, here's what has happened:

"Re your article concerning difference of opinion between projection experts as to correct place to focus arc crater and your suggestion that the Vancouver men should help out in the discussion. Now, sir, you just listen here awhile! You have been blowing our trumpet so much that it is no wonder the boys down East have at last heaved their hat into the ring and invited us to combat. You have got us into a blooming 'ole, and seeing as we don't know a better 'ole ('ows that?) we must just flounder around and try to back up the old trumpeter as best we can.

"You seem to have given the impression to all and sundry that we British Columbia chaps are something special, but believe me, sir, that's all bunk. Here is how it all happened, and s'welp me Bob it did 'happen.' Some time ago the Vancouver union accumulated unto itself the idea that too many new men were getting in on the projection game too easily. The local decided to put the kibosh on that kind of stuff. To that end it sent a deputation to the Provincial Government at Victoria, asking for an examination for projectionists, AND we got it! Yes, sir; we got it good and plenty! Some of those good brothers who had planned taking a couple of hours off, sauntering over to the court house and just taking out that license came back at a full gallop, remarking, 'Oh! ouch! and wow!' Some fell down flatter than a cullud gemman's foot, and those who did wiggle through the mill had not one danged thing to crow about! Nay, verily, Pauline they had not! But the one main thing we all got was a corking big shaking up and a fine, large, juicy idea of all the various things we thought we knew, but did not. Result: All but the old original crackerjacks began to scratch gravel in an endeavor to accumulate some real knowledge, particularly with regard to the optics of projection, and we have kept it up ever since, b-e-c-a-u-s-e there is a monkey clause in the provincial law which empowers the examining board to call any one up for examination at will, so we have to keep up steam all the time. Well, all this had the ultimate effect of making most of the boys "bugs" on the subject of projection. Anything new appearing in the projection department nowadays starts an argument.

"Of course we still have a few wise ones who imagine they can improve on the Government examination, but I don't think the exam. put up by Messrs. Oswald, Foster & Co. can be beat. There, now, you have the awful truth in all its unseemly nudity. We are just an ordinary crowd who got what we asked for, got it with red-hot trimmings, and are now obliged to keep up to date (that little re-examination-at-any-time joker) or go back to some less exacting profession. Therefore, likewise and so forth, here am I with my little bit.

"In my opinion the correct point at which to focus crater image depends, to a large extent, on the area of maximum incandenscence' of the crater itself. From time to time there have been discussions in the department as to relation of light to amperage, as well as the correct plane in which to focus the crater image. I believe these questions should be considered together. Those who hold the image should be focused at or near the aperture, take it for granted that the carbons are loaded to capacity, so that the entire crater is at maximum incandescence, hence giving an even, white light. Those who claim the correct place to focus crater image is within the projection lens have in mind a carbon which is loaded very much under its capacity, hence not only supplying a 'white light area' in its crater, but also light of lower quality and reddish tinge. This applies to, for instance, ⅝ carbons carrying 25 or 30 amperes D. C. The idea of loading carbons to capacity in order to get a crater of even, white brilliancy is based on the well know fact that a copper conductor (solid) will carry a light load on its outer surface, and as the load is increased on its next, inner, 'surface,' and so on until the whole cross section is loaded. In case of the solid carbon the arc will travel around to outer edge. We therefore install a 'core' of a material of higher conductivity, thus inducing the current to pass through center of carbon, which now loads up from center out, instead of from outside in, and so long as it can carry its current on the core surface all the current will crowd through that spot, which will become very highly incandescent, while the rest of the crater surface burns at lower temperature, giving off light of inferior quality, having a decidedly reddish tinge. This inferior light will affect the purity of the white light at the point of greatest concentration. By focusing the core of the crater image just beyond the film, the film itself will act on the same principle as a ground glass, though to very much less extent, of course, and help diffuse the light of the core itself, which same is a crater within a crater. By focusing the core on the rear glass of the projection lens, when carbons are loaded to capacity, you can notice a decidedly brighter spot in center of screen, which same is, I think, the brighter light of the core. Maybe this is all pure bunkum, but it is what I think. You cannot get pure white light unless the source is pure white. If you drill several small holes in an iron shield and place same over condenser you will get a clear image of crater through each, proving that the light source, as a whole, is projected by every pin-point of the condenser surface. It therefore follows that if you are working with underloaded carbons you get a spot of inferior quality, and in order to improve the field of light on the screen you push the carbons forward to focus the crater image on rear lens of projection lens, thus getting the best light from condenser by using center of it only, depending on quality of corrected projection lens to clear up the light field.

"The conclusion I arrive at is, roughly, that with fully loaded carbons focus crater image (core) just beyond the film, or on it. With partially loaded carbons focus on rear lens of projection lens, or use smaller carbons. This is not designed to rank with the originators of this discussion, but since the hat is in the ring we cannot allow the challenge to go by."

In reading this letter a thought occurred. In the two largest cities in this country are large organizations (unions) of projectionists, presumbably, of course, led by the best men in them. The presidents of these two unions, being among the best posted projectionists in the two cities (you would not expect it to be otherwise, would you?) we should be interested in having from them, sent in for publication, a discussion of the points Friend Stear has raised. Just a thought, you know. Just a thought that occurred to me.

Well, Brother Stear, your letter is most interesting, and the point raised with relation to underloading of carbons is well taken, though I cannot agree with some of the rest of your argument. Your remarks with regard to going after something and getting more than you bargained for were amusing. But I venture that none of you would go back now to the old way. I happen to know you have not in the least over-stated the excitement when the real truth of that examination dawned upon the projectionists of British Columbia. Some of the men worked so hard that their brains smoked. But now that Vancouver, or rather, the British Columbia men really are "something special," in that they have, they must have, a fairly complete knowledge of their profession so far as it has advanced up to date. This is not true anywhere else in the world, so far as I know, unless it be in some of the other Canadian provinces which the B. C. way of doing it has awakened. Alberta is, so far as I know, pretty well following your lead. As to Sask. and the other provinces I am not as yet fully informed.

As to your argument, I shall be compelled to take issue on some points. In the first place, you cannot, under any circumstances, get really good results with the crater core focused at or on back glass of projection lens. And this is why: Your plate-with-holes-in supplies the answer, but I must analyze it a bit. As you say, each pin-point of the front condenser projects a full image of the crater to the "spot." This means that, no matter what part of the condenser you may use—center or whole lens—you get a spot made up of complete crater images, hence containing the impure light you speak of, if carbons are underloaded. By shoving the crater image ahead you cut out a lot of the outside of the condenser (hugely expensive in light), and by so doing get rid, I think, of considerable chromatic aberration. But what about the almost inevitable ghost? Of course your proposition presupposes small amperage, with long distance from condenser to film, so that the ghost area is pretty well back, but in my opinion, while your argument as to evil effect of underloaded carbons is correct, and is exceedingly well put, your proposal for advancement of crater to lens to clear up the field is not good. It is at best a makeshift. More and more I can see the huge importance of loading carbons to capacity. Friend Benklemann surely sprung a good one there, and coming right on top of Griffiths' exposition of the spot make-up (thousands of separate crater images), has opened our eyes to a number of things we should, perhaps, have seen sooner.

I cannot agree with you, Friend Stear, that the point of greatest concentration should ever be ahead of the film, or that the film acts in any degree as a ground glass would, except when dirty, or oily. I do agree with you that a pure spot cannot be had in any possible way except by having a light source (crater) of pure white all over its surface, and that that is only possible with carbons loaded to capacity. But of one thing I am not quite certain, viz.: Where the carbon core focuses with relation to point of greatest concentration. Seems to me you have given us what may prove to be a valuable guide, or marker. The point of greatest concentration is not always so easy to determine, especially by the student. If the focus of the core always bears a fixed relation to the point of greatest concentration, that fact will enable us to talk more intelligently with relating of fixing distances.

We shall await, with much interest, papers on this subject by the leading officials of projectionists' unions in the two largest cities in these U. S. Surely they will prove very interesting—very interesting indeed, because large unions will of course have their most high-class men in charge of their affairs.

Compensarc Connection for Dissolving.

Karl B. Glenn, Newport, Tennessee, desires advice, as follows:

"Will you please tell me what is the proper way to wire the two lamps to a compensarc so as to light both lamps at once? We are having trouble with condenser breakage. Machines are one Powers and one Simplex De Luxe Model, using A. C. at 40 amperes. Can you tell me from above what is wrong. When last I wrote it was from Hendersonville, North Carolina, where I was manager of the Queen Theatre. Am only here to help my brother until his projectionist is out of the army."

That "Simplex De Luxe Model" was too good to keep. Don't know whether the Precision or the Enterprise company will swear loudest. But the kind of machine (presumably Power's 6-B and Simplex Type S) makes no difference as to answering your questions. As to hitching compensarc up so you can use both lamps at once, why that's one of the things we spell i-m-p-o-s-s-i-b-l-e. You can hitch the two lamps in multiple, however, so that by careful work you can dissolve one picture into the next fairly well, after some practice. It is called "stealing the arc." You make the connection as indicated in drawings. To change over, you close the switch of the idle lamp and bring the carbons of the lamp together. This will light the second lamp, and when you separate the carbons again, as you must, of course, will automatically extinguish the other. Many projectionists have very fair success with this plan, though of course the better way is to have two compensarcs. Cannot agree with your 40 amperes A. C. In my judgment the improved screen result had through using 60 amperes (capacity of compensarc) would more than repay extra costs for current. I never did believe in low A. C. amperage for projection. As to condenser breakage, look at lens chart in December 28, 1918 issue, line up according to its directions, and unless there is something radically wrong with the equipment, you should have very little lens breakage. If you have not the issue in question, then remit 50 cents to Moving Picture World for lens charts on heavy paper for framing. You will, of course, be careful when opening lamphouse door, that no heavy drafts strike the hot lenses. There are other reasons for condenser breakage, but first I want to know that your lens system itself is not at fault.

As to Lens Focus.

W. R. Gwynn, Cheyenne, Wyoming, sends in a most excellently written letter and a really well made drawing dealing with lens focus, as per my request, March 20 issue. The drawing would take up a lot of space and, much as I dislike to pass by as fine a piece of work, I think it is hardly essential to clear understanding of the matter. Brother Gwynn, who belongs to local union 230, Denver, says:

"According to the theory of the conjugate foci of a lens the object must be changed with relation to the lens in order to change the focusing position of the image, i. e., if the lens is, for example, four inches from the film, it can come to an absolutely focus at one point only. No lens can have two focusing points or obtain the same identical sharpness of focus several feet apart.

"However, another point must be taken into consideration, viz., there would be a greater change in the distance from lens to film on changing from a 40 to a 60 foot throw than in changing from a 90 to a 110 foot throw. The greater the throw the less variation in distance from lens to film, until a distance might be reached where no change would be necessary for practical purposes of focusing. I have tried to illustrate this with the enclosed diagram, which is only relative and not intended to show accurately the distance of change. I believe that if Mr. Nighwander will go down to the stage and compare the two pictures he will find that one is in much better focus than the other. To assume that you may obtain the same identical focus on a variation of 20 feet without touching the lens is a violation of a well established law of optics. It may be 'good enough' to suit the purpose, if you are not hard to please with a focus, and may appear sharp from the projection room."

The thing really hinges pretty well on the great difference in length of conjugate foci points. If a lens focuses a picture six or seven inches away on a screen 100 feet (1,200 inches) away, it is readily seen that a moderate change of the latter distance will only effect a very minute change in the first named. I would imagine it to be the same percentage in each distance. For instance, suppose we change the screen distance by ten feet, or one hundred and twenty inches, the original distance being one hundred feet and the film six inches from the focal point of the projection lens. Then I would suppose the necessary movement of the lens to re-focus would be .1 of six inches, because ten feet is .1 of the longer focusing distance. But maybe I'm wrong in this. It is only a reasoning from the standpoint of what seems to be cause and effect.

From Portland.

Matthew Aparton, projectionist at the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Oregon, writes denying the charges of the Hood River man, published recently, concerning Portland projection. The letter is also signed by Jean A. Miller, presumably also of the Liberty. The letter reads:

"During the time the epidemic was raging here, a few of us were standing near the Liberty Theatre, this city, when Broadwell, the Hood River man came up and asked where the union offices were. I replied that no one was there as no meetings or gathering were allowed for the present. Broadwell then proceeded to ask some very foolish questions about the union. For instance, he wanted to know why it, the union, would not support its members when forced to lay off. He was told that, due to the fact that we had 15 men in the army, who would have to be taken care of on their return, we were not taking in any new members. Well, to make a long story short, we all got rather angry before the conversation was finished. Well, I guess in a way I am to blame. I found Broadwell's name on many reel cases and wrote him telling to please keep his name off. In closing let me say I have been with the Liberty Theatre Corporation nearly two years, and they require the goods on the screen, or you're done, and all the I. A. cards in the world won't keep you from getting canned."

Never again! I'm DONE on publishing anything of this sort in future. I know I've said that before, but this time it goes. Broadwell wrote a mighty straightforward, convincing letter. Well, I've given Aparton his come-back, so we'll just have to let it go at that. The trouble is that I have no possible practical means for proving or disproving charges made by correspondents.

Wants Suggestions for Projection Room.

Paul Walker, Hillsdale, Mich., orders lens charts and asks for suggestions as to planning projection room for a new theatre. He says:

"Received handbook ordered from Chicago office; also question booklets, and now I am back for the lens charts, for which find fo' bits enclosed. We have the business all to ourselves here. Own two theatres, one of which is running and the other closed. Are starting to build a 900-seat house near here. The building is 40x130 feet. Will have a stage twenty-two feet deep. Distance of projection will be 122 feet. Projection room will be in balcony. How large a picture should we project? House will not be very high. We have a 9x12 Gardner Velvet Gold Fiber screen which is bran' new. Will it be too small? Will have two Type S Simplex projectors and a Ft. Wayne Motor Generator and will use 35 to 40 amperes at the arc. As I have doped it out will need two 6.5 P. C. condenser lenses, set not more than one-sixteenth inch apart, with center of combination 16.5 inches from film. Is this correct? Will have a 12x15-foot projection room built of hollow tile, with adjoining room for motor generator and everything except projectors. Plenty of ventilation, lavatory, etc. The room will be constructed according to handbook instructions."

Projection room as planned seems to be all right, except that you have, in the sketch, shown no wash basin—a very important matter, as the projectionist's hands get soiled with carbon dust and oil and it is better to remove it with soap and water than wipe it off on the films. Very likely it is to be there, but you forgot to mark it in on the sketch. Don't set motor generator right up in a corner. Set it out where you can get at it from all around. As to screen, from the screen to rear row of seats cannot possibly be more than about 125 feet, and will most likely be less. If your audiences have not been educated to large pictures you could use the 12-foot screen, covering it fully with the picture and extending a border made of black cloth beyond it. A 12-foot picture is pretty small, though, for such a house and might not suit your manager. Mind you that insofar as concerns the audience seeing the picture and reading the titles there will be no trouble at all, except possibly for a few short-sighted ones who can seat themselves part way down the length of the house. The advantages of the small picture are many. For one thing, you will get a sharper, more brilliant picture. I would suggest that the twelve-foot screen be put in and tried out for a few days. If the audience likes the small, brilliant picture, well and good. If it does not it will be no large matter to get a larger screen. If you do change, I would suggest sixteen feet as plenty wide enough. Your lens dope is all right, except that instead of sixteen and a half inches you will want nineteen inches from center of condenser combination to aperture. Don't see where you dug up that sixteen and a half inch idea.

Rialto and Rivoli Equipment.

From time to time inquiries come in as to the equipment, etc., of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, of New York City. For information of all, these theatres use Simplex special equipment projectors, Minusa Gold Fibre screens. The Rivoli screen is set at an angle of twenty degrees and ten minutes, the distance of projection being 131 feet. Ninety amperes D. C. are used. The Rialto has a 127-foot projection distance and the screen is set at an angle of nineteen degrees and twenty-two minutes. Amperes used, 90. The Rialto projection room is reached by perpendicular iron ladder leading through a hole in the floor of a room adjoining the projection room. The projection room itself, while not at all crowded, is a bit scant in its front and back width. The Rivoli projection room is ample in dimensions and is reached in a more respectable manner. In each house there is heavy loss of light incident upon using such long focal length projection lenses and heavy amperage. In both theatres the location of the projection room is, from the projection viewpoint, objectionable, but under the conditions most excellent screen results are had, which latter is distinctly to the credit of Chief Projectionist Lester Bowen and the projectionists under him.

We've Been Watched.

G. W. Betz, President Local Union 282, Middletown, N. Y., says:

"Dear Brother Richardson: It has been several moons since I've written the department, but that does not mean that I have not watched it every week. Have been on 'vacation' in Uncle Sam's service, but it's all over over there and I'm back again. Just now I am deeply engrossed in your handbook and Hawkins' Electrical Guides. To say that I think they're both great would be putting it mildly indeed. And now for some questions: Would you construe films as being a part of the equipment, so far as the projectionist is concerned? I ask because we have a clause in our contract which reads to the effect that the projectionist must report fifteen minutes prior to starting show to determine the electrical and mechanical condition of projection apparatus.

"I have a 25-35-ampere transverter, which is giving complete satisfaction, but where can I get some dope on it? Why does the voltage double and the amperage remain constant when both lamps are in operation? What difference is there in the windings of a transverter and any other motor generator set? This is all just now, but watch out, for I'm going to trouble you a lot. Glad you escaped the surgeons with your life, for we need you in our business."

As to films being a part of the equipment in a sense which would bring them under the clause of your contract cited, most emphatically they are NOT. They are not owned by the theatre and are not a part of its stationary equipment. Moreover, the wording of the clause of the contract would make it ridiculous to assume that films were included, because by no possible stretch of imagination could the projectionist determine the physical condition of six to eight reels of film in fifteen minutes, much less make any needed repairs. Fifteen minutes is little enough time to look over the projection room machines, oil up and get ready to start, without doing anything to the films. It is presumed that films will be given the projectionist which are in at least safe, workable condition. If they are not, it is not up to the projectionist, but the exchange and the theatre management. Unions would do well to include a clause to this effect in their contracts. As to the transverter, write the Hertner Electric Co., Cleveland, O., for detailed instructions. The transverter doubles its voltage when the second arc is sprung because the two lamps are in series, and when you add the second arc you double the arc resistance, so that the voltage must be doubled in order to force through the same amount of current. In the old series arc lighting system, used for street lighting, ten amperes was usually the current flow, no matter whether there were two or fifty lamps, but there was a rise of, if I rightly remember, fifty volts for every lamp added. You will find this system described on pages 697-8, Vol. No. 4, Hawkins' Electrical Guides. It is known as the "constant current" system. I am not able to answer your question as to difference in windings. That would be quite some job. You won't "bother" me by asking questions. That is what I am here for—to answer questions.

Hey, Gosh Dang It, Stop It!

Whatcha sendin' me them darned lens chart orders for, huh? Send 'em to the Moving Picture World. Think I want to hire a bookkeeper or sumpin?

HULSEY'S THEATRE WILL BE SOME HOUSE

Inclines Instead of Stairs and a Roof Garden Will Be Incorporated in the Dallas Structure

HERSCHEL STUART, assistant general manager of the Hulsey Enterprises, has returned home after making a month's tour of the big cities of the North and East in search of modern ideas to incorporate in the new $500,000 Hulsey playhouse which will be erected on an entire block in the center of the Dallas business district. Ground is to be broken for the new theatre late in June, and it should be completed in about nine months.

Mr. Stuart was accompanied on his inspection trip by C. D. Hill, a Dallas architect. They devoted several days at each stop, carefully inspecting the best moving picture theatres in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, Indianapolis, Washington and Detroit.

A roof garden, wonderful lobby arrangements, sloping inclines to the galleries and many other innovations will be included in this theatre which will seat 3,500 people.

Building Roads with Celluloid.

Motion pictures are playing a leading part in the campaign being at present waged in Dallas County for the passage of $6,500,000 worth of good roads bonds.

Members of the Dallas Automobile Club who are urging the road-building bond issue selected a sunshiny day after recent heavy rains and took a camera man to all parts of the county. Stretches of roadway deep in mud with automobiles and horsedrawn vehicles stalled in the mire were filmed. These bad road pictures are being shown at local theatres with requests that Dallas County be lifted out of the mud. The unique campaign is having a telling effect.

They also have opened a second show at Abilene, which will make them proprietors of seven well-paying Texas theatres in the smaller towns of the state. WASHINGTON HOUSES INCREASE TRAFFIC

Picture Show Audiences Fill Up Trolley Cars in What Were Formerly the Light Load Hours

ALTHOUGH the street car service in this city, as at present rendered, cannot truthfully be said to tend to increase business for the motion picture shows in the business section, it is declared that the big houses that have been erected within the past year have materially increased the receipts of the railway companies.

Whereas, a year or so ago, there were periods during the afternoon and evening when the cars carried but comparatively few passengers, no such condition now exists, but, on the contrary, practically all the cars carry capacity loads on every trip. The great development of the motion picture business in downtown Washton during the past year is declared to be responsible, in part, for this increased business. Thousands of persons now come in town to attend the stellar programs which are offered at the large theatres which have been recently erected, resulting in increased revenue for the street car companies.

Breeskin Makes Hit.

The music critics on the local papers have been giving more or less space to Daniel Breeskin, leader of the orchestra at the Rialto Theatre. Health and Marriage Hints Are Numerous.

Theatre patrons having a predilection for film productions based on health, marriage, sex and sociological subjects are having a choice array of material offered from which to make selections. The Government film, made for training camp use, entitled, "Fit to Win," is having an extended run at the Savoy Theatre and has been shown to mixed audiences, as well as to women exclusively. This will be followed at this house by "Are You Legally Married?," a production in which legal questions are involved, and which is being distributed by the M. & R. Feature Film Exchange. "Spreading Evil," handled by the All Star Features Distributors, will be the attraction at the Rialto Theatre during the week of June 8, and will be offered with the endorsement of prominent officials, from the Governor to Police Judges. STRIKE TIED UP WINNIPEG THEATRES

With No Papers, Projectionists or Musicians the Exhibitors Were Up Against an Awful Game

Winnipeg was practically isolated from the rest of the world for the time being but from the brief reports brought out from the city it has understood that the theatre business was at a standstill as well as other occupational features.

Organized employes of newspapers went out with the rest with the result that no newspapers could be published, and even if local exhibitors had hoped to have conducted operations as usual, newspaper advertising channels were shut off. MINNEAPOLIS FILM BOARD DENIES RUMORS

President Stombaugh Writes an Open Letter Telling of Good Work Already Accomplished

EMPHATIC denial of rumors to the effect that the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade intended to regulate film rental prices in the territory was made in an open letter to exhibitors by Charles Stombaugh, president. Mr. Stombaugh says:

"The Minneapolis Film Board of Trade is having one hundred per cent. attendance at its weekly meetings. All local exchanges report that since the formation of the board and since the five trade rules have been put into effect the work in the exchanges has been greatly reduced, and thereby exchanges can give exhibitors a much better service than previously. Even those exhibitors who have been put under bond by the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade are now admitting that members are fair in their dealings.

"Many of the misunderstandings on contracts in the past have been due to the fact that the salesmen have made misrepresentations to exhibitors. The board members are fast getting rid of that class of salesmen.

"The Minneapolis Film Board of Trade emphatically denies rumors to the effect that it ever has or ever will make any effort to regulate film rental prices in this territory. It would be an impossibility to do so if it so desired, as film rental prices are in practically every instance scheduled by the home offices in New York, and, if any attempt was made to regulate prices, they would be violating the anti-trust law.

"Any exhibitor having a just complaint against any of the board members would do well to file it with the board, for in numerous cases the board has seen to it that exchanges adjust misunderstandings in an agreeable manner with the exhibitors."

LIBERTY AND CLEMMER RAISE PRICES

These Two Spokane Theatres Have Increased Admissions to Twenty-five Cents for Adults

ADMISSION prices to the Liberty and Clemmer theatres, of Spokane, have been raised. The admission has been 20 cents, with a 2-cent war tax added. The new price will be 25 cents, including war tax, making the total advance on adult tickets 3 cents. Children's admission will remain 11 cents.

The advance is chiefly due to new taxes imposed by the Government, the managers stated. In addition to the admission tax of 10 per cent. the exhibitor is required to pay a reel tax of 15 cents per day per reel used. The latest tax is a levy of 5 per cent. of the exhibitor's film rental.

Other theatres have announced they will make no change in prices at present.

Spokane Houses Entertain Soldiers.

The theatres of Spokane opened wide their doors to the men of the 347th Machine Gun Battalion and the 316th Ammunition Train of the 91st Division. Scores of the men availed themselves of the opportunity and visited several of the theatres while they were in the city.

Manager O. D. Woodward, of the Woodward Theatre, extended a personal invitation to the men to attend the afternoon performance of "Where the Trail Divides." The Pantages attracted a score of veterans who found the program abounding in songs and jokes pertaining to the A. E. F. The Liberty, Casino, Class A and other picture houses placed conspicuous signs in front of their theatres bidding the men enter and enjoy the show.

Washington M. P. Corporation Prospects.

The Spokane-made motion picture, "Trampled Truth," first called "Fool's Gold," promises to sell better than first anticipated, according to a report received from the East by C. E. McBroom, receiver of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation. The minimum price at which the picture can be sold, as fixed by the Eastern selling broker, Frederick Warde, has been increased from $45,000 to $47,750, with a probability that the picture company will eventually receive more than $50,000.

The foreign rights were sold to Mr. Warde for $5,000 and 20 per cent. of the gross receipts, in addition to the initial payment. The percentage will run to $3,600, or $1,100 more than was originally estimated.

Four different parties have indicated their intentions to bid for the Washington Motion Picture Corporation studio and buildings in Minnehaha Park if they are sold at a receiver's sale, all bidders stating that they intend to operate the plant.

BOX OFFICE BENEFITS IN "SAHARA"

Advertising Possibilities Brought Out by Dissecting High Lights and "Punches" in J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Big Production W. W. Hodkinson Soon Releases Through Pathe

By Epes Winthrop Sargent and Walter K. Hill

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S, production of "Sahara" is a spectacle without much of a story, or rather the story is too inconsistent to gain favor with those who demand good stories; so direct your appeal to those who prefer picture to story. Tell of the big settings, the desert scenes, the colorful pictures and the built street sets.

Do not say that the story is poor. Merely avoid directing attention to the story by saying that it is good. Play on the production angle, and you will please a majority of your patrons, but direct your appeal to those who prefer sight to thought.

This does not mean to avoid the story angles entirely, for there are good points in the story which may be played up, but play the story angle in connection with the star and the production rather than offering the story as such. Tell, for instance, that Miss Glaum has a new and vivid role, that of a favorite of the Parisian music halls who married a young American engineer and undergoes what to her is a living immolation in the depths of the Sahara, where her husband is engaged in an irrigation project.

Work on Star, Sets and Story.

Sketch a picture of this pleasure-loving product of the French stage to whom adulation is more than meat and drink, to whom pretty clothes and the chance to show them means more than love of home and husband. Then tell that she is transplanted to the sandy wastes where no other white man is seen for six months.

Then, as release from this dreary monotony seems about to come, she learns that he is to move still further into the desert to another project. Ask if it is any wonder that she was led from her wifely duty to gain the delights of Cairo, the most colorful spot in all the Orient. Then play up her state of mind with such stuff as:

Play on the Pall of Loneliness.

No matter where she turned she seemed to see sand, sand and Arabs ever intent upon their eternal prayers, for the true muslim prays five times a day, and each prayer is prefaced by the purification of el-wudoo. It seemed that whenever she looked from the screened porch of her tent she could see the silent figures prostrate themselves in the direction of the Kaaba at Mecca.

The loneliness, the dreariness of it all drove almost mad this pampered darling of the Parisian cafes. The tekbeer rang in her ears night and day. It was more constant than her husband's word of love. He had promised her Cairo and the delights of Sheppard's Hotel, and he gave her this.

You can get a good press story out of the tent itself. Several have commented upon the luxurious apartments of this canvas home, but anticipate comment by telling that such palatial structures are not uncommon in the desert, when one has the money to pay for the tent and its transport. Make a press item of this along the lines of:

Make a Specialty of the Tent.

He could not take her to the mud-walled huts of the oasis, so he spent every cent of his advance salary in a tent as luxurious as a palace. "Sahara" gives the first showing in pictures of the veritable palaces of canvas which wealthy men use when they are forced to cross the sandy wastes.

Their apartment in Paris had few more luxuries than this traveling home with its many rooms, its rich draperies, comfortable chairs and all of the little elegencies to which she had been accustomed, yet it could all be transported by camelback and destroyed and rebuilt daily if necessary by the skillful Arabs of the caravan.

It was a palace in the heart of solitude, and the solitude broke the heart of the pretty Parisian actress to whom the praise of men was more—she thought—than the love and care of her big and purposeful husband.

Explain What the Picture Doesn't.

In the same way anticipate comment on the use of dress suits in the desert. Tell how the engineer and his wife dressed for dinner every night and how she welcomed the sight of another white face at the table, the Russian prince, who was rich enough to gratify every whim, and who was willing to spend thousands in the hope of winning a woman for his own. Try to motivate this better than the story does in a paragraph:

Louise Glaum and Edwin Stevens
In a scene from "Sahara."

The Lure of Riches.

He was fabulously rich. For centuries his ancestors had bled and starved their serfs to pile up a huge fortune, and this last of the race was spending it with lavish hand. In the heart of the desert he found rare game in the woman who had been the toast of Paris. He coveted her for his own. He longed to display her to his friends in Cairo.

He knew that she hungered for the homage that was her due. He offered her all that her lighter nature craved, and he asked in return only the privilege of posing as her friend before those who formed the inner circle of Cairo. It was enough that he was her closest friend. More, he did not ask, and the thousands she squandered were not regretted.

Go on to the second half of the story. Use such lines as, "She thought she preferred pleasure to the love of a good man, but love was greatest after all." "She sought pleasure, but found no rest until true love came again." "She lived for love and admiration, and she sought it where she could find it, but she found at last that mother-love is the greatest love of all."

Bring Out the Better Points.

You can get a strong paragraph on the discovery of her husband, a drug-crazed hasheesh devotee, broken in mind and body by the excesses to which her desertion had driven him. Tell how she gave up the delights of her palace that she might minister to his needs, and make a strong play on the fact that she sought to bring him back to health and sanity even while knowing that with returning consciousness would come recognition and retribution. This is the big point in the play. Work it up strong.

Talk Most of the Production.

But make most of your appeal with the production angle. Tell that entire streets in an Egyptian city have been built with extraordinary fidelity. Use, "Visit the 'Street of the Beggars in Cairo,' where a thousand grimy hands stretch forth for backasheesh 'In the Name of the Prophet,' and where the battered wrecks of what once were men find temporary forgetfulness in the hasheesh dream, a brief oblivion to the heat and smells of the meanest street in all the world."

Tell that every detail of the architecture is copied from photographs with such fidelity that one can almost feel the dreadful summer heat and inhale the foetid odors of the dog-scavenged pavements. Tell that these are among the most realistic settings ever built for any production; fragments of Cairo transplanted to the shores of the Pacific.

Exploit Beautiful Interiors.

Then turn to the interior scenes in the Palace, with its domed reception room where fountains play to cool the sun-baked air, where there are the soft, cool shades of growing things and running waters such as Mohammand described as the paradise which would most appeal to the desert men who were his early followers.

Play up the wonderful Hall of the Peacocks, where entertainments rivaling those of the Arabian Nights were given to satisfy a woman's love of pleasure and a man's vanity in seeming possession. Then tell how into this wonderful scene came the little waif who did not know that his mother was queen of the revels and whose intrusion led to the flight back into the desert where the world forgets the crimes of the haunts of men.

Play it up strong on these interior and exterior sets, together with the tent interiors and the desert scenes. Elaborate on the sandstorm which sweeps down upon the oasis, driving the fine sand through every crevice in the huts, blinding those who seek to flee before its wrath and burying camels in the sandy drifts. From the scenic angle you have all you can desire. Play it up in your newspaper work, throwaways and on the screen.

Hammer on the Spectacular.

Make lavish use of photographs and lithographs. These will sell the play far better than word-pictures. Use cuts in all your advertising copy, and get sets of stills into windows well away from the house. Send out a street wagon with Arab attendants. If you cannot get make-up get rouge and work in some burnt cork.

Old sheets or cheesecloth can be used for costumes, and, if you cannot borrow fezzes from local Shriners for head dresses, paint old derby crowns red. You can use one of your Arabs in the prayer for a lobby display if you desire, with a card announcing that it was the constant praying of the natives which drove the girl to desperation.

Full Direction for "Prayer."

The prayer is done by standing erect, the hands on either side of the face outspread, with the thumbs next the face. Then bow, dropping the hands until they rest upon the knees. Raise, then sink to the knees, placing the hands upon the ground and bending the face so that the nose touches the ground before the forehead does.

Then raise, the hands drawn upon the thighs, and make a second prostration. This may be repeated several times up to nine, rising after each second prostration and beginning all over again. Done slowly and with proper solemnity it will make a good lobby or window stunt.

To be correct the shoes must be removed and the toes of the right foot must not be moved from the spot in which they are found at the commencement of the prayer. The performer should keep mumbling to himself as though reciting the proper petitions. The same stunt can be used on the street wagon.

Hook Up with the Shriners.

If there is a Shrine Club in your town you can possibly interest them. If there is a temple you might arrange for a parade of the patrol.

In the line of lobby decoration you can work in with the furnishing stores for the loan of draperies. Any gay pattern will suffice, and slumber robes, portiers, table covers or dress patterns can be worked in, with fancy lamps and incense burners, though these last are not strictly correct. A credit card and screen slide will probably pay for the loan of the material.

You can work a simple stunt by displaying glass jars of sand as sand from the Sahara "loaned by the producers." Any dry sand will do, a white sand being preferred. At a pinch you can buy a box of bird gravel and get the druggist to pound it up in his mortar to get something different from the local soils.

Anything which serves as an excuse for a window card will help, and you can fall back on the statement that the sand seemed to be real if they crowd you too closely, or come out and ask wherein the sand differs from the Sahara. Play on the stunt and picturesque side and you will gain interest, but scatter pictures all over town to make them realize that it is pictorial.

Details of the Production.

"Saraha" was produced by J. Parker Read, Jr., from a story by C. Gardner Sullivan. Personally supervised and directed by Allan Dwan. Starring Louise Glaum as Mignon.

The Cast.

Mignon.....Louise Glaum
John Stanley.....Matt Moore
Baron Alexis.....Edwin Stevens
The Boy.....Master Pat Moore
Mustapha.....Nigel DeBrullier

Environment: Paris and Cairo of today. The Desert of Sahara.

The Story.

Mignon, a favorite of the Parisian music hall followers, is loved by John Stanley, an American engineer. Finally they wed, and Stanley goes to the Sahara Desert to undertake a great engineering project. His wife seriously objects to accompanying him; she loves the lure of Paris, its gaiety and her sumptuous gowns. On the promise that her husband will give her every advantage his high salary can supply—tents of luxury and the environment of Egyptian enchantment — she finally consents.

In the months that pass, Mignon finds her life in the vast plains of sand more and more unbearable. Baron Alexis, a Russian nobleman of fabulous wealth, comes as a tourist to the desert oasis where the Stanleys live in their extravagantly outfitted tent. Mignon welcomes him as a relief from the monotony of her life, and Alexis covets the beautiful Parisienne. Now comes the news that Stanley must follow his work still deeper into the desert.

Alexis plays upon Mignon's vanity and tortures her with descriptions of the living death she must endure if she follows her husband in his work. He begs her to fly with him to Cairo—to Cario, the City of Enchantment—there to live in luxury simply as his friend. He asks no greater reward than her friendship; to be in her society. And so she submits to her own impulses and goes to Cairo with Alexis.

Stanley, broken-hearted, goes into the desert to forget. He falls a victim to the deadly drug, hasheesh, and keeps his son —the only comfort Mignon has left him— ever by his side. They reach Cairo in Stanley's crazed search for the woman who has wronged him in his mad determination to kill her in revenge.

Meanwhile remorse has fallen upon the faithless wife, and, in her aimless desire for mental relief, she wanders into the lowest quarters of Cairo. She meets her child begging, but does not recognize her own offspring. When Stanley comes to take the coin from the child's hand, Mignon sees her husband beneath the lines of dissipation and despite his greatly changed appearance.

Suddenly she realizes the fullness of her degradation. She goes back to the desert with Stanley and their child to nurse her husband back to sanity, even though she knows that when he comes to recognize her he will kill her. But in the days that follow Stanley's slow recovery, fate so changes all things that there is reconciliation and happiness when the husband comes to his senses.

Thus is told the story of "Sahara," the immensely spectacular and ornate presentation in which Louise Glaum will be the star at the (insert name of theatre and date), when J. Park Read, Jr.'s, creation will be the attraction.

J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, presentation of "Sahara" will be the attraction at the (insert theatre and date), with Louise Glaum the sumptuously gowned star of the occasion. C. Gardner Sullivan's story takes husband and wife from appealing Paris to the Desert of Sahara, and then into enchanting Cairo, picturing woman's frailty, her appalling vanity and final awakening to a proper realization of duty through mother love. The scenes have been built from photographs depicting the locations where they are enacted. There will be exactness of detail to make more impressive the tensely dramatic action that holds the plot keenly interesting to the end.

The story of "Sahara," to be presented by Louise Glaum and a capable supporting company at the (insert name of theatre and date), will develop intense interest through its great human appeal. A deserted husband and wonderful child find themselves in Cairo, where the husband seeks his wife that he may kill her in revenge for having ruthlessly abandoned them in the heart of the desert. Fate works a miracle—the wife is found and again she journeys into the desert with her husband and child to remake the man whose life and mind she had wrecked. Odd as it may appear in these barren vistas, Miss Glaum wears more than thirty beautiful gowns and is more sartorically radient than she has ever been during her screen career.

Capellani Completes "Unknown Dancer."

Actual filming of "The Unknown Dancer," the second of the series of Creighton Hale-June Caprice features to be made by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., has been completed by Director George Archainbaud. Cutting and titling of the picture is now in progress.

The film is adapted from a French stage success, "Le Danseur Inconnu," by Tristram Bernard, which played in Paris for over one year. The new production is a sprightly romance of a young couple, one a girl of affluence and the other an impecunious, light-hearted art student who becomes entangled in the meshes of a matrimonial "fixer." The story embraces an admirable combination of comedy and pathos into which is blended a number of highly interesting dramatic situations.

The cast includes Alfred Hickman, Charles Coleman, Edwards Davis and Katherine Johnson.

FOR EXPLOITING "LOVE'S PRISONER"

Here Are Helps for Picture-Showmen Playing Triangle's Special Presentation, Starring Olive Thomas—Stunt Suggestions, Advertising and Newspaper Publicity

By Epes Winthrop Sargent and Walter K. Hill

TWO angles offer themselves in the exploitation of "Love's Prisoner." This may be handled as a mystery play and stress laid upon the question of the identity of "The Bird," but while this will help the running of the story in that it will keep back the climax, the audience can guess by the end of the third part that Nancy is the mysterious robber, and the natural story is strong enough to hold and even add interest after the disclosure. The story will make the greater hit if the patron is kept in the dark until the actual showing, but the use of the mystery will kill a line of selling talk more valuable than the surprise, so it would be better to expose the plot and sell that.

Open with Teaser Campaign.

Start off with a teaser campaign. Start in with "Who was 'The Bird'?" Then answer that "'The Bird' was the most successful thief in New York. The police called him 'The Bird' because they were certain that he must have wings in order to spirit himself away." "Do you think you could catch 'The Bird?' He fooled some of the cleverest police officials in New York."

In this connection, if you have not worked the "Raffles" stunt within a year you can use it for this. Advertise that the police of New York failed to catch "The Bird." Announce that you want to see if the people in your town are more alert.

Advertise that "The Bird" will be seen on your streets on stated days, and that a pass will be given each person who accosts "The Bird" thus: "You are the Bird, who will be at the blank theatre on Friday and Saturday. Give me the tickets."

New Twist to Old Stunt.

Most persons will be looking for a man. Send out a woman; preferably one looking like Miss Thomas, and at the end of the second or third day announce that no one succeeded in catching her because, like the New York police, they looked for a man. This will give a new twist to a stunt worked often, and will bring a lot of free advertising.

Be careful in all your announcements to refer to "The Bird" and not to use "him" or "her" in speaking of the character. Do this before the general advertising is begun or you will lose the advantage of the mystery and surprise.

Make the announcement of the close of the stunt simultaneously with the first formal advertising for the play, that you can hook them up. Until then do not even mention that "The Bird" appears in an Olive Thomas play, lest they suspect.

Two Cages for Your Bird.

Along the same lines used stuffed or live birds in cages in the lobby or show windows. Letter cards, "'The Bird' is the name of a character and not the name of a play. Watch for announcements." When the full advertising flashes, change the cards to read, "'The Bird' in 'Love's Prisoner' was a bird of prey and steel bars formed her cage."

Along this line, if you are using the idea for a lobby display, use a light, graceful cage until the change; then use a cell. You can make one easily of 1x1 stuff with quarter-inch dowel for the bars. Use dead black paint. Most hardware stores and all wood working mills carry the dowels in three-foot lengths.

As soon as you announce the name of the star, go to it strong. Hold back until you are all ready and then plaster your bill boards, play it up in your newspaper announcements and in front of the house simultaneously. Miss Thomas has a good following and you need only mention her name prominently to get this division of your clientele in.

Play Up Star and Story.

You can tell them with entire safety that this story is as good a production as "Toton." If you appeal to the better class of trade you can say that it is better, for the story is far more logical. You can use this latter fact for an especial appeal. Get after the people who think that motion pictures are not worth while because their literary values are so slight.

Try an appeal somewhat along these lines:

Many people do not go to the motion pictures because the stories so seldom meet their ideas of fiction. In "Love's Prisoner," presenting Olive Thomas, the Broadway favorite from Ziegfeld's Midnight Follies, there is offered not only a splendidly spectacular production, but the story is really worthy the attention of the readers of the best fiction. It is logical, consistent, and, above all things, interesting.

If you do not like the average stories, see this one and form a new judgment. It will be worth your while. It is by E. Magnus Ingleton, who has written a fascinating study of a girl of the slums who married into the English aristocracy and who warred against the law in retaliation of its treatment of her.

Miss Thomas is a delightful artist. See her at her best in a good story well produced. Try it just this once.

Whether you think you can use this item or not, at least bear heavily upon the story in your general advertising. It is well planned and ingenious, with well-timed action moving to a swift climax.

Bear Heavily on the Plot.

Crime plays are still the fashion, in spite of their long run on screen and stage, so make much of this angle. Tell that this is the story of a girl who is the child of a professional criminal who has tried to go straight only to be caught for the crime of another. She tries to obey his parting injunction to go straight herself, but she finds it hard.

Sell Star to the Limit.

She marries an English lord, but he dies without making proper provision for her and his English estate reverts to his male kin, leaving her only with a handsome house and no means of upkeep. Once more the law has barred her path to peace, and she defies the law.

This is a strong theme and can be twisted to many angles. Do not be satisfied merely to tell that Miss Thomas will appear. Interest even her admirers in the play as well. Make them feel that here is one Olive Thomas production they can not afford to miss. Make the others want to see the clever play. Make a one hundred per cent. appeal to your patrons. Try paragraphs such as:

Her father died in jail for another's crime. She and her sisters were reduced to want, and the English law of entail deprived her of her titled husband's fortune. Her father told her to "go straight," but it did not seem to work, so she turned again to outlawry, and through her transgressions she at last found peace.

As a child her father's friends admired her skill as a pickpocket. As the wife of one of England's peers she held her place with dignity, but when hard times came she remembered her old skill and it took the cleverest detective on the New York force to find her out.

She had a beautiful home, but no income, yet she entertained lavishly. Her guests sometimes wondered how she made both ends meet. They never dreamed that she was—well see the play for yourself.

New York's finest could not cage "The Bird." Even when they caught him at work and guarded every entrance, their schemes failed, for "The Bird" flew through the ventilator and escaped. See the thrilling thief chases in "Love's Prisoner." They are great—but the story is even greater.

Suppose you were a detective and found in the woman you loved the super thief you had so vainly sought. Would you make her your prisoner or would love atone for crime? What do you think you would do? See what Jim Garside did in "Love's Prisoner."

Work the Prison Angle.

Adapting an old idea, you can make one or more "cells" for your lobby out of cheap cloth stretched upon a wooden frame and painted to represent stone. Cut a barred window about fifteen inches square with the bottom of the window four feet nine inches from the cell floor, place bars or a grating across and within, hang a three or six sheet for this production.

Place it close to the street line in your lobby and illuminate with electric lights. Letter the front, "'Love's Prisoner,' here (date)." Most persons will stop to look in and the lettering on the door will at least impress the title upon the rest.

You can use smaller cells with one sheets for store windows, setting close to the glass. The vacant house idea in the press sheet is another stunt along the same lines and is good if you can find a proper window. If you have never tried anything of this sort you will be surprised at the attention you will attract even in the cities with anything out of the ordinary.

Cheap and Novel Suggestion.

Another novelty would be the display of Miss Thomas' portraits with "Beware of Pickpockets" in large type and "In Love's Prisoner" in a smaller letter below, so much smaller that they have to draw in close to read the second line. If you make them stop to read you will have several times the effect of a card which may be read in passing, so keep the type small, but make it large enough to show that there is additional lettering.

You can get a window hook-up with a jeweler by heaping in the window various items of jewelry, making a good-looking pile. Build up on a cigar box or block of wood to get the pile as large as possible. Then use a card, "No wonder the police badly wanted 'The Bird,' who thought nothing of a haul like this. See 'Love's Prisoner' for this fascinating story."

The jeweler can make his own displays on the side and get more publicity than from a well-dressed window. The theatre is always more interesting that a jewelry store, and so the theatre hook-up will help him.

Never Overlook the Star.

Through it all keep Miss Thomas' name and face to the fore, but play on the story angle. The name and portrait will sell the fans. You have them landed.

Direct the bulk of your argument toward the others. And do not overlook Joe King and William V. Mong, both of whom have excellent parts. And if you use the teaser campaign be sure to keep "The Bird" to the fore.

Try and get your book stores to make window displays of detective stories from the half-dime novels to Conan Doyle and Anna Katherine Green, then show stills and a lettered card, "Everyone likes a good detective story. See the story of Lady Cleveland and 'The Bird.' It's something new. (House and date.)"

Work as hard as you can on this, for you do not have to fear a back-kick. The morality of the story is standard because it is so well motivated, and even those who object to crime stories on general principles will become interested in the psychological question in this if it is properly presented to them.

The Cast.

Nancy, "The Bird".....Olive Thomas
Jim Garside.....Joe King
Jonathan Twist.....William V. Mong

The Story:

Nancy was designated by her father as "the best little pickpocket in New York." He was a good judge—and proud of his pupil. Despite his determination always to "go straight," the police finally fastened on Nancy's father a crime of which he was innocent and "sent him up the river" for life.

With two little sisters to support, Nancy gave up the struggle and went to live with one of her father's "pals"—Jonathan Twist, who ran a combined watch-tinkering shop and "fence" for stolen goods. Here she found a home, and finally secured a position as demonstrator for merchandise in stores.

With the money she earned Nancy provided a home in the country for her sisters, and happiness came to her through her efforts to do her duty. By a rare chance the beautiful Nancy met an English nobleman, on a visit to America, and was courted and wed by the titled millionaire. Shortly after marriage Lord Cleveland died without making a will. His English estate went to family relatives, but the palatial home in America became Nancy's by law—but she was left with no financial means of maintenance.

Nevertheless the years passed, Nancy kept up her home, servants and expensive equipment without "visible means of support." Meanwhile the activities of a crook called by the police "The Bird" baffled and mystified the authorities. "The Bird" was indeed a bird of passage, and every time it winged its flight jewels and fine plate disappeared. The climax came with a great diamond robbery at Nancy's home on the night of a brilliant reception she was giving to those in high social life.

Enter the Detective.

Jim Garside was detailed to catch "The Bird," clip its wings and land it in a cage less desirable than the "gilded" one of song and story. How Jim succeeded is detailed in exciting chases and encounters, amazing "twists" to speedy proceedings and the final disclosure that "The Bird" was none other than Nancy herself. The law had continued its rulings against her; she harked back to her original training and Jonathan Twist was her "fence," to dispose of the riches she "hauled" in her amazing raids on society.

Love had come into the lives of Garside, the detective, and Nancy, the trophy of his skill and triumph. But the law must be satisfied. And while Nancy languishes in a prison cell to pay her penalty, Garside keeps up her works of charity—for Nancy has robbed the rich to feed the poor.

And when her term is served, happiness comes to Garside and the girl in the fruition of their love at the altar. This is an outline of "Love's Prisoner," the photoplay in which Olive Thomas will appear at the (insert theatre and date).

Among Independent Producers

A VERY successful opening marked the premiere in New England of "Virtuous Men" on Monday, May 19. The S-L production, which stars E. K. Lincoln, opened at Poli's Palace Theatre, New Haven, for an engagement of three days, after what is said to have been the most extensive exploitation campaign the Palace ever gave a film feature. "Virtuous Men" played to 7,800 people during the afternoon and evening of the opening day, and the Poli management immediately decided to book the production for the entire Poli Circuit.

Manager Edwards carried out an unusual advertising campaign in the daily newspapers, using in a week of advance advertising more than 500 inches of space. His ads consisted of teasers of large size, followed by displays. 150 twenty-four-sheets were posted, together with three hundred one-sheets, three hundred half-sheet cards, and three hundred window hangers. The Palace took pains to impress the importance of "Virtuous Men" as a high-class feature, using more than five thousand black and gold four-page folders, which were given away at each show before the presentation.

A rapid fire publicity campaign of stories was carried on in the newspapers. Particular attention was given to the lobby display. The magnificent lobby was festooned with large cut-out letters spelling "Virtuous Men." Beneath were placed oil paintings of E. K. Lincoln and scenes from the production. This art display was arranged in shadow boxes curtained off with velvet, upon which baby spot lights were trained. As a close to the campaign, the Palace management gave a theatre party to the New Haven baseball club at the opening performance, the details of which were announced publicly at the baseball field during the week preceding the showing.

The success of "Virtuous Men" at the Palace in New Haven has been duplicated by the Garden Theatre, of Paterson, New Jersey, and the Majestic Theatre, of Newark, Ohio, where the picture is said to have played to record-breaking business during the past week.

Bernstein Arranges Details for Producing "Confession"

ISIDOR BERNSTEIN, general manager of the National Film Corporation, spent several days in New York recently, making preparation for the forthcoming production of Hal Reid's play, "Confession," which will be offered as a special by the Pioneer Film Corporation.

It is announced that this will be the most ambitious production yet attempted by the National, which made the Tarzan pictures. While the story is a modern one, one of the spectacular scenes is a reproduction of the ancient coliseum in Rome, picturing the martyrdom of the early Christians. Two thousand extras and a number of lions will be used in this scene, while Emperor Nero will be one of the chief characters.

The services of Guilo Novelli, a prominent Italian archiologist and architect have been secured to superintend the construction of this set, and a large plot of ground on the outskirts of Los Angeles leased for its construction.

The story deals with the sacredness of the Roman Catholic confessional, and Henry B. Walthall has the role of a priest whose brother is accused of murder and sentenced to death. Through an exciting series of dramatic situations, the innocent man is finally saved. A noteworthy cast is being selected to support Mr. Walthall.

"The Carter Case" Shown to Pacific Coast Buyers

IN his present trip to the Coast, Harry Grossman, vice-president and general manager of Oliver Films, Inc., is giving trade showings of "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy Serial, in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and expects to close for the Western territory for the serial and complete that other portion of his errand which has to do with the plan of Oliver Films, Inc., to increase its production to a more pretentious scale.

Mr. Grossman is expected to return to New York within ten days when he will begin production on a new serial and complete arrangements for other productions to be made in an additional studio recently leased.

The name of the new serial and its cast will be announced shortly.

Texas Guinan Portrays a Woman of the West

TEXAS GUINAN, now appearing in a series of twenty-six two-reel Western dramas produced and distributed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has had a varied and interesting career, both on the stage and in motion pictures.

Miss Guinan was formerly a featured player at the New York Winder Garden, and on the screen gained stellar honors in the Triangle production, "The Gun Woman," in which she portrayed what has been termed a "female William S. Hart" role.

It is in this type of productions that she is being presented by the Frohman Company, which calls attention to the fact that while photoplay audiences have been regaled with the heroism of the West, in which women have played a minor part, yet it was the woman whose word wielded great power in the building up of that great section of the country, and that it is this dominant feminine factor in the life of the West that is typified by Texas Guinan in her new series of two reelers.

Miss Guinan, in addition to her dramatic ability, is exceptionally quick with a revolver, and can handle a lariat equal to the best of the cowboys, and is also an accomplished horsewoman. However, combined with this characterization of might and brawn is a touch that is truly feminine.

Pioneer Announces Several Sales.

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces the sale of Louisiana and Mississippi rights on "Wives of Men" to the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, and to T. N. Tally, of San Francisco, for his territory. Also rights to "The Still Alarm" for Iowa and Nebraska have been sold to Phil Goldstone, of Omaha, which competes the sale of rights for entire world on this feature production.

Selig in which Napoleon and Sally, two talented monkeys enact the comedy roles. These monkey comedies will be distributed by Bulls Eye Film Corporation on a state rights basis, along with its other holdings, which include the series of Billy West comedies and the series of Gale Henry comedies. Rights to the Napoleon and Sally series for New York City have already been disposed of to the Interstate Films. The remaining territory is still open.

Identity of "Box 42" Arouses Much Interest

WHO is the mysterious "Box 42"? For the past two weeks mysterious advertisements have been appearing in the trade papers requesting the advice of exhibitors and state rights buyers in the matter of selecting a title for a production, which, it is promised, will be "one of the greatest and most timely features ever offered."

This advertising has aroused considerable curiosity, as nothing further has been learned about it. No information as to the exact nature of the production appears in these advertisements, but from indications, the picture will probably be released as a State Rights special. The nature of the titles suggested, moreover, makes it appear to be a problem play, along the lines of those which have been successful recently.

Chapter Six Is One of Best Episodes of "Carter Case"

EPISODE No. 6, "The Wireless Detector," of Oliver Films serial, "The Carter Case," featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, opens with Anita (Margaret Marsh) being carried off, bound and gagged in a motor ambulance and Craig Kennedy (Herbert Rawlinson) in immediate danger of death from a bomb that has been placed by Avion, the mysterious aviator.

Effecting an extraordinary escape, Kennedy learns of the plight of Anita, who communicates with him by means of the wireless telephone he has given her. She is detained in a haunted house by the emissaries of Avion. Kennedy finds the place and rescues Anita after a sharp battle.

This installment of "The Carter Case" is said to combine features of utmost scientific interest with thrilling dramatic situations in which Craig Kennedy is seen at his best. The episode carries forward the action swiftly into deepening mystery and thrilling suspense.

The title for the Seventh Episode is "The Nervagraph," and that of the succeeding episode is "The Silent Shot."

Howse Is General Manager of Harma Productions, Inc.

HARRY MAZE JENKS, who recently returned to Europe on the Acquitania, expressed himself before sailing, as being gratified with the result of his visit to this country and the way in which "A Romany Lass" and his other productions have been received.

Mr. Jenks announces that his business in this country will be carried on under the name of Harma Productions, Inc., and Henry Howse has been appointed general manager. Offices have been secured at 46 West Twenty-fourth street, and this company will deal with foreign exporters for the distribution of their products.

Arrangements are being made for enlarging the organization of this company in Europe by the engagement of well-known American stars and securing of one or more American producers, who, it is announced, will proceed to Europe as early as possible.

Pioneer Films Going Big in Iowa and Nebraska

S. ARONOWITZ, general manager of Quality Attractions, Des Moines, reports that "Virtuous Sinners," the Pioneer production, will have its premiere for that territory at the Des Moines Casino Theatre early in June, and that this picture, as well as "The Boomerang," another production being distributed by Pioneer Film Corporation, is going strong with exhibitors in Iowa and Nebraska.

A special press showing of "Virtuous Sinners" was held in Des Moines recently, and is announced as having received very favorable notices.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that its previous report regarding the sale of Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee rights to the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns to another concern is in error, as these productions have been secured by the Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tennessee, of which W. E. Drummond is the president.

Prison Officials to Show "Virtuous Men" to Inmates

BECAUSE of its impressive title and the virile American story which it tells, "Virtuous Men" has been selected by the entertainment committee of Sing Sing and Auburn Prisons (New York), for special showings to the inmates.

The S-L production, which stars E. K. Lincoln, contains all the elements required for showings of this nature. Its absence of objectionable features, together with the story of regeneration of a "down-and-outer" which "Virtuous Men" enfolds is in keeping with the ideas promulgated by the various prison authorities in the welfare work which they carry on through means of speeches, pamphlets and screen entertainment.

As a special feature of these showings, it has been arranged for E. K. Lincoln to appear with the film at the different institutions, at which time he will make a short speech.

Pioneer During the Summer Will Release Six Specials

CONTRARY to the practice prevalent among some motion picture companies of withholding special productions until autumn, the Pioneer Film Corporation will, during the coming months of warm weather issue six big features.

These include "The Boomerang," with Henry B. Walthall; "Virtuous Sinners," with Wanda Hawley; "The Sins of the Children," and "The Lady of the Dugout," and others to be announced later.

The Pioneer officials anticipate that this announcement will be welcome news to exhibitors as it will assist them in solving the problem of securing suitable attractions during the summer months.

Consolidated Buys Rights on Gale Henrys.

Consolidated Film Corporation, with main offices in San Francisco, and branches in Los Angeles and Seattle, have just purchased the new Gale Henry comedies for its territory in California, and will commence releasing same the early part of May. This, in addition to the Bulls Eye comedies, gives the Consolidated a two-reel comedy release each week.

"Reclaimed" Booking Fast.

Elk Photoplays, Inc., reports it has closed contracts for "Reclaimed" with B. F. Keith, Loew, Cashin Enterprises, M. & S. Circuit, Sidney Cohn, L. Houston, and many others.

Bulls Eye Fast Closing Out Territory.

The Standard Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, has taken the Billy West and Gale Henry comedies for its territory. This leaves the New Orleans territory alone to be sold.

Poli's Palace, New Haven, Evidently Was Strong in the Belief That Virtue Is Its Own Box Office Reward.
So it played up the "Virtuous" part of the title of "Virtuous Men" in its attractive lobby display for the S-L feature with E. K. Lincoln.

Sure! Our Hands Are Up.
Texas Guinan in Frohman's Western two-reelers gets across the local color.

Jerry Abrams Will Tour Country for "Boomerang"

W. H. HOFFMAN, General Manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, states that on account of the very large number of inquiries from buyers resulting from its advertising campaign on "The Boomerang," arrangements have been made to start Jerry Abrams on tour as soon as prints can be secured.

Several territories have already been sold on this production, including Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana rights which were purchased by F. D. Tallman, of Lewiston, Montana, who intends to tour his territory with "The Boomerang" as a road show.

It is also announced that great interest is being manifested in this production by vaudeville circuits which contemplate using it as a summer attraction.

Three More Unique Aids Issued on "Virtuous Men"

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin have added three novel exploitation aids to the comprehensive list of advertising supplies prepared to assist the state rights buyer in booking "Virtuous Men." To give added strength to the announcement trailer used in place of slides, the S-L producers have had motion pictures taken of the crowds which have attended the opening performance of "Virtuous Men" in the various cities.

Prints of these will be joined to the announcement trailer, to show exhibitors who contemplate booking the picture, its drawing power. In its completed form, this trailer is designed to enable the state rights buyer to present to exhibitors the title, the star, director, flashes of the big scenes and the box office lines which greet the production at its various openings.

Another advertising aid has been prepared in the shape of a blotter which carries on its reverse side a reproduction of the striking twenty-four sheet used to advertise this picture. The title of the picture, together with the name of the star, is carried on this reproduction, together with space for the exhibitor to imprint the name of his theatre and his playing dates.

As a third addition to the exploitation service, albums of 8x10 still pictures have been made up for the use of salesmen. The still pictures consist of thirty-six prints, all of which have been laid out in continuity, so that the salesman may tell the story of the production by going over the stills with the exhibitor.

Dirigible "C-5" Pictured in Gaumont News Reel

THE current issue of the Gaumont Graphic shows the starting of the naval dirigible, C-5, better known as a "Blimp," from Montauk Point, on its non-stop trip to St. John's. Splendid views of these balloon type of American flying craft are shown.

Other subjects include the visit of Sir Baden Powell, hero of the Boer War, and leader of the Boy Scouts of the World, to the United States; the Victory Jubilee of 17,000 Elks in the first B. P. O. E. pageant since the beginning of the war; the annual convention of the Spanish-American War veterans, where they are entertained by veterans of the Civil War; pictures showing Jazzmaster Jim Europe, the famous exponent of syncopated music, and the drummer who, it is claimed, murdered him, together with views of Lieut. Europe's funeral, where he was accorded military honors.

Another subject in this issue shows a mimic sea battle, in which the battleship "Oregon" shows how our Navy took care of the German U-boats; the care of the teeth of school children, and Will Roger's witty sayings.

In the current issue of the Gaumont News, the reopening of the Zeebrugge Canal, in Belgium, is shown and other subjects show the Kentucky "Derby" at Churchill Downs; the annual regatta of the California, Washington and Stanford University boat crews; the opening of the yachting season, and the welcome, in many towns, of our heroes who have returned from across the seas.

Heavy Bookings Reported on Craig Kennedy Serial

EXCHANGES throughout the entire country, with the exception of the Pacific Coast, are now releasing "The Carter Case" featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh, rights to eastern Missouri having recently been sold to the Arrow Film Corporation which secured five first-run houses in St. Louis as an initial booking.

Pioneer Film Corporation, New York, which made the initial release, states this serial is meeting with remarkable success, and the ninth episode is being shown in a large number of New York houses, while the Arrow Film Corporation of Philadelphia reports great popularity with exhibitors and the public in its territory for this chapter-film.

Sidney B. Lust has inaugurated an extensive publicity campaign and booked "The Carter Case" in leading Baltimore and Washington theatres, as well as in prominent houses throughout Virginia, North Carolina and Delaware. Samuel Grand advises that his sales prices in New England have created a new record for episode pictures in that territory, and many houses are presenting "The Carter Case" which have not hitherto shown serials.

I. Oliver, president of Oliver Films, states enthusiastic reports are being received from exchanges, including the Day Film Corporation, of Pittsburgh, Mid-West Distributing Company, of Milwaukee, and Criterior Film Service, Atlanta. Export and Import Film Company report that foreign bookings have been made at a rapid rate, and Regal Films, Ltd., report great success with the serial in Canada, which is being shown in high-class houses throughout the Dominion.

Sales Announced by Arrow on Several Productions

THE Arrow Film Corporation has had an unusually busy week and reports many sales on its features. "The Masked Rider" serial featuring Ruth Stonehouse, Paul Panzer and Harry Myers has been disposed of for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee to the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, Atlanta; for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia to Liberty Film Exchange, Washington; for northern New Jersey to Frank Gersten, Inc., New York; for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New York to K. Arrow Photo-Plays Company, Denver, have purchased "The Woman's Law," starring Florence Reed, and "The Perfect Model," starring Audrey Munson, for its territory, and Fontenelle Feature Film Company, Omaha, has purchased for Iowa and Nebraska "The Sunset Princess," starring Marjorie Daw, and the twelve Anna Little two-reel reissues.

L. A. Sheridan Film Exchange, of Des Moines, Iowa, have purchased "Miss Arizona" for Iowa and Nebraska, and Gertrude Bondhill, star of this picture, has purchased this picture for Utah. Miss Bondhill is now playing in stock in Salt Lake, and will book this picture throughout the state of Utah. Great Eastern Film Company have purchased "The Mysterious Mr. Browning."

Third Dooley Two-Reeler Now Nearing Completion

CLARENCE L. BACH, president of the Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, Inc., announces that the third of the series will be completed within a few days. In addition to the star the cast of this comedy includes Martha Mansfield, Tom Blake, Tom Cameron, Billie Ruge, Edna Murphy, Tiny Douglas and the twenty beautiful girls.

Wm. V. "Pop" Hart, business manager, is elated after having seen the first two completed pictures.

"Because of Johnny Dooley's acrobatic ability," says Mr. Hart, "I was prepared to see some real slapstick 'nut' comedy, but to my surprise I witnessed two of the highest class, clean cut comedies I've ever seen. The action is fast and the stories are without a single salacious thought."

This is further evidenced by President Bach, who is so sure of the calibre of his product that instead of showing one or two subjects, he will not release or show to the trade until he has at least four completed.

Recruit Stage Players for Capellani's "The Gutter"

IN assembling the cast to support Dolores Cassinelli in "The Gutter," Director Albert Capellani has engaged a number of Stage favorites. The most prominent of the players recruited are Vincent Serrano, one of the stars of "Our Pleasant Sins," a current Broadway stage success; Marie Chambers, who has for the past year been touring the country as Lou Tellegen's leading woman in "Blind Youth," and Helen Lowell, who has been appearing with conspicuous success in "Cappy Ricks," which recently concluded a successful Broadway run.

Among the other players are May Hopkins, a popular musical-comedy satellite; DeSacia Saville, who has been a featured member of Oliver Morosco's Los Angeles stock company, and Albert Roccardi, whose most notable stage achievement was his impersonation of the Jap in "Officer 666." Miss Cassinelli's supporting company, which also includes Franklyn Farnum, is one of exceptional strength and balance.

Vincent Serrano portrays the leading masculine role opposite Miss Cassinelli. Marie Chambers has been entrusted with a role second in importance only to that played by Miss Cassinelli. Helen Lowell portrays a role of considerable emotional depth, and makes her first appearance in motion pictures in this production.

Enid Bennett in Role of Reporter.

Enid Bennett, whose new Paramount picture, "The Haunted Bedroom," is scheduled for release May 25, has the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, New York, as the chief locale of her next picture, which she is about to start at the Thomas H. Ince Studio. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and it has to do, it is said, with real, red-blooded, human people. Fred Niblo will direct, and Niles Welch and Lloyd Hughes will have the two leading masculine roles.

Miss Bennett essays the role of a newspaper reporter. The story opens in a New York newspaper office, and one of the most elaborate sets ever built at the Ince Studio was constructed for this.

Lloyd Hughes has the leading supporting role, and others in the cast are Dorcas Matthews, Jack Nelson, William Conklin, Joe Anthony, Harry Archer and Otto Hoffman.

Attractive Press Book on "New Moon."

An artistic and serviceable press book has just been put out by the Select publicity department on its company's most recent Norma Talmadge picture, "The New Moon."

The helps to the exhibitor includes, besides a list of the advertising material obtainable at the various exchanges such as cuts, posters, mats, lobby display photographs, lantern slides and electrotypes, many specimen advertisements, pages of interesting items for local newspapers, advertising helps and suggestions for big "stunts" and a special story on "The Versatility of Norma Talmadge" illustrated with photographs of the star in Chinese, Indian, English, American and Russian character parts.

Devises Attractive Lobby Display for American Film

A RECENT American release starring Margarita Fisher, "Put Up Your Hands" was put over by the Strand Theatre, of Denver, by the use of an attractive lobby stunt.

The star is featured as an ultra-athletic society girl who introduces a boxing match as an innovation at one of her aunt's fashionable tea parties, and at which she appears in regulation boxing togs, giving a sparring exhibition with "Bull" Montana, her instructor. They arranged the lobby to look as much like a bona-fide prizefighting ring as possible. There was a roped-off square, and about twenty pairs of boxing gloves hung on the walls. The only stills displayed were those showing the heroine in captivating "B. V. D.'s" forcing her ring partner to take the count.

It was a novel display that provoked curiosity and interest. The Strand reports having done big business on this subject.

Nazimova Film Breaking Records.

The day of the month run is at hand in motion pictures, according to exhibitors and exchangemen who have been watching the attendance records established by theatres throughout the country showing Nazimova's "The Red Lantern."

Their prediction is based on the fact that in many cities where it has been showing for two weeks crowds have been greater in the last week. This has been the experience with the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, the Rialto in Des Moines, the Plaza in San Diego, the Ziegfeld and Boston in Chicago and the Liberty in Kansas City.

"Happiness a La Mode" Is Next Constance Talmadge

HAPPINESS A LA MODE" is announced as the title of Constance Talmadge's next Select picture, in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick. Miss Talmadge has already completed her part of the production, and the finishing touches are being added before the original print is shipped to New York. According to present arrangements, "Happiness a la Mode" will be released as a June attraction.

The story concerns the marriage trials and tribulations of Barbara Townsend, played by Constance Talmadge, and her husband, Richard Townsend, played by Harrison Ford. The couple are young and attractive and happily married, but a few tiny clouds which have gathered on the matrimonial sky evolve into dangerous-looking thunderheads.

The story is by Edwina Levin, and in its original form it appeared in the January issue of a popular monthly magazine. Alice Eyton wrote the screen version of it, and the direction was in the hands of Walter Edwards.

In addition to Miss Talmadge and Mr. Ford the cast includes Betty Schade, Myrtle Richelle, Paul Weigle, Thomas D. Persse and A. Fremont.

Dorothy Gish's Latest a Railroad Comedy.

Railroad fiction, stories about railroad people and railroad adventure have been among America's most popular types of light reading for years. Some of the best serials that have ever been produced have been written on railroad subjects, but Dorothy Gish's new Paramount production, "I'll Get Him Yet," which is released May 25, is the first big feature picture founded on this universal theme to be released in a long time.

But the picture is far from the typical railroad thriller. On the contrary, it is a farce comedy written by Harry Carr and directed by Elmer Clifton, and Dorothy Gish has the comedy role of the president of a road who, operating under an alias, finds herself facing all sorts of embarrassing situations.

Richard Barthelmess plays the reporter, George Fawcett is Susy's father and Ralph Graves is the reporter's employer, while Edward Peil and Porter Strong are also seen in important roles.

Strong Cast for "Thin Ice."

Vitagraph's last release for May will be "Thin Ice," a play by Corporal Shannon Fife, which stars Corinne Griffith. "Thin Ice" is the story of the floatation of spurious mining stock and its far-reaching effect on the lives of one of the families whose head invested their all in these gilded but worthless securities.

The cast includes Charles Kent, L. Rogers Lytton, Eulalie Jensen, Jack McLean and others.

The production is the second one to be directed by Tom Mills, Miss Griffith's new director, and shows a gratifying sense of the psychological requirements of the plot. It reaches the screen on the twenty-sixth of this month.

Sidelights and Reflections

THIS is Gish week in New York with Lillian at the head of the cast in the Griffith masterpiece, "Broken Blossoms," and Dorothy hanging up a new record for herself as the star of her latest Paramount production, "I'll Get Him Yet," at the Rivoli. Mrs. Gish, the mother of these exceptionally talented girls, is here with her elder daughter, and both attended the Griffith picture premiere at the George M. Cohan Theatre, Tuesday night, May 13. Sunday they both went to the Rivoli and saw the younger of the Gish sisters in her greatest success.

Another spectator at the same theatre who had a peculiar interest in "I'll Get Him Yet" was the young man the young lady gets. Richard Barthelmess plays the hero in Miss Dorothy's picture. He also created the part of the Chinese poet in "Broken Blossoms," and came on from California for the opening night here. It is hardly necessary to state that the two roles are totally unlike and are a fine indication of his versatility.

There probably is nothing that the exhibitor appreciates more than being supplied with helps to putting on his program. The more thorough these helps are the greater their welcome. Carefully worked out light effects accompanying a picture must naturally be an important aid. Could anything be more instructive than the following lines clipped from a recent number of a trade journal:

"There are also instructions for the lighting effects, and these are very simple, and it is suggested to the individual exhibitor that he can probably best work out those most fitted to his house."

Very simple, indeed!

An amusing sidelight on "Broken Blossoms" is the number of persons who are positive that the Limehouse District exteriors were taken in London while Director Griffith was abroad making scenes for "Hearts of the World." The dock scene is remarkably lifelike, and one wise spectator when it was first shown on the opening night, informed his companion it was the real thing and had been borrowed from a news reel or made in London for the picture. Just then Lillian Gish was seen to enter in the distance and walk slowly down the dock. The spectator was still in doubt: Lillian Gish was in London at the time and might have been taken in the scene. He held to this theory until Richard Barthelmess and Donald Crisp and other members of the cast who were not in London at the time walked along the same dock. He was then forced to conclude that the scene was made in Los Angeles.

"Auction of Souls"

Tremendous Historical Picture of Armenia's Heartbreak Released by First National.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

NOTHING could be more affecting than this vivid picture of the greatest tragedy of the world. One would think the scenes in "Auction of Souls" had been pictured in Armenia at the time of the persecution of this Christian people. They are given the chance to declare for Mohammed, but are true to Christ, and from this comes their martyrdom, burnings, starvation, outrage beyond description and torture beyond the power of the mind to realize.

The picture is too big and too affecting for words to tell much of the impression it makes on the spectator. It is so reverently done and so wonderfully true to humanity in all that it shows, that no doubt it will be kept for years and handed down as a historical manuscript in picture. It couldn't be done more worthily or be made to give a clearer impression of actuality. Each of the great cast of players who took part in it seems to have lost him or herself in the story; they seem more like participants than like actors. It is a reverently told story of magnificent Christian heroism, and of Turkish horrors beyond understanding.

The Story.

A wealthy Christian Armenian family is taken as the center around which the story is pictured. But the fate of the two grown girls of this family and of their parents melts into the big tragedy. They are seen as merely types suffering what every one in Armenia suffered when thousands and thousands died. Aurora Mardiganian, an Armenian girl, who enacts again the heroine's role in the film, went through the same experiences before she managed to escape into Russia and coming to America, has helped to make them vivid for all to see. Around this family and all the Armenians we see the storm of persecution gather, in spite of the strongest protests by Ambassador Morganthau, at Constantinople. We see the orders sent out, the troops begin the work and then the horrible storm breaks with a fury and a devastation that one must see in this vivid form really to understand.

Pressure is brought on the Armenian father to give his daughter, Aurora, to the Pasha. By doing it he can save his whole family and knows that the beautiful girl will suffer worse by his refusal. He is a Christian and thinks more of the girl's soul than of her safety. He resolutely refuses. He and his son are soon killed. The women are not so fortunate. The mother especially lives to see things that break her heart every day. Her bodily thirst and suffering are nothing, and it is a long road she travels out into the desert with her people before she finally gets rest in death.

Day by day, babies are flung against walls or rocks, young girls are tossed in the air to fall on sharp stakes and, nightly, the young women are the prey of the Kurds. The band of thousands that started out from Harpout dwindles till it is a few poor wretches, and this band is brought in contact every now and then with other bands, and word is passed that they too had been made up of thousands and now are merely scores.

There is a story running through the film. The girl's lover, a herdsman, is following, and at the critical times manages to get them out of every great danger. This relieves the tension and makes the picture bearable. Praise is inadequate for this work. It shows great art in its picturization as well as truth and deep reverence for humanity.

Comedy Predominates in Metro's June Releases

THE announcement from the Metro studios of that producing firm's releases for the month of June show light, clean humor predominating. All four of the program offerings are in a bright, clever comedy vein.

The settings are refreshing, including scenes from the rolling surf of the California beaches, the highest and coolest peaks of the Rockies, the shaded dells of the wood valleys and the breezes of the roof gardens.

The first of the four June releases features May Allison in a racy story scheduled for June 2 describing the trials and tribulations of a prima donna imported by a progressive young theatrical promoter. "Almost Married" is the title of the comedy-drama, and it is a screen adaptation of E. V. Durling's story written especially for Miss Allison by the erstwhile New York reporter. June Mathis and Luther A. Reed, of the Metro staff, converted the vehicle to the screen, and Charles Swickard directed. The cast includes Frank Currier, Walter I. Percival, Harry Rattenbury, James Warton, James and Hugh Fay.

On June 9, under the title of "Patricia," Metro will release the first venture of a new combination of writers in the persons of Anne and Alice Duff. "Patricia" was originally submitted to Metro in the form of a three-act play, the title role of which so fitted Viola Dana that it was purchased and converted into a screen vehicle for the star. Henry Otto is the director.

The title of Emmy Wehlen's release for June 16 has a vital interest for everyone. It is the story of the newly rich called "The Family Tree," depicting the efforts of a contractor's family to secure recognition on a social plane with the established aristocratic families of their town.

"The Family Tree" is an original story by E. Forst. It was scenarioized by Finis Fox, of the Metro staff, and was directed by Herbert Blache. The supporting cast includes Jack Mulhall, Charles Mailes, Mollie McConnell, William V. Mong, Betty Peterson, Geard Grassby and John Steppling.

To conclude the June program releases, Metro has reserved as a finale for this series of all-star features a picture which is bound to prove one of the most pleasing contributions to the season's screen entertainment. It is a circus story done in circus style. The title of the production is "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," and features Bert Lytell. John Ince is the director.

Eileen Percy is Mr. Lytell's leading woman. The others in the cast are Joseph Kilgour, Jules Hanft, J. Carrol, Fred Heck and Bull Montana.

Big Advance Bookings on New Bessie Love Picture

AN index to the growing popularity of Bessie Love is contained in the flood of advance bookings of "The Little Boss" already scheduled. This latest play on the Love schedule has an investiture entirely different from any previous Love productions. The play is scened to the greater extent among the redwoods of California, most of the action transpiring in a lumber camp and the adjacent woods.

According to word from the coast, a feature of the picture and a distinct novelty in types will be the inclusion of the rough-and-ready men known as lumberjacks.

The production is being directed by David Smith, and brings forward another prepossessing juvenile lead in support of Miss Love. His name is Wallace MacDonald, and he was once before in the service of Vitagraph.

Will Rogers Ready for Culver City.

Will Rogers, of Ziegfeld Follies fame, will leave New York in a few weeks to work for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in a series of pictures that will give the Broadway lariat thrower a chance to register his adaptness at Western stunts, as well as at coining quips and gags to put the audience in a good humor. The pictures are being arranged so that the titles will be samples of Roger's humor.

Though loath to leave the legitimate stage, Rogers looks forward with zest to posing before the camera. "It's sorta like the old days," says Rogers, "because I can throw a rope without having a crowd out in front waiting to see me miss. You have to hand it to the movies for that. If you don't do a thing right the first time the director will make you do it again, and nobody will be wise to the fact that you gummed up the job several times before you put it over."

Much Activity at Eastern Studios of Famous Players

UNDER the direction of R. William Neill, Catherine Calvert is nearing the completion of her picture, "The Career of Katherine Bush," at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is the photoplay adaptation of Elinor Glyn's novel of the same name, the scenario having been written by Catherine Stuart.

Exacting discrimination has been exercised in the selection of the cast. In casting the production Studio Manager Naulty and Director Neill have taken the utmost pains. After much consideration, John Goldsworthy was engaged to play the leading male role in Miss Calvert's support, that of Lord Algernon Fitz-Rufus. Mr. Goldsworthy, a graduate of the English stage, is one of the best known leading juveniles on the stage or screen.

Other members are Craufurd Kent, who plays Lord Gerard Strobridge; Mathilda Brundage, who plays Lady Garribardine; Helen Montrose, Ann Dearing, Augusta Anderson, Claire Whitney, Norah Reed, Albert Hackett, Earl Lockwood, Walter Smith, Robert Minot, Edith Pierce, Allen Simpson and Fred Burton. Miss Reed, by the way, is Mr. Naulty's casting secretary, and is said to give a humorous characterization as a slavey.

Billie Burke has a good start in her new Paramount picture adapted from the stage play, "Billeted." The picture is being produced under the direction of John S. Robertson. Several days were occupied in making interiors in the New York studio, and later the company was taken out to Glen Cove, L. I., where exteriors were taken.

Irene Castle's special production of Robert W. Chambers' "The Firing Line" is nearly completed under the direction of Charles Maigne. Following Mrs. Castle's return from Miami, Fla., where three weeks were spent in making exteriors, the interior scenes were filmed at the Fort Lee studio. Work was rushed on the production, and the star and her company were held at the studio far into the night on several occasions.

Use Diamonds in Making the Simplex Projectors

THE diamond plays a very important part in the building of the Simplex projector. In the large grinding department of the Simplex factory are located ten up-to-date grinders, upon which are ground to a mirror finish and to the thousandth fraction of an inch the important working parts and bearings of the Simplex.

One of the features of these grinders is the magnetic table upon which are laid the parts to be ground. Rather than depend upon the operator placing a part on the grinding table in an incorrect position and in order to facilitate the work these tables are equipped with magnetic current. The piece of work to be ground is placed firmly upon this table, the switch thrown in, and instantly the article to be ground is rigidly held to the polished surface of the table and the grinder is set in motion, the table operating forward and back beneath the emery wheel.

And here is where the diamond plays its part. In order to keep the emery wheel perfectly true both as regards to circumference and surface facing, it is necessary to smooth them off or "trim" them. There are various ways of accomplishing this end, but the best is that in which a good-sized diamond is securely fastened to a short-stemmed pipe fitted on to a steel bar. This diamond is pressed against the swiftly revolving wheel and slowly rubbed across the face, producing an even positive grinding surface.

"I'll Get Him Yet"

Dorothy Gish Is More Amusing Than Ever in Bright Farce Released by Paramount.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE isn't any two ways about it! Dorothy Gish is in a class by herself. She is the female Charlie Chaplin of the screen—Chaplin of the later manner—of the refinement of method, but the old sureness of touch as exemplified in "Shoulder Arms." The younger of the Gish girls confirms this assertion by her acting in "I'll Get Him Yet," a somewhat different picture made from a story by Harry Carr, editorial writer on the Los Angeles Times. Elmer Clifton, the Paramount director, has caught the spirit of the theme, which is pure farce, and the action proceeds in a series of sharp and deliciously humorous incidents supported by witty subtitles. Not one of the situations ever really happened, but the author's invention is clever enough to make that fact of little moment.

"I'll Get Him Yet" starts off on a new track and runs along smoothly with a lot of fresh ideas in the tender, but not enough to carry it to the end of its route. Susy Faraday Jones is the daughter of a frightfully rich old chap, who gives his offspring an interurban trolley line just to keep her out of mischief. She becomes general manager of the road and has great difficulty in keeping all of her male friends, except the man she wants, from proposing to her. She starts out on his trail and never lets up until she has the right chap's name on a marriage certificate on the line above hers.

This is accomplished after Susy has promised not to touch any of her father's money but live on her husband's salary—she already has several millions of her own. The material up to the point where three of her old suitors invade her home and she is obliged to hide them from her terribly jealous husband is surprising novel. It then becomes necessary to employ the familiar devices of the usual French farce. As each suitor appears he is popped into a closet or hidden under the sofa. The always laughable chasing in and out of doors follows. It is all exceedingly well done, however, and precious few spectators are going to laugh any the less heartily on account of these ancient devices.

Played as "straight" comedy the picture would reveal many amusing features, but it is the rapidly and thoroughly developed gift for farce-acting possessed by Dorothy Gish that makes the entire performance an unbroken string of spontaneous laughs. Every incident of which she is a part is tricked out and adorned by bits of byplay that are so quickly and so accurately done they rival the best efforts of the masters of pantomime. The art of knowing just how far to go in everything connected with her class of acting is shown to perfection by Dorothy Gish.

Of the supporting cast Richard Barthelmess and George Fawcett are the most useful members. As Scoop McCreedy, the reporter who marries the heiress, the first named understands the seriousness of good farce acting, and plays his part in the proper key. George Fawcett's Bradford Jones is a piece of fine character work. Ralph Graves, Edward Peil and Porter Strong are a capable trio. Susy Jones is the only female character in the story.

to-do suitors and sets her heart on the man who refuses her because her father owns so many railroads and other money making pieces of property. Scoop McCreedy is a returned hero from France, who hadn't thought much about a rich father-in-law until he went to ask "Skinflint" Jones for his daughter's hand. The old man's sarcastic remarks about a fortune-hunter coupled with the unpleasant sensation of being thrown out of the house brought Scoop to the frame of mind where his wounded pride and certain physical injuries made him turn his back on matrimony, and dodge Susy every time she came near him.

But Scoop didn't know how much that girl loved him—and having her own way. When her irate parent told her what he had done to Scoop, the lady of the returned hero's choice looked her father defiantly in the eye and spoke these words, "I'll Get Him Yet!" The job was not so easy as it sounded. What man in his right senses would continue to run away from a lovely girl, heiress to millions? Scoop was that man. But Susy finally won him over by promising not to touch one penny of her father's money after they were married.

All might have been well if the Scoop McCreedys hadn't gone to live in a town on a trolley line owned by Mrs. Scoop. While still Miss Jones and bent on earning a reputation for fast time on her road, Scoop's wife had given the order for the non-stop. Her husband and a committee of indignant fellow townsmen forces her to head a delegation to the office of the company and demand the order be changed. Two of the head officials, both old suitors of Susy's, are badly mixed up by this affair, but their boss makes them grasp that her order is to stand, without betraying herself to her husband. The two officials and her private lawyer come to the McCreedy home to see Susy on business. Scoop, now the editor of a local paper, is jealous of his wife and suspicious of all her male callers. As the different men arrive she hides them, fearing the return of her husband. He gets back in time to give the three old suitors a scare of large proportions, and to learn that Susy is cursed with three or four millions. After considerable pleading on her part, Scoop concludes to forgive her for being the owner of great wealth and the heiress to a great deal more of the same.

Hall Adds "The Other Man's Wife" to His Specials

"THE OTHER MAN'S WIFE," the most recent addition to Frank G. Hall's list of special releases on the Independent Sales Corporation's program, will be placed in the Film Clearing House exchanges this week and offered to exhibitors as one of the strongest dramatic offerings of Mr. Hall's current releases. It was produced by Warner Brothers under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, and presents in the principal roles Ellen Cassidy, Stuart Holmes, Ned Hay, Olive Trevor, Halbert Brown, Mrs. Garrison, Lesley Casey, Danny Sullivan, Regina Quinn, Laura Newman, Georgia Jessel and Evelyn Brent.

In this production, Mr. Hall believes that he has a picture that will appeal to all classes, young and old. It has been given an elaborate production, and in the cast is contained the names of some of the screen's best known players. The story is based on the unhappiness that comes with a wife's love of pleasure and her neglect of her children. It presents as its principal characters a man and wife who have all that the world can offer excepting happiness, because the wife and mother sees in the world of social butterflies more of interest to her than in her home and children. The other man enters her life, her husband is called away, and it is then that she realizes what she has given up for everything that is false. In the presentment of this story the author, Mary Murillo, has created the drama in all its strength and appeal, and Mr. Hall states that it is one of the strongest dramatic features he has yet given to the public.

New Photographic Effects Shown in "Fear Woman"

THE "long shots" in Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn picture, "The Fear Woman," are the result of a new discovery in motion photography. Edward Gheller, of the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, has discovered a way to eliminate the glare which settles immediately in front of the camera when the lens is focused for a distance shot. The new method is especially helpful in photography through a window, where a glass adds to the chances of a blur. To overcome this Mr. Gheller has experimented by greatly increasing the light behind the camera, and so softening the effect directly in front of it. In consequence "long shots" along roads and through doors and windows have been visibly clarified. In taking close-ups, Mr. Gheller has reversed the process, and has developed a new lens trick whereby he achieves unusual brilliancy on any part of the screen he desires.

All these effects are artistically shown in Miss Frederick's new picture, which was written for her by Izola Forrester and directed by John A. Barry. It is a five-part story, and deals with a beautiful young woman's fear lest her father's weaknesses be transmitted through her to generations to come. Her fear amounts to an obsession, and the young woman breaks her engagement, ignorant of the fact that a habit, no matter how strong, cannot be transmitted through marriage.

Black Hills Showmen Hear Merits of "Westerners"

THE members of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League, one of the largest showmen's organizations in the West, were regaled with stories of Stewart Edward White's Black Hills drama, "The Westerners," the Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors production, at their annual gathering in Deadwood, S. D., recently, by H. O. Bartels, Denver representative of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributor of the special.

After detailing the merits of the picture and explaining that Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Graham Pettie, Wilfred Lucas and Mary Jane Irving never before had roles so commensurate with their ability, Mr. Bartels read a letter from the author to the Dakota exhibitors, declaring that never had he been so enthusiastic over anything as he was after a private showing of "The Westerners," including that in every sense the picture is the book. As a result, Mr. Bartels returned to Denver with a score or more of important first-run Dakota bookings on the production.

Mitchell Lewis Picture Made Reviewers Shiver

ACCORDING to the official weather bulletin the mercury in the thermometer was flirting around the eighty mark, but a little group of reviewers, consisting of Select officials and censors, sat and shivered in the projection room of Select Pictures' home office. Mitchell Lewis' coming Select picture, "Jacques of the Silver North," was having its initial showing, and the picture of Mitchell Lewis ploughing neck-deep through the snow fields on the slopes of Mount Shasta brought the temperature down.

In the production Mitchell Lewis is seen as Jacques La Rouge, a half-breed Indian with a child-like heart and the ferocity of a wolf. The story is one in which Jacques becomes the friend of an old trader's daughter, and one scene shows him in a long chase with his dog team over the snowbound fields at the base of Mount Shasta. The shot shows the dogs fighting through the swirling drifts, while far in the distance is seen the struggling team which Jacques is pursuing.

It is one of the most vivid pictures of the North that has ever been shown. Many of the shots rival in scenic beauty the most famous works of Northern landscape painting.

Two Serio-Comic Stories Are Purchased by Metro

THE trend of the public demand, from the producers' viewpoint, seems to continue along the lighter dramatic lines, judging from the Metro announcement of the purchase of two more stories.

Both of the stories selected are in a serio-comic vein which pulsates at a mirth-provoking pressure throughout the action of the plots, alternating with a plausible love theme.

The first of these vehicles to be utilized is called "A Favor to a Friend," and is for Emmy Wehlen. The author is none other than Luther A. Reed, of the Metro scenario staff, who is also given credit for adapting his own story to the silent drama.

The new story for Bert Lytell is by John H. Blackwood, a new contributor to the Metro All-Star series, although a well known writer of picture plays.

Mr. Blackwood's story has been adapted to the screen by Finis Fox, of the Metro staff. The title of Lytell's vehicle is "It's Easy to Make Money," and the plot is an interesting account of frenzied finance. Edwin Carewe is to direct the production.

Gives Big Window Display to Novel Based on Film

BY way of co-operation with the current showing of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Salvation Army picture, "Fires of Faith," at the Harris Theatre, Gimbel Brothers have given over one of their large show windows on the Thirty-second street side of their New York store entirely to a display of Charles Kenmore Ulrich's novel, "Fires of Faith," which is based upon the photoplay.

About two hundred and fifty volumes of the work are used in the display, attractively arranged in pyramids and smaller groups. In the centre background is a large colored production of one of the stills from the production showing Catherine Calvert and little Pat Moore. At the extreme left in the foreground is a life-size figure of a woman in the Salvation Army overseas uniform, while at the opposite end of the window is a message of greeting and appreciation from Commander Evangeline Booth.

Madge Evans Starts on "Home Wanted."

World Pictures announces that work was started this week on a new Madge Evans production under the direction of Tefft Johnson. It was written by Lucy Sarver, and bears the title of "Home Wanted." The supporting company includes Jack Drumier and Edward Langford, formerly with World Pictures, and just back from France, being one of the 35 survivors out of a company of 250. Others in the cast are W. T. Carleton, Anna Lehr and Michael J. Hanlon. exceptionally good. The genial, honest, and humorous character of the cowboy is well put over.

The plot idea is not new, since it surrounds a correspondence conducted across the continent by a cowboy, Nick McCredie, and Emily, the "prettiest girl in the school," as the fly leaf of the second-hand book testified, but a number of original turnings are introduced along the plot road. The conclusion, bringing the girl to the West into the thick of real adventure, is particularly bright. The cowboy hero, who had sent the picture of his handsome friend instead of his own, finds the job of "squaring himself" made more difficult by his arrest as a horse thief, on the eventful day of the bride's arrival.

Director Irvin Willat has handled his situations well, while Lila Lee, Monte Blue and L. J. Shumway give natural and colorful interpretations.

The Story.

Nick McCredie, cowboy of the Alamo Ranch, in "Rustling a Bride," discovers Emily's name and address in a second-hand book, the newly acquired property of the school teacher at Coyote Junction. Nick writes to her, sending the picture of his handsome friend, Pen Walton, instead of his own.

Back in the East, Emily's grandmother dies, leaving close-fisted Ezry as the "guardeen." Ezry takes advantage of his "guardeenship" and tries to force Emily to marry him. Hearing of this from Emily, Nick tells her the only thing to do is to come West and be his wife. Emily starts West, but in the meantime, Nick's handsome friend has resumed his horse stealing, and on the eventful day of Emily's arrival "frames" Nick shamefully, implicating him in the rustling. Nick goes to the station as "Andy" to meet Emily, since he must win her approval on his own appearance and not that of Pen Walton.

Walton intercepts the stage, takes Emily to an adobe hut in the desert, but she escapes and rescues Nick from a lynching in the "nick" of time. Emily and Nick are married, as you might suspect.

In a small town you can make this a real feature by arousing speculation as to who will sit in those seats.

"Redhead"

Alice Brady Picture by Select Gives a Slice of Little Old New York.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE spectator who fails to find the new Select picture, "Redhead," five reels, a delightful attraction must be nursing the worst kind of grouch. It is a thoroughly charming picture. Alice Brady plays a real kind of modern New York woman so convincingly that when it is said she is almost perfectly supported by Conrad Nagel, it is giving him high praise.

The play is by Charles Maigne, who also directed it, and is a hit chiefly on account of the humanity of the story, but his skill in picture building so attractively presents the material that there is no slackening of interest. Whatever part of the film is before the spectator he finds the story progressing evenly and inevitably. The character of the woman is the center of interest, but all the characters are real and each contributes by bringing out something of "Redhead's" peculiarities. "Redhead" is lovable, and Alice Brady has scored a big thing in it. It ought to stand for long runs.

"Redhead," in the Select picture by that name, is a cabaret dancer. Matt Thurlow, a rich youth of no special ambition, loves her. She is straight. A crowd of friends are drunk around a table at the cabaret, and "Redhead" sits down with them. Roland Gard, one of the party, is a justice of the peace, and there's a tipsy marriage with the certificate legally made out and witnessed. Next day they wake up and find it done.

Mathew's rich uncle fires him. Matt tells the woman he doesn't love her. He goes to the devil for a while till he is down and out. He gets a job, because he feels it incumbent to support her. They have a little apartment and he gives her his pay envelope, but shows her no affection. He makes good and gets promoted. Her father and mother, pleasant smiling people, come on a visit. He takes pleasure in entertaining them, but after they go, he is the same to his wife as before. He has grown to recognize how much worthwhile she is. Next Alice Brady Picture Is Almost Completed

THE finishing touches are being added to Alice Brady's coming Select picture, "His Bridal Night," in which she is being directed by Kenneth Webb. The story is by Lawrence Irving Rising. Katherine Stuart did the scenario.

During the past week Miss Brady and her company have been at Allenhurst, N. J., working on exteriors on the grounds of Miss Brady's summer home. The studio interiors are practically completed.

In "His Bridal Night," which is a happy farce of matrimonial difficulties, Miss Brady plays the dual role of Vi and Tiny Playfair, although contrary to the accepted interpretation of their name, neither one of the twins play fair. Vi is a heartless little coquette, while Tiny is a quiet and faithful soul. On the night of Vi's wedding to Joe Damoral, Vi confides in Tiny that she is going out for one more little lark with Lent Trevett, but before Vi has an opportunity to meet Lent Tiny impersonates her twin sistent, and Lent thinks he is holding Vi in his arms. Then comes the wedding, and after the wedding a little lover's quarrel. Vi runs off with Lent and Tiny runs off with Joe. Each of the men think they have the right twin, but the big complication is saved for the final reel; and it is well worth waiting for.

Miss Brady is supported by an excellent cast, including Edward Earle, James L. Crane, Daniel Pennell, Daisy Belmore and Mrs. Stuart Robson. Her leading man, Edward Earle, has had a long career in motion pictures, his most recent work being in "For France," "Blind Adventure," "One Thousand Dollars," "Transients in Arcadia" and "Buried Treasure." James L. Crane is a well known actor of the spoken stage who has lately devoted considerable time to the screen. Mrs. Robson is the widow of Stuart Robson, the famous star.

Pep and Prohibition in Metro's "Full of Pep"

ON May 26 Metro is releasing a breezy romantic tale called "Full of Pep," with Hale Hamilton as its star.

"Full of Pep" is descriptive of the story by Robert F. Hill, in which the author has painted a colorful picture of a hero who fights his way through great odds by the sheer force of either his personality or his wits. It is a story replete with excitement, pep, snap, punch and smash, and throughout the picture is interwoven a romantic love theme.

Santa Dinero, a little, sleepy Latin republic, is just about to succumb to the far-reaching tenacles of the monster Prohibition. The Octupus is slowly encircling the tiny country in its coils when the dynamic Jimmy Baxter (Hale Hamilton) arrives with two strong arguments on his hip; one in a bottle and the other in a blued-steel casing, which refutes the idea that a barking dog never bites.

The original manuscript was adapted to the screen by A. S. LeVino, of the Metro scenario staff, and the entire production directed by Harry L. Franklin.

For the settings of the picture Metro has spared no expense or effort to make the comedy one of the best pictorial offerings of the year. The filibustering scenes on the high seas were photographed aboard the freighter Richard Morgan off the California coast, with the Southern beaches and foliage for a background. Alice Lake has the role of the star's leading woman.

Record Run with "The Best Man."

J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Best Man" scored a triumph recently at Webber's Show, DeWitt C. Webber's big Denver playhouse. In a letter to W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Webber reports a record-making run on the Kerrigan production. "The refinement of his apparel has added immensely to his charm and to the volume of my receipts," said Mr. Webber. "I showed the production on Wednesday and Thursday last week to the biggest receipts I have ever had on those days. My people were greatly satisfied with the star's performance, and I heard praise from my patrons amounting almost to adulation. Let's have more of the Chesterfieldian elegance that gave J. Warren Kerrigan his proper place in screendom."

Madge Kennedy to Begin Work on "The Wrong Door"

GOLDWYN announces that Madge Kennedy is shortly to begin work on "The Wrong Door," the new story written by Jesse Lynch Williams, the purchase of which was announced last week.

"The Wrong Door" is a production with rich and colorful scenes which take in both the East and the West of the United States. A great deal of the power of the play depends on the effectiveness of the scenic environment. "The poetry of the West" is a primary emotion in the heart of the heroine.

The part of Isabel Carter is played by Madge Kennedy. Isabel Carter is a carefree girl, with a strong streak of poetry. She is held in restraint by the mercenary mediocrity of the people among whom she happens to be thrown.

Clarence G. Badger will direct the picture, and the Goldwyn Company is determined to advertise and publicize the picture to the limit.

Lavish Chanticleer Scene Staged for "Some Birds"

NOT to be outdone by Charles Swickard's gorgeous setting for the Midnight Revue scenes of May Allison's new starring vehicle, "Almost Married," in which the star will be seen as a prima donna surrounded by a chorus of terpsichorean beauties in a vivid reproduction of the famous New York roof garden. Henry Otto, who is directing Viola Dana in that star's newest comedy-drama, "Some Bride," is introducing in this piece a beautiful barnyard spectacle.

The scene will be a masque ball given in honor of the newly married couple, with Viola Dana as the bride and Irving Cummings as the groom, and all the players, including the star and leading man, as well as scores of extras as guests, will appear in the character of some inhabitant of the farm.

There will be donkeys, horses, cows, pigs, rabbits, ducks, geese, roosters and hens, and the dog and the cat, and there will be the turkeys and the crows, and in fact every imaginable bird or beast that is known to the rural homestead.

Maxwell Karger, directer general, is planning a most unusual and novel lighting effect through the use of dimmers, which will enable Mr. Otto to reproduce faithfully a beautiful golden rising sun which opens the scene as Chanticleer (Viola Dana) crows forth from his perch a challenge to the new day. In the same manner the sun will set on the quieted barnyard, with the solitary Chanticleer still crowing his challenge to the stilly night.

The costumes, or animal and bird masques, have all been especially made for Metro. The story was originally a three-act play written by Anne and Alice Duffy.

Beauty, Truth and Love Again Meet in Metro Film

BEAUTY, Truth and Love will meet again when the cast for May Allison's next comedy, "Freed," gathers at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

When May Allison played the role of Beauty in the original New York production of "Everywoman" at the Herald Square Theatre, with her in the cast was Kathleen Kerrigan, as Truth, and Pal Trenton, as King Love. Both Miss Kerrigan and Mr. Trenton have been secured by Rose Mullaney, Metro's casting directoress, for Miss Allison's support in "Freed"; so, as first remarked, Beauty, Truth and Love will soon meet once more. Herbert Blache is directing.

George D. Baker picturized "Freed" from Will Irwin's Saturday Evening Post story. May Allison plays the part of an expert stenographer and private secretary who heeds the call of the new freedom, hair-cuts, votes and cigarettes for women. Pal Trenton has the role of a college-bred radical, and Kathleen Kerrigan (J. Warren's sister) that of a female of the parlor bolshevist species.

"Service" is a keynote of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, in its dealings with the exhibitors of Kentucky and Tennessee to whom it furnishes the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions.

Kate Jordan and adapted by George D. Baker. It is novel, leaves a pleasant aftertaste and is excellently produced. Not a great picture from any point of view, it has to do with the theatre and treats the subject with respect for the people of the stage, and with real insight to their mode of life. The principal character is Fortuna Donnelly, one of the ushers at the Halcyon. Contrary to the usual run of stories of the stage, Fortuna does not step forward when the leading lady is taken suddenly ill, play her part and become a star overnight. There is a pretty romance in "Castles in the Air," but it always keeps down to earth.

May Allison is quite as attractive as the heroine of the picture as she was in "The Island of Intrigue" and "In for Thirty Days," and that should satisfy any reasonable mortal. Ben Wilson as Eddie Lintner, the manager of the theatre, is a new screen type of theatrical magnate and makes him agreeably human. Other well acted parts are the Hon. Owen Pauncefort of Walter I. The Story.

Building “Castles in the Air” after reading a thrilling romance about a barmaid who marries an English lord does not help Fortuna Donnelly to pay her room rent, so she hunts through the help wanted column of a paper and finds an “ad” for an usher at the Halcyon Theatre. Fortuna is a very pretty girl, and the assistant manager of the theatre is a judge of pretty girls. He engages her out of two dozen applicants, and then proceeds to take his commission after the fashion of cads of his kind. Fortuna slaps his face and is being roughly handled by McArthur, when the manager of the theatre enters the room. He gives McArthur a piece of his mind, and assures the girl of absolute protection if she still wants the position as usher.

Fortuna accepts and finds that Manager Lintner is a man of his word. He soon becomes greatly interested in her; but, womanlike, she prefers the attentions of the Honorable Owen Pauncefort, a wealthy young Englishman, who makes her acquaintance at the theatre. With visions of being the bride of so distinguished a gentleman, Fortuna accepts an invitation to dine with him at his home. The young girl is greatly impressed with the magnificence of the place, and is happy until Pauncefort tries to take her in his arms. She quickly makes him understand that she intends to be treated with respect. Not a bad chap at heart, her host apologizes, and confides to her that he is in this country to find his wife. A quarrel has separated the pair, and he is anxious to get his wife back.

When chance brings Mrs. Pauncefort to the theatre, Fortuna recognizes her by her photograph and phones to her husband. Upon his arrival she gives him a seat next to his wife. This leads to a reunion. The next happy event is when Fortuna finds out what a fine fellow Lintner is, and that she loves him. Her “Castle in the Air” turns out a very substantial one when she becomes the wife of the wealthy manager.

“The Girl Next Door.”

Paramount Presents Ethel Clayton in a Mystery Story of Double Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE GRACE and charm of Ethel Clayton, accomplished artiste and embodiment of sweet womanhood, and the fine acting of Jane Wolfe, count more heavily in “The Girl Next Door” than the story by Carolyn Wells, though the latter is one of the best writers of today, particularly of detective stories in which the solution of a mystery forms the essence. “The Girl Next Door” is an adaptation of “Vicky Van,” a serial recently published in the New York Globe, in which Carolyn Wells forced both the characters and the situations to suit the suspense of a mystery story. In order to explain the marriage of a beautiful and highly intelligent young American girl of good family to an elderly man lacking other attractions than wealth, there is a lot of very careful preparation to show that this bright young American girl knew nothing whatever about young men until after she was married.

The improbability of any American girl of ordinary common sense having so little common sense, either detracts from the character and sympathy for it, or from the probability of the situation. Interest is not aroused until the husband is mysteriously killed in a house next to his own, which he visits after a month’s trip to Chicago with a young lady of doubtful reputation. The house next door is maintained by “Vicky Van,” most carefully explained to be none other than his own wife, who has hired it to live a double life, and cut a door through from her dressing room. On recognizing his wife in spite of her disguise, there is a bitter scene between them immediately preceding his being found dead. Suspense thereafter depends on whether or not Vicky is guilty of the murder, though the spectator is not left in much doubt as to the real criminal by the nervous attitude of her maid. It is a fair detective story whose drawing power depends on Miss Clayton. Its presentation at the Strand was of the finest quality.

The Story.

“The House Next Door” is to let when elderly and corrupt Randolph Schuyler, wealthy lawyer, marries Ruth, a young lady of fine family and limited experience. She finds life in his strict household unendurable, until an uncle leaves her a fortune, when she conspires with her devoted maid to buy the house next door and live a double life as Victoria Van Allen, where she becomes popularly known as “Vicky Van.” During her husband’s absence with a young lady he is protecting, she entertains lavishly, becoming the subject of club talk by her attractions and her Bohemian parties.

The husband returns unexpectedly and hears gossip at his club about the fascinating Vicky Van, and induces a club acquaintance to take him to her house. With no sense of responsibility to his young wife, treating her with brutal severity, he is in search of adventure when he goes to Vicky’s house. They are alone in the dining-room when he recognizes her, tears off her wig and displays outrageous brutality in the way he handles her. Almost immediately after he is found stabbed to death, while Vicky has vanished with her maid.

A skilled detective is put to work on the case, and he is unconsciously assisted by Chester Calhoun, a young man who has fallen deeply in love with Vicky, though he recognizes in her the charming young Mrs. Schuyler he met by accident when her car broke down immediately after marriage. Young Calhoun exhibits so much interest in the case that he leads the detective to a discovery of the communicating door. Mrs. Schuyler is accused of murdering her husband, this

Robertson-Cole Lists Specials for Foreign Field

COMPETITION in the foreign field, where the Robertson-Cole Company long ago obtained a firm footing, is keen right now, but because of the fine list of productions which it has to offer foreign buyers Robertson-Cole is maintaining its high position.

The latest Robertson-Cole coup is the adding of the first six Rothapfel Units to its list of foreign attractions.

Besides offering the star series featuring Sessue Hayakawa, H. B. Warner, H. B. Walthall, William Desmond, Bessie Barriscale, Billie Rhodes and Alma Rubens, the Robertson-Cole foreign department has a number of specials on its list produced by Tom Ince, Ralph Ince, Julius Steger and Sydney Olcott.

In addition to these there are the three Robertson-Cole specials, "Cannibals of the South Seas," "The Turn in the Road," and "What Every Woman Wants."

A large amount of territory has been disposed of on all the Robertson-Cole attractions, but there still remains some lucrative rights on such productions as "The Prodigal Wife," featuring Lucy Cotton and Mary Boland; "Where Love Is," Ann Murdock; fifty-two Mutual-Strand comedies featuring Billie Rhodes; thirty Jester comedies starring Twede Dan; "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Tom Ince special; "Those Who Pay," Tom Ince special, starring Bessie Barriscale; "Just a Woman," Julius Steger special, with Charlotte Walker; "Nine-Tenths of the Law," a Mitchel Lewis production; "The Devil's Playground," featuring Vera Michelena; "Her Man," Ralph Ince special, with Elaine Hammerstein; "The Eleventh Commandment," another Ralph Ince attraction, with Lucille Lee Stewart; "The Pendleton Round-Up"; "William J. "Knickerbocker Buckaroo" Is Doug's Best Artcraft

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS makes his reappearance as "Old Doc Cheerful" in his newest Artcraft picture, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," which is released May 18. The moral of the story is that doing something for somebody is a worthy and laudable ambition, but that unselfishness can sometimes be carried too far, and unless guided by calm judgment may bring the unselfish one results he does not expect, and, secondly, that the proper place to start any reconstruction in character is at home.

The play opens in a fashionable New York club, where a statue of Charles Darwin co-stars with the screen hero, making possible some interesting athletic action, when Doug, in his conversation, concludes, "Perhaps Darwin was right." Fairbanks plays the part of Teddy Drake, a wealthy New Yorker, who decides that his life is all wrong because of his selfishness, and starts out t do unselfish things.

One of the exciting episodes is furnished when Doug climbs out of a window of a speeding Pullman car, continuing up to the roof of the car and running along the top of the train, then jumping to the swinging arm of a water feeder from which he leaps on to the back of a horse. This is the start of a thrilling chase in which two hundred cowboys pursue Fairbanks.

Marjorie Daw, playing the feminine lead, takes the part of Mercedes, a beautiful girl, whom Doug rescues from a band of outlaws. William Wellman as the brother of the girl also has an excellent part.

The ability of Frank Campeau to forcefully "put over" any crook or villain part is well known. In this picture he further establishes himself as a master screen villain.

Edythe Chapman plays the part of Drake's mother. The role of a half-breed bandit is played by Albert McQuarrie. Albert Parker is the director.

Lytell Faces Two Cameras in Making of Circus Story

LONG shots and close-ups of Bert Lytell are filmed simultaneously in the production of "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day" at the Metro studios. The star faces two directors and two cameramen in nearly every scene of the circus story.

Maxwell Karger, who supervises the production, was anxious to see the picture completed before he left for New York, so Director John Ince carefully laid out his production plan and showed himself to have the makings of an efficiency expert in the doing.

Ince directs the body of the story and the master scenes of the circus episodes, with Robert Kurrle, Bert Lytell's photographer, at the camera crank. The closer scenes are directed by Webster Cullison and photographed by Eugene Gaudio, Nazimova's cameraman. In practically all of the scenes long shots and close shots are taken at the same time.

William Dudley Pelley's story centers around the sawdust ring of a circus, and in his picturization George D. Baker has concentrated his scenes on the show lot.

Blackton's "House Divided" Booked by the Fox Circuit

P. E. MEYER, manager of the Film Clearing House's New York branch, announces that Frank G. Hall's special release for the week of June 1, "A House Divided," a J. Stuart Blackton production starring Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Rawlinson, has been booked for maximum runs over the Fox circuit of theatres, the U. B. Reports from Mr. Meyer are to the effect that the New York office of the Film Clearing House is working overtime on the executive work incident to the large number of requests coming from exhibitors for showings and bookings on this feature. June 1 will mark the first run of the production, and, in view of this fact, Mr. Meyer states that the business that has been done to date succeeds the number of bookings on any other feature handled through the New York office prior to release.

Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager for the Hall interests, announces that he has prepared an elaborate press book on the Blackton feature containing eighteen pages and giving in detail helps to the exhibitor in advertising the run. A mailing card has been sent to exhibitors announcing this release, and the trade papers have carried the announcement in colored inserts.

"Eternal Magdalene" Aided by Exploitation Campaign

ONE of the most original and far-reaching exploitation campaigns ever devised for a single motion picture production has preceded and trailed the triumphant exhibition of the Goldwyn extra, "The Eternal Magdalene," in the leading theatres of the country.

In Toronto the production had its premiere at the big Regent Theatre, the management employed display cards, fifty lines on two, for five weeks in advance of the showing of the picture. A reverse plate, with huge question mark and copy which read, "Do You Know Her? She Is Rich. She Is Poor," was inserted in the amusement and commercial columns of the Toronto Times. Special billboard exploitation, circularization and newspaper co-operative campaigns accentuated the importance of the newspaper "teaser" broadside.

The stage prologue, as explained and illustrated in the Goldwyn Goldwynner, has been used with success in the larger theatres, having adequate facilities for unique exploitation of this type. Nathan Ascher, of the powerful Ascher Brothers' Circuit of Chicago and surrounding territory, was among the first to adopt and recommend the stage prologue. The Rialto Theatre, San Francisco; the Alhambra, of Toledo; the Majestic, of Detroit, and the Marcus Loew chain of theatres are other houses which have added to the effect and novelty of the play by staging that part of the original stage play in which the "Magdalene" meets the "reformer" for the first time.

DeHavens Star in "In a Pinch."

Capitol Comedies celebrate the beginning of their second year of releasing through Goldwyn with a honeymoon comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. For many years they have been known to musical comedy audiences for their delicate sense of the comic and the delightful dancing interludes with which they punctuated many of the most successful Broadway productions. In choosing the Capitol banner under which to renew their screen acquaintance with their many followers, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have selected a fitting standard for the display of their individual gifts in the kind of plays which have earned an international reputation for them.

Their first Capitol comedy, "In a Pinch," tells the story of a stage-door Johnny's hilarious past, which rises to trouble him when he returns from his honeymoon.

The situations arising out of his old-time Broadway escapades produce some lively scenes with wifey.

Praise "Man Who Turned White."

Many prominent exhibitors attended the first showing of the initial Robertson-Cole superior picture, "The Man Who Turned White," featuring H. B. Warner, which was held during the past week in all the Exhibitors Mutual exchanges through which it will be released.

This production from the Jesse D. Hampton studios was greeted with enthusiasm by the bookers of first-run attractions, and from reports at hand it is beieved that the picture will "go across" in big fashion. The first big Warner attraction will be released in June.

"A Fallen Idol"

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

A GOOD romantic picture is sure of popularity and the new Fox attraction, "A Fallen Idol," five reels, is certainly a good romantic picture. Evelyn Nesbit plays the heroine, an Hawaiian princess, who has, in Californian society, fallen in love with a young man. He returns her affections, but his people object and scheme to bring about a misunderstanding. The climax is in a Hawaiian village, and on a yacht near-by. It has been very ably staged by Director Keanan Buel from a story by E. Lloyd Sheldon. It is interesting, gives a convincing romantic atmosphere, is pretty, and holds all the way through. The action is lively. The whole cast, Hawaiians and Americans, might be mentioned for good acting.

Cast.

Story by E. Lloyd Sheldon.
Direction by Kenean Buel.

The Story.

In "A Fallen Idol" the heroine is Laone, a princess of Hawaii. As the picture opens, we find her as the guest of Mrs. Parrish, a wealthy Californian who isn't above helping a fashionable smuggler, Stephen Brainard, who owns a yacht. Laone is beautiful, and Mrs. Parrish's nephew, Keith, falls in love with her. They become engaged. By smooth lies Mrs. Parrish makes Laone try to drown herself. Keith sees her jump and rescues her. She is brought in unconscious. Keith gets a telegram telling him that his father is dying. He goes, but leaves a message for Laone. She never gets it.

Brainard offers to take Laone back to Hawaii in his yacht and marry her. She accepts. He has many jewels on board, and Laone sees evidence that he is a smuggler. Brainard gives Laone an old idol. Keith comes and learns what has taken place. He sails for Hawaii by steamer. Both parties reach Laone's village the same day, and Laone hears the truth from Keith. She is to marry him with a poi feast that afternoon. Keith is arrested by customs officers for smuggling. Laone hears of it, and knows that Brainard is the culprit. The evidence is on the yacht. She makes Brainard think she loves him so that he will take her back where she can get the papers that will free Keith. The young man, who has been let go, swims out with a native girl. There is an unequal struggle, but Laone gets a revolver and holds the bridge till she can, by pulling the whistle cord, bring the custom officers to the yacht.

Advertising Angles: Make capital of the fact that the star is seen as a Hawaiian princess in this play. Seek to rouse interest in this fact. There is some good lithographic paper for this attraction. Use it freely. It will appear to those who follow this star. Play up the sensational features. For a lobby stunt use a phonograph with Hawaiian records, and at the same time get the phonograph stores to hook up with their Hawaiian lists and stills and window cards. Run a slide "The Hawaiian records at Blanks will have a new meaning to you after you have seen this wonderful picture of Hawaii."

"Words and Music by"

A Delightful Picture by Fox with Albert Ray as Struggling Musical Genius.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE story of an opera stolen from a young genius and put out by a four-flusher as his own, is seen from an entirely fresh angle in the Fox five-reel picture, "Words and Music by—." It is a real attraction and proves how fine a thing it is to take an old situation and work it up according to your own knowledge of life. The picture is full of true types, not only the young unrecognizer genius, the four-flusher writer, the star opera singer and the impresario, but, to take one instance, the music publisher, played by Robert Bolder, is one of the truly good bits in it. It is full of thumbnail sketches of corners of life just off Sixth avenue or Broadway. The story is good, has been well told by a freshly made plot and is rich in many little hearty things that add greatly to its interest.

Albert Ray, as the hero, a writer of real music who has a hard time, fills the role well. Elinor Fair is attractive as the girl who wins fame as a singer before her boy lover, the genius, is recognized. Eugene Pallette plays the four-flousher who steals the script from his friend and makes him think it has been burned. Edwin Booth Tilton plays the impressario ably. The whole cast works well and ably together. Director Scott Dunlap has made a real attraction. It will probably be a hit.

The Story.

In "Words and Music by—," the story opens in a small country city where Brian M'Bride, a musical genius, is acting as bookkeeper in a grocery store. Millicent Lloyd is a singer in a church choir and has a sweet voice. A new opera is brought there for a try-out by Sullivan, an impresario. It is the work of Gene Harris, who was born in the town. Sullivan tries Millicent's voice in a song written by Brian, and takes her to New York with him.

A little later Millicent has become a famous singer. Sullivan is in despair for a vehicle for her, as Harris has fallen down and is broke. Brian comes to town with a new opera, but Sullivan refuses to look at it, and Brian wants to be a success before he gets in Millicent's way. Brian meets Harris and lets him look at the score. Harris sees its value and makes Brian think it has been burnt. Sullivan puts it on and wonders why Harris can't make a good finish to the second act, which by the way, he neglected to get.

Record Big Bookings on "The Turn in the Road"

CALIFORNIA, which first accorded "The Turn in the Road," the Robertson-Cole special, the recognition which it has since won the country over, is still booking the production heavily through Exhibitors Mutual.

Last week at the Rivoli, in San Francisco, the Brentwood production opened for an indefinite run. It was at Quinn's Theatre, in Los Angeles, that the picture started its eventful career with an eight weeks' record-breaking stay.

In Oakland, Cal., the American Theatre has book the play for a long run. Other theatres in California showing the picture during the past week were the University of California Theatre, at Berkeley; the Liberty, San Jose; Liberty, Fresno, and Goddard's, in Sacramento.

The same big bookings which have been obtained in the East on the production are being maintained by the Western exchanges of Exhibitors Mutual. The California record of the production is but an indication of what it is doing all through the West.

Canadians Like Big Pictures.

How responsive Canadians are to serious drama with a definite message which echoes the great struggles of humanity, whether of today or yesterday, may be gauged from the fact that Arthur St. Germain, who controls the Crystal Palace, Family Theatre and Mount Royal Theatre, in Montreal, reports that his returns from the William Fox production, "Les Miserables," starring William Farnum, has broken all previous records. NOT only will all future productions starring Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet be made at the Garson Studios in Los Angeles, but a series of motion picture dramas to be known as Katterjohn Specials also will be produced there under the supervision of the screen author, Monte M. Katterjohn. This was made known by Harry Garson during his short visit in New York City last week.

"In securing the Katterjohn Specials," said Mr. Garson, "I was guided by my belief in youth and its enthusiastic tendencies where it has already shown vision and ability. Mr. Katterjohn's independent thought and past achievements justify the opportunity this series presents.

"One Week of Life"

Goldwyn Presents Pauline Frederick in a Dual Role Story by Cosmo Hamilton Adapted for the Screen by Willard Mack.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN THE dual role of a dissatisfied wife intent on enjoying "A Week of Life" with a lover, and a nice young lady who takes the wife's place during that week, Pauline Frederick successfully interprets both roles, and she is admirably supported by Thomas Holding as a dissipated husband in the last stages of alcoholism. On Miss Frederick's dignified and intelligent performance, and on the remarkable picture given by Mr. Holding of a drink victim's sufferings in an attempt to redeem himself when encouraged to do so, a large part of the value of this Goldwyn production rests.

Mr. Holding's vivid picture, one of the most intense of its kind ever shown on the screen, may be regarded as timely, and it is certainly a piece of artistic interpretation in makeup, general attitude and revelation of feeling. Mr. Mack has attempted to do away with too much narrative subtitle, a commendable effort on his part, and he is dramatic in picturing frail human nature as it exists, but he sacrifices to clarity at times, confusing the spectator in the continuity of events, a matter to be remedied by more careful editing.

Notwithstanding the fact that the dual role, where two individuals are portrayed by the same actress, is destructive of the illusion of reality, so far as the spectator is concerned, and the fact that resemblances, while possible, are far from probable in the case of a substituted wife, the story holds fairly well.

The Story.

When Mrs. Kingsley Sherwood found life unbearable with her drunken husband and longed for "A Week of Life" with LeRoy Scott, a lying lover, she considered herself alone, making no attempt to redeem the weakling she had promised to love and honor. The lover, on finding almost her duplicate in sweet Marion Roche, speaks of the two women to each other and arranges a little plan of substitution, inducing Marion to take the place of Mrs. Sherwood, while the latter goes to visit a pretended child who is ill. He manages thus to escape with the erring wife, but Marion's delicate situation becomes complicated when Sherwood recognizes in his supposed wife finer qualities than were ever revealed by the real one, and, at her suggestion, makes an effort to give up drinking.

Sherwood does not realize that any substitution has been made until he comes upon a letter she has dropped. He then sets a trap to discover her purpose. He manages to enter her bedroom when she returns at night from a friendly visit, and there exposes her folly—his wife has not gone to visit her sick child, because there is none.

Marion is overwhelmed, but she has become interested in Sherwood because of the plucky self-struggle he has put up, while he attributes his reform to her encouragement. They are becoming interested in each other when news comes that the erring wife and her lover have been drowned while out in a canoe. There is then a future for the redeemed man in the love of the woman whose words of encouragement are responsible for his redemption.

"The Lion's Den"

Another Human Story by the Author of "The Spender" Produced by Metro and Starring Bert Lytell.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE should be wide appeal in "The Lion's Den," a Metro picture adapted from one of Rederick Orin Bartlett's stories by George D. Baker, the director of the production. Bert Lytell is the featured player. Real human problems in the life of a small town are handled with understanding, and the vital points that confront a young minister who is anxious to do his duty to his fellowman, are used skillfully in a story that has a good sprinkling of humor to offset its serious moments. It is particularly recommended to those who insist that their screen entertainment shall be clean in thought and act. Practical Christianity is what it aims to show, and it hit its mark right in the center. A melodramatic finish may be forgiven on the grounds that a little hurried action will increase the circulation of the spectator for the time being, even if it does not elevate his morals.

Bert Lytell plays the Rev. Sam Webster with the earnestness required, and commands respect and a genuine liking for the minister all through the story. He makes the character a fine specimen of the modern, broadminded young clergyman. Alice Lake as his sweetheart, Dorothy Stedman, is a fitting mate for a man of his calling. Joseph Kilgour is hardly the type for a village groceryman, but acts with the ability expected from an actor of his high standing. Edward Connelly's char-

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

New Elements Enter Into Making of Western Picture

TIME and again it has been demonstrated in motion picture work that unusual care in seeking unhackneyed effects has resulted in superior production. This has been the case in all types of the photoplay, whether serious or comic, society drama or slum play.

Director J. Gordon Edwards never had undertaken to make a Western picture before he was placed in charge of William Farnum's latest subject, "The Lone Star Ranger," an adaptation of Zane Grey's novel, now in process of production. Mr. Edwards has been a keen student of the West, has ranched and roughed it, and understands thoroughly the primitive life of that country.

He determined to introduce new angles in the picturization of "The Lone Star Ranger," and accordingly devoted himself to a close study of the scenic, human-interest and situation possibilities of the play. He consulted frequently with William Farnum on those points which have appealed to the Fox star with great force.

The Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox corporation says that William Farnum, in this picture, has a role by far the most interesting of his career; that as Steele, the Texas Ranger, he dominates the play with a quiet and persuasive personality which centers attention unceasingly on him.

Mary MacLaren Film Ready.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, announces the completion of the newest Mary MacLaren screen drama produced under the tentative title of "Woman's Place." This new Special Attraction contains tragedy tinged with humor, and is a pictured modernistic argument against many old time beliefs.

In "Woman's Place," Miss MacLaren is cast as the prettiest of five daughters of a poor newspaper editor, who is a tyrant in his home.

The drama is one that should remain long in the minds of the playgoers, and the supporting cast includes Thurston Hall, Johnnie Cook, John Mackay, and Ethel Ritchie. The picture is in six reels, and was directed by Paul Powell, and was written by Elmer Ellsworth. The release date will be announced later.

Close Big Contracts for Semon Comedies.

Evidence of the growing popularity of Vitagraph's "Big V" Special comedies is contained in the acquisition of these comedies by J. C. Brady, of Toronto; A. G. Talbot, of Denver, and J. de Alarcon, of El Paso, Juarez and Chihuahua. Mr. Brady, who owns the Madison Theatre, in Toronto, is president of the Ontario Exhibitors' Protective Association. Mr. Talbot owns the American Theatre, one of the best in Denver, and Mr. de Alarcon controls six theatres in the three cities in which he operates. All these men came to New York City to personally close contracts for the series as well as for other Vitagraph units.

Gladys Leslie to Star in Strong Crook Picture

THE middle of June will see a new Gladys Leslie photoplay. It will be a picture version of one of the most popular magazine stories of recent vintage—namely, "Too Many Crooks," which was published in All-Story Weekly.

E. J. Rath is the author. It is an ingeniously contrived yarn dealing with the daring search for local color by a young woman playwright who becomes imbued with an ambition to write a crook play right down to fact, after having view a performance of one of those overdrawn plays of that sort often seen on the stage. Therefore she consults a lawyer friend who promises to deftly introduce a few crooks into an exclusive house party which she is arranging.

Gladys Leslie and Jean Paige are seen in the principal female roles, with Huntley Gordon as the master crook who was not at all crooked. Other Vitagraph favorite in the cast include Anders Randolf and T. J. McCrane, aside of which there are James Dent, Cecil Chichester, George O'Donnell, John T. Wade and James Gaylore.

The picture will be directed by Ralph Ince.

Plan Big Campaign on Willard Picture.

A national advertising campaign which is to include large space in newspapers, thousands of 24-sheet stands and various other media will be employed by the Continental Pictures Corporation to introduce Jess Willard, champion heavyweight boxer of the world, to the motion picture fans of the country.

The Continental Pictures Corporation will pay for the newspaper advertising, the posting and such other items as may be necessary to put its production over in a big way. The company has already started work on its 24 sheets, newspaper ads and other accessories that are to be used in this campaign.

Charlotte Merriam in Moran Comedies.

De Luxe Catalogue Edition of Goldwynner a Beauty

A DE LUXE catalogue edition of the Goldwynner, the exhibitor house organ published by Goldwyn, is now in circulation among more than 17,000 exhibitors of the United States and Canada.

The catalogue edition, designed and edited to give the trade concise facts and news on the entire Goldwyn output made and released to June 1, inclusive, embodies the titles, authorship, direction, cast, reelage and descriptive stories on Goldwyn star series production, "twenty-six" Goldwyn pictures, Louis Bennison star series of Western dramas, Capitol comedies starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons and Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, the Ford Educational Weekly and the Goldwyn extra releases.

Numbering twelve pages and produced in colors, with beautiful art decorative effects, the new catalogue is one of the most unusual and elaborate editions yet published, and, so far as can be determined, is the industry's first catalogue tabulating and describing the entire output released by an individual producing and distributing corporation.

Service Manager Hunt Stromberg compiled and edited the catalogue in response to an exceptionally large number of inquiries received from exhibitors.

The Story.

"The Lion's Den" tells of a young minister in a small town, who is determined to awaken his congregation and the rest of inhabitants to their duty toward the boys of the village. A tour of inspection has shown him that the youngsters hang around the pool room and hear conversation from the men that will do them no good. He determines to start a boys' club, and tries to raise the necessary funds from the well-to-do members of his church. The scheme is a failure. The richest man in his congregation is the father of Dorothy Stedman, a young woman he greatly admires. Stedman keeps a grocery store—and a tight fist on his money. Finding it will take five thousand dollars to equip the club with a home and its furnishings, the minister goes to Stedman and asks him to subscribe half of the amount. The grocer writes out a check for twenty-five dollars. The minister refuses it, and turns to a more practical method.

Stedman's way of doing business is driving his rival to the wall. This man's name is Jarvis. The minister goes to him with an offer to become his partner, put in enough money, re-stock the store, and help him run it. He also explains that his share of the profits is to go to the boys' club, and that he will enlist the members in the scheme. As soon as they know that all of the custom they bring to the store will help build the clubhouse, they will work their best for the new firm. There are strong objections from many quarters when it is learned that the Rev. Sam Webster preaches on Sunday and runs a grocery store on weekdays.

Stedman, who finds his business slipping away from him, forces the minister out of his pulpit. Dorothy at once sides with the minister, and lets him know that she doesn't care how soon she becomes his wife. Stedman is won over to the minister and the boys' cause, after his store has been set on fire by a rascally clerk, and his own life and his property saved by the youngsters, led by their champion. When the clubhouse is opened, it is the scene of the minister's marriage to Dorothy.

Sessue Hayakawa
Thinks seriously about forgiving anyone for "His Debt."

"His Debt"

Robertson-Cole Production of Merit Features Sessue Hayakawa in Heroic Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE Robertson-Cole five-part production, "His Debt," for the Exhibitors Mutual Program, Sessue Hayakawa plays a role considerably different in character from any in which he has been seen. He gives a pleasing and unusual portrayal of the proprietor of a house of chance, and is noticeably successful in depicting the various moods common to the particular type which he represents.

Several technical errors occur in the course of the picture, which, fortunately, are of trifling significance. One of the characters which stands out strongly, and which is given an excellent portrayal by Francis J. MacDonald is that of Blair Whitcomb, a young man whose prospects are wrecked by the lure of gambling and strong drink. Jane Novak, in the feminine lead, is also worthy of special comment for her attractive work.

The picture is rich in artistic settings; and the action, somewhat slow at the beginning, gains speed and suspense as it progresses. It is a picture that the public will like, containing enough of adventure and melodrama, and sufficient of the romantic element to please the average individual.

The Story.

The story of "His Debt" draws attention again to race barriers, without unduly emphasizing this angle. Goro Moriyama, a young Japanese owner of a gambling house in an American city, believes in the "square deal," and also follows the plan of giving to the poor the money collected from the rich. His house is frequented by a young man of wealth, Blair Whitcomb, who is engaged to a beautiful young daughter of a home of wealth and honor. Whitcomb, who is in the habit of coming to Moriyama's house under the influence of liquor, finally loses all he has. In a moment of anger, he hands over to Moriyama, as the result of a lost wager, a check for ten thousand dollars, which his bank refuses on the ground of insufficient funds.

To revenge himself on Moriyama for expelling him from the gambling house, Whitcomb shoots at him through the window of his private apartment, and lodges a bullet in his body which almost causes his death. Whitcomb's sweetheart, returning to her profession of nurse, happens to be put in charge of Moriyama's case, knowing nothing of the unhappy relations between Moriyama and Whitcomb.

Moriyama falls in love with her; and when he is about to avenge himself on Whitcomb by giving him up to the police, the girl intervenes, and her plea for her lover is granted, the Japanese failing to identify Whitcomb as his would-be murderer.

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

Robertson-Cole Has Big Productions for Summer

THE various producing units of the Robertson-Cole Company, division of films, are bending every effort to fulfill the promises of the parent organization to give exhibitors during the approaching summer months some of the finest types of photoplays as a bulwark against the customary poor hot season business.

Four pictures are now in the course of construction in California. The great outdoors furnish the locale for three of the attractions under way.

Sessue Hayakawa is working on "The Gray Horizon."

"Bare-Fisted Gallagher," the next William Desmond picture, is being filmed by Jesse D. Hampton in a picturesque but remote section of the San Gabriel Canyon under the direction of Joseph J. Franz.

Billie Rhodes' "In Search of Arcady," another attraction which breathes of the romantic country of the Far West, has been virtually completed.

Bessie Barriscale, starring in her own productions, is now filming "Tangled Threads," which will be her next issue.

"The Gray Horizon" has as its background the splendor of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The entire setting of the picture is in the hills, and every advantage has been taken of the extraordinary light and cloud formations that occur over these beautiful mountains.

To get the desired effects in some of the scenes the entire company had to be transported by mule packs through the narrow mountain trails to an elevation of nearly 5,000 feet. It is at this height in the early hours of the morning that the cloud banks are found, and it was the good fortune of the Haworth players to get the one scene that was so necessary to convey the full meaning of the name of the story.

William Worthington is the director, while Clifford Howard wrote the piece.

"Bare-Fisted Gallagher" was especially written for Desmond by William Parker. The San Gabriel Canyon, where the Desmond company is camped, was reached only after a long automobile journey from Los Angeles, and nearly an eighteen-mile mule ride into the mountains.

The cast is a small but excellent one. Frank Lanning, widely known as a heavy, and little Agnes (Brownie)Vernon are the players who are featured in the Desmond support.

M. B. Havey, head of the scenario staff of B. B. Features, is author of "Tangled Threads." Fred Myton made the screen version.

In the cast are Rosemary Theby, Nigel Barrie, Henry Kolker, Thomas Holding, Ben Alexander and Mary Jane Irving.

"In Search of Arcady" is the story of an American girl who is bored to death by titled personages in search of her hand, and who runs away to adopt the gypsy mode of living to avoid their pursuit.

Reports from Middle-West Show "Destiny" Going Big

REPORTS from the middle West show that the new Jewel picture, "Destiny," is being received by the exhibitors as a sequel to "The Heart of Humanity" as far as the success is concerned.

Six of the large Chicago theatres have booked the picture. "Destiny" was shown as a pre-release at the 20th Century Theatre in May, and is booked for a return engagement in June. It was shown for six days as a pre-release picture at the Chicago Casino, and it is reported that the box-office receipts were much above the average. Other Chicago houses which have booked the production are the Vista, Harper, the Hamlin and the Lubliner and Trinz Theatre.

Others of the big theatres of the middle West which have booked the film for an early showing in June are the Castle, at Bloomington, Ill.; the Empress and Columbia, at Peoria, Ill.; the Park, the Champaign, Ill.; the Art Theatre, at Gary, Ind.; the La Salle, at South Bend, Ind., and the Colonial, at Joliet, Ill. A prerelease showing of the picture at the Majestic Theatre, in Tulsa, Okla., proved a great success, and it is booked for one week at the Lyceum, at Winnipeg, Can.

Among the players supporting Dorothy Phillips are William Stowell, Harry Hilliard, Stanhope Wheatcraft, Walt Whitman, Gertrude Astor, and Allan Sears.

Marion Davies Working on "April Folly."

Work on Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, "April Folly," is well under way in the Biograph Studio, where the star and a large company is working on the screened version of Cynthia Stockley's novel of the same name.

Conway Tearle plays opposite Miss Davies, and Esther Marshall is seen to advantage in the early part of the story.

Miss Davies is cast in an almost dual role, playing in the early part of the story a secret service sleuth and changing places later with the petted daughter of an aristocratic Earl.

Many of the scenes in the film are being shot aboard a transatlantic steamer.

Author Earle Snell Gets High Praise from Middleton

GEORGE MIDDLETON, who produced all of Beatriz Michelena's past successes, considers "Just Squaw," which Robertson-Cole will release through Exhibitors Mutual, the greatest story she has yet appeared in. As among her past successes are numbered "Salomy Jane," by Bret Harte; "Mignon," by Goethe; "Salvation Nell," by Edward Sheldon; "The Unwritten Law," by Edwin Milton Royal; "The Woman Who Dared," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, this statement of Mr. Middleton's is a high compliment to Earle Snell, the author of "Just Squaw."

Earle Snell was born in California, and has made a painstaking study of life as it was in that state in the early days. The result is shown in his stories. He presents his ideas along entirely original lines, according to Mr. Middleton. His scenarios are full of action, suspense and wonderful climaxes.

Earle Snell has been associated with Miss Michelena since she entered pictures, and he has devoted his time to cutting, assembling and titling productions, as well as to writing.

Mr. Snell also wrote Miss Michelena's coming release, "The Dead Line." Another work of his is "The Busher," a baseball story written for Charles Ray. This will be produced and released shortly. During the past year Mr. Snell has given a course in scenario writing at the University of California, and it has been one of the best attended and most successful courses held at the university.

First Capellani Picture To Be Released June 22

ALBERT CAPELLANI will inaugurate his advent into the ranks of independent producers on June 22, the day that has been scheduled for the release of "Oh Boy," the first subject to be made by the recently organized Albert Capellani Productions, Inc. "Oh Boy" will also be the first of a series of special features in which Creighton Hale and June Caprice will be co-starred under the banner of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., and will be released through Pathe Exchange, Inc. Final laboratory work on the production, which is the first "Filmusical Comedy" to be shown on the screen, has been completed, and it is expected that prints will be available for showings at the Pathe branches within a week.

"Oh Boy" is adapted from the musical comedy hit of the same name which was originally presented at the Princess Theatre, New York, where it played for over sixteen months. The picture was produced under the personal direction of Albert Capellani.

"Oh Boy" lays claim to being that rare thing in motion picture—a production of a purely farcical nature entirely devoid of incidents bearing even a remote resemblance to melodrama. By clevely blending incidents of a romantic nature with a series of highly amusing farcical situations, Director Capellani has succeeded without the aid of any sinister or dramatic element in registering a swiftly moving and highly diverting light comedy that embodies all the qualities of popular appeal.

An excellent and timely advertising angle is afforded exhibitors in the new "Filmusical Comedy" by the introduction of a number of episodes in which prohibition figures. In fact, it is prohibition that starts all the trouble, for his royal muchness, Judge Carter, is a confirmed opponent of the demon rum.

The cast is headed by Creighton Hale and June Caprice. The supporting company includes Flora Finch, Zena Keefe, W. H. Thompson, Joseph Conyers, Grace Reals and Maurice Bennet Flynn.

Goldwyn Soon to Release "The City of Comrades"

BASIL KING'S new novel, "The City of Comrades," and shortly to be released in picture form by Goldwyn with Tom Moore as the central player, brings to the screen a new realism of a man's redemption by love. The romanticism and unwillingness to see life as it actually is that seems to pervade most screen dramas is here scrupulously pushed aside. The result is a picture that is startling by its verity, its amazing insight into what actually goes on inside the soul of a real man when by ineritia and temptation he has been brought to the brink of ruin, and by love and his own power of will he draws himself back to self respect.

"The City of Comrades" is a story of the new feeling of brotherhood that has grown out of the war, a gripping narrative of the rise of a young man of family from degradation to accomplishment and a beautiful woman's love by the aid of men who had suffered and fallen even as he had.

"The Home Town Girl"

Paramount Presents Vivian Martin in a Story of Woman's Loyalty and Faith.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE story of a brave young girl's constancy under trying circumstances; of the splendid stimulus she gives to the man she loves, urging him on to finer achievement, helping him when he stumbles and falls, "The Home Town Girl" depicts a type delightful in itself and most consistently that of the bright American girl of today. Vivian Martin types the role admirably and plays it with both intelligence and feeling, yet without emotional exaggeration. Her support is good throughout, particularly in the minor roles of the old business men the heroine encounters in her adventures.

The settings are unusually varied and so in harmony with the mood of the story that the picture must be set down as a very attractive addition to almost any program, but particularly of home towns. This Paramount product, while not intense, is clean, wholesome, and eminently suited to presentation.

The Story.

Nell Fanshawe is a home town girl of the plucky American sort, who knows her own mind, and when she selects John Ryder, a soda-water clerk, from among her many admirers in the town, she spurs him to seek a larger field. He finds it in the form of Jellaby and Co., art antiques, New York, and rapidly makes good by attaching a pretty little story to each object of art he sells. He is on the point of large advancement, when a clerk he replaced tempts him into a poker game, where he loses $300 of the firm's money. He writes to his sweetheart and the firm that his pocket was picked, and vanishes with the intention of making good.

Nell becomes disturbed about him, goes to Jellaby and Co., and finds employment. Day by day she frequents soda fountains in the city hoping to trace Ryder, and does so when he remits a small sum on account of his defalcation to the firm. She is so deeply in earnest that she impresses Jellaby with John's honesty, then her own love falters when she finds him and discovers also that he has lied. She braves it out to the end, however, forgiving him in her compassion, and re-establishing him where there is promise of great happiness for both.

"The Sleeping Lion"

Monroe Salisbury Makes Good as East Side Italian in Universal Special.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Universal Six-part Special Attraction, "The Sleeping Lion," is a production that stands easily on its own merits. It is rich in human interest and has plenty of stirring action such as is characteristic of the best type of Western dramas. The story interest is strong, with the ennobling influence of child life uppermost. Monroe Salisbury, in the role of a kind-hearted Italian potter, wins the sympathy of the spectator in the beginning, and holds it to the end. His portrayal of the Italian role is excellent.

Howard Hickman, whose work as a screen villain never fails to compel admiration, sustains his reputation in the role of the town gambler and head of an unscrupulous gang. His associates, composed of well-chosen types, are impersonated by players of ability. The Western, and especially the saloon atmosphere, is good.

Rupert Julian, as director, has acquitted himself well; and the result of his work is a Western drama of unusually entertaining qualities. Last but not least is the boy actor, whose finished performance is one of the picture's most pleasing features. Rhea Mitchell is excellent.

Full Speed Ahead Is the Word at Universal City

IT is hard to believe, but it is a fact, that fourteen directors were shouting through the megaphones directing pictures at Universal City, during the latter part of last week and the first part of the present week. These activities represent productions from one-reel comedies to multiple reel super-productions.

Crowds aggregating more than one thousand have been on the plots at one time, all of the crowds appearing in the spectacular scenes of "The Right to Happiness," in which Dorothy Phillips is starring in a dual role. It is being directed by Allen Holubar.

What the Companies Are Doing.

Harry Carey and his company have returned from a visit to Arizona, where several good Western shots were made, and are now proceeding with his newest vehicle, "A Man of Peace."

Two of the larger productions are nearing completion, with every evidence that they will be among the best pictures the stars have made. Lynn Reynolds is hooting the final scenes on "A Little Brother of the Rich," which has an all star cast headed by Frank Mayo. The picture is the screen adaption of the Joseph Medill Patterson novel of that name.

The Alpine picture being produced under the direction of the star-author-director, Eric Von Stroheim, is now receiving the finishing touches.

Hedda Nova has about finished the first half of "The Spitfire of Seville," which George Seigmann is producing.

Mary MacLaren and her supporting company have left for San Francisco to take the exterior scenes for "The Petal on the Current," the story which was written by Fannie Hurst.

Something in Serial Line.

Marie Walcamp, star of many Universal serials, has already started work on the first of the "Tempest Cody" Western pictures, with Jacques Jaccard as the director. After completing this series, she will start on a new serial.

James J. Corbett is working in the thirteenth episode of "The Midnight Man."

"Crashing Through" is the tentative title of the latest Pete Morrison two-reel Western, and in which he is now making several of the fighting scenes.

All of the comedy companies are going in full force.

Use Throwaways to Advertise Film.

An interesting throwaway was used by the management of the Lincoln Theatre, of Rochester, N. Y., to advertise the showing of "Cleopatra."

This piece of advertising matter is fourteen inches by eleven, and is printed in blue ink on white paper. A portrait cut of Theda Bara four inches square is used on the right center of the sheet. The flyer is made timely by the heading, which reads: "Kinogram News Every Tuesday and Friday. News That Is News." Following these two lines of the theatre in large type, and the announcement of the date of the showing. The copy used is very brief, and reads:

"Cleopatra, the Siren of the Nile. A work of historical art produced with lavishness and splendor. Due to the cost of this production all admissions will be at the regular adult prices."

"The Usurper" Appeals to Canadians.

Canadian bookings were a feature of business done on the score of "The Usurper" by Vitagraph last week. The play appealed peculiarly to many Englishmen resident in the Dominion on account of its British atmosphere. Aside of a preamble laid on American soil, the play revolves about an English estate, and it is an ivy-covered castle in Surrey. Earle Williams is the star.

"To Our Dynamo—J. D. Williams"
It the toast on this cup, presented by the First National Sales Club to "J. D.," manager of the Circuit.

All-Star Cast Completed for Next Blackton Film

THOUGH no definite news is yet available regarding the title and theme of the sensational super-feature J. Stuart Blackton is now producing at his own studios in Brooklyn, it is announced that the story of the production is an original one, writen by Commodore Blackton himself. The continuity is the collaborative work of Commodore Blackton and Stanley Olmstead, newspaper man and author of scenario and magazine stories.

This new Blackton picture has been under way for about two weeks with an all-star cast interpreting the many principal roles. The cast is probably the strongest ever assembled by the producer.

The featured names are Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon. Fanny Rice, the well-known comedienne of farce, musical comedy and vaudeville, resumes her professional career after several years' retirement by making her screen debut in this new Blackton production. Eddie Dunn, Gus Alexander, Julia Swayne Gordon, Van Dyke Brooke, Louis Dean and Leo Delaney, all Vitagraph favorites, renew former successful affiliations with Mr. Blackton in the new production, and Charles and Violet Blackton, the producer's children, again appear to advantage as two tenement kiddies. Madame Barry, a Russian actress, makes her debut on the American screen, and Alla Peroff, Richard Milasch and Jay Strong complete the list. Jack Martin is again assisting the producer.

"Thin Ice" Has Strong Cast.

A small but effective cast interprets "Thin Ice," the play which Corporal Shannon Fife wrote for Corinne Griffith as his first after-war contribution to the screen. "Thin Ice" will be released next week. It is directed by Tom Mills. Foremost in its cast are Charles Kent, Henry G. Sell, L. Rogers Lytton, Eulalie Jensen and Jack McLean.

Gladys Brockwell Making New Picture.

Gladys Brockwell has gone to a location outside of Barstow, Cal., to make scenes for her new William Fox play, "Sadie," under the direction of Frank Beal. Among those in the cast are William Scott, Richard Rosson, Harry Dunkinson, Irene Aldwyn, Walter Long and Claire McDowell.

Barbara Castleton Has Big Role in "Peg o' My Heart"

IN the cast of "Peg o' My Heart," which William C. DeMille is now directing for Paramount-Artcraft special release, with Wanda Hawley in the title role and Thomas Meighan as leading man, appears Barbara Castleton enacting the part of Helen Chichester, the haughty cousin whom Peg rescues from a serious indiscretion. The role is one of the most important in that it is a contrast to the principal feminine figure and requires a great deal of finesse.

Barbara Castleton was born in Arkansas, and in her stage career was featured in "It Pays to Advertise," which will soon be placed into picture form with Bryant Washburn as star. She also played the lead in "Madame Sherry," and on entering picture work appeared opposite Hobart Henley. Later she was seen in many well known photoplays, such as "Empty Pockets," "A Daughter of the Gods," etc. She was recently in the cast of "The Silver King," a Paramount-Artcraft special, with William Faversham.

The scenario for "Peg o' My Heart" was written by Olga Printzlau.

Announces "Sahara" Ready for Nationwide Pre-Release

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S, big production, "Sahara," directed by Allen Dwan and starring Louise Glaum, is announced as ready for pre-release June 1 in the larger first-run theatres. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has virtually established a record in the speed with which this G. Gardner Sullivan story has been distributed to its branches, with all accessories and exploitation aids prepared.

The laboratory work and the editing of "Sahara" are of high quality, and the original musical score provided by exhibitors is the work of Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, the managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, under whose auspices the production had its first and only trade showing recently at the Rialto.

As a means of intensifying the exhibitor salesmanship of "Sahara" in reaching the public with the details of the production, the Hodkinson Corporation has made all of the advertising designs and layouts that will be used in the trade press campaign available to theatres everywhere. This advertising is in harmony with the lithographs, lobby photographs in colors and special posters and other accessories.

Rothapfel Unit Booked by Loew's New York Circuit

MARCUS LOEW has booked the Rothapfel Unit Program over his New York circuit and in Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, according to an announcement made by P. E. Meyer, manager of the New York branch of the Film Clearing House, through which the Unit Program is released by Frank G. Hall, vice-president of the Rothapfel Picture Corporation.

With a contract from one of the leading exhibitors of Greater New York, Marcus Loew, and requests coming into the New York office of the Film Clearing House from the big exhibitors throughout the country, Mr. Hall and Mr. Rothapfel feel that the Rothapfel Unit Program is not only living up to but surpassing every expectation.

Mr. Meyer places a great deal of the credit for the numbers of bookings coming into his office to the advertising and exploitation campaign arranged by Harry P. Diggs and Hopp Hadley. The advertising and publicity departments put forth every effort to place this program before the exhibitors and public, and the results obtained have more than rewarded them for their efforts, according to Mr. Meyer's statement.

him and strikes out for the West to realize his dream of owning a ranch. In the Western town, he comes in contact with the saloon gang, and makes an enemy of the town's chief gambler by refusing to drink whiskey, and also by too free an admiration of the gambler's sweetheart.

On the ranch, the boy and his benefactor live happily until, one evening, when the child's birthday is being celebrated by the eating of the first birthday cake he has ever seen, and Tony, his foster father, leaves him alone in the house while he goes to bring a young pig for a birthday present. While he is gone, the gambler creeps up on the house and shoots at a shadow which he sees in the window, believing it to be Tony. The child, stunned, but little injured, soon recovers, and Tony, in the course of events that follow gets his revenge, and also the girl, who finally discovers that she loves him and not the gambler.

"The Little Diplomat"

Five-Reel Diando-Pathe Subject Features Baby Marie Osborne in Comedy-Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE are a number of good humorous incidents and some fairly strong dramatic moments in this Baby Marie Osborne subject, "The Little Diplomat," though the number as a whole is uneven in construction and mechanical in plot action. It will no doubt please the many admirers of Baby Marie, so far as her personal work is concerned, and also that of the colored boy, Sambo, but the story itself does not hold particularly well.

The plot blends humorous action with old-fashioned melodrama, in such a way that the scenes fail to carry conviction at certain vital points. The humor is good, however, and the whitewashing of Sambo is sure to create a great deal of laughter.

Baby Marie appears to better advantage in simple, natural stories which center more definitely about herself than does this particular plot. The episode of the robbery, and in fact the introduction of the crooks at the very beginning, has a forced effect, and this weakens the production as a whole considerably. The cast is a proficient one, but the development of the story is weak.

The Story.

Little Marie is a French war orphan, brought to this country for adoption. She enters the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley West, a childless couple. Mrs. West loves the child at once, but the husband is irritated by her presence. Marie plays with a little colored boy until Hulda, the new governess, is employed, and when the latter raises objection, Marie whitewashes her little colored friend, in his bathing tights, and introduces him to a tea party, with startling results.

The new governess is a member of a gang of crooks, who are planning to rob West's safe. By the aid of Hulda the chief crook, Brownleigh, enters the house, and is inside the safe when Marie steals downstairs in the night to recover her lost doll. Marie locks the safe, with Brownleigh inside, but Hulda opens it again. At this moment Trent Gordon,

Big "U" Animal Comedies Prove Hit on Broadway

AS a proof of the drawing power of the Universal animal comedies, attention is called to the fact that the Strand Theatre on Broadway, New York, showed the first of the series of comedies during the week of May 18. The result was that the audiences were more than pleased, and Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett was so pleased with the showing that he congratulated Universal on the production. He offered the following letter as a testimonial, addressing it to the Universal exchange:

"'Monkey Stuff', your latest two-reel comedy, which we are playing this week, is in my estimation a distinct novelty, and a sure fire success.

"At every performance it has gone big with our audiences, who seem to appreciate the novel way in which it was handled. Please accept my heartiest congratulations and best wishes for the future success of these splendid comedies. I am glad to have had the opportunity of running them."

The new series of animal comedies being produced at Universal City under the direction of William S. Campbell are scheduled to appear in the leading theatres.

In the animal comedy shown at the Strand, the first of the series, Caesar the Lion, Joe the Monk, and Charley the Elephant were in the leading roles. They were assisted in their comic antics by Harry Lorain, Phylis Allen, Beatrice Lovejoy, Harry Burns, and Lucile Smith.

William S. Campbell is not only the director of the comedies, but is the author of the stories from which these famous comedies are produced.

Morey's Latest Vitagraph Accorded Big Reception

"BEATING THE ODDS" received a big reception when initially flashed on the screen May 12 in the leading first-run houses throughout the country.

In "Beating the Odds," Harry T. Morey pictures the regeneration of a man long the slave of conditions corrosive to one's moral nature. One of the most startling situations in modern cinema drama is created when this man, at last free of the taint of his past life, is about to marry a young woman, pure and undefiled, and discovers that his bride's father has chosen as his second wife the worthless woman he cast off.

From that point on the story develops rapidly until a climax which robs one of breath is reached.

Betty Blythe and Jean Paige are seen in principal supporting roles. Others in the cast are Eulalie Jensen, Charles Stevenson, George Majeroni, Robert Gaillard, Robert Mowbray and Frank Norcross. The picture was directed by Paul Scardon.

Percy Marmont.
After completing engagement in "The Invisible Foe" cast will support Alice Joyce in "Vengeance."

Big Munition Works Is Setting for "Yellow Eel"

ONE of the most unique settings ever given a motion picture is used in the opening scenes of "The Yellow Eel," the new three-part McClure serial of two-reel pictures, on which production has started at Bridgeport. For the first time since the outbreak of the war, the government gave permission to the McClure staff to film scenes in the interior of a government munition factory in full operation. Against this background of shell-making machinery, the secrets of which have heretofore been concealed, some of the most exciting episodes in the picture take place.

By special arrangement, free run of the plant was given to Charles H. France, director of "The Yellow Eel." For several of the "shots" he used virtually the entire personnel of the factory as "extras," numbering hundreds of men and women workers, and making crowd scenes of exampled inaquitude.

"The Yellow Eel" will be something more than a red-blooded motion picture serial of love and mystery. It will aim to depict the romance and sacrifice behind America's patriotic army of munition and ordnance laborers who backed the soldiers at the front with guns and shells. Through the close co-operation of the government, the McClure staff was able to get access to the inside facts, so that, although the story of "The Yellow Eel" is in fiction form, the adventures which befall the heroine, played by Alice Mann, are typical of the daring feats performed to thwart America's enemies at home.

Complete Studio Work on Second Thomas-Raver Film

GEORGE IRVING, director of Four-Star Pictures, announces the completion of the newest Augustus Thomas picture starring Leah Baird for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, the title of which will shortly be announced.

While there has been a good deal of mystery about the story, Harry Raver, the producer, and Mr. Thomas, both having refused to disclose it so far, an idea of the motif is to be had from some recent manifestations inside and outside the studio.

For instance, when the transport Finland docked ten days ago it developed that Irving and several prominent members of the company had boarded the ship at Quarantine and made pictures all the way up the bay, while the "brass-hats" looked on approvingly and the 3,500 soldiers aboard displayed delight.

There s another angle to the new production which suggests the sort of action it contains. More than 400 men participated in the big raid scene, where anarchist talkers incited the crowd to violence.

"Misleading Widow" Is New Paramount.

"Billeted," the play by T. Jennyson-Jesse and H. M. Harwood, which Frances Marion adapted for Paramount presentation with Billie Burke as the star, has been retitled "The Misleading Widow."

Work on Miss Burke's picture is progressing finely at the Fort Lee studio under the direction of John S. Robertson. James L. Crane was chosen as leading man.

Madge Evans
As she appears in "Home Wanted," World's feature, directed by Tefft Johnson

"All Wrong" Is Ninth of Pathe's Selected Pictures

NINTH in the list of Pathe's Extra Selected Star Photoplays comes Bryant Washburn in "All Wrong," a breezy comedy in five acts by Mildred Considine, which will be released June 1. It was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company from a scenario by Jack Cunningham and was directed by William Worthington and Raymond B. West.

There are many farcical situations contained in the comedy, while at the same time there is a certain amount of pathos felt on behalf of the unsophisticated little girl-wife, who obediently agrees to the idealistic theories of the altruistic salesman she married. It is a unique plot wherein the hero advances his theory of "Unending Courtship," advocating the living apart of man and wife, in order to, as he says, "escape the contempt bred by too close an association."

Numerous complications develop, some of which resolve themselves into compromising situations of the most ludicrous type, which, while being absolutely innocent, have a prima facie aspect of being quite the reverse.

In the supporting cast are Mildred Davis as "Betty"; Helen Dunbar as "Mrs. Thompson"; Charles Bennet, Fred Montague and Marguerite Livingston.

Northern Drama for Madlaine Traverse.

A drama of the Canadian Northwest, wherein a woman's soul is pitted against the greed for gold, is now being filmed with Madlaine Traverse as the star. "Until Eternity" is the temporary title, and both story and scenario were written by Denison Clift. The picture is being directed for William Fox by Harry Millard.

In this drama of the Northern snows, Miss Traverse enacts the role of Rose LeBelle, Mother of Angela, a beautiful girl, and wife of a timber prospector.

In the supporting cast are Frank Leigh, Thomas Santshi, Beatrice Laplante, Minna Provost and Jack Nelson. The exteriors are particularly beautiful.

A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

"A Rogue's Romance"

Vitagraph Picture With French Setting and Earle Williams as Hero.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

LACK of real climax is the weakness of the new Vitagraph picture, "A Rogue's Romance," five reels, with Earle Williams, who has the personality for the role. He is well supported, the sets and backgrounds are interesting, there is an especially good Apache dance in the opening scene, but the picture as a whole is a fair to middling attraction. The story interests rather than grips. There are many lesser climaxes, but no one of them is developed so as to have an increasing suspense that is marked in all the recent Vitagraph pictures. It will get by all right in many houses; for it has all a big attraction has, except a big story.

The Story.

The hero of "A Rogue's Romance" is Jules Marier, a Paris thief so skillful that the police cannot get him. He has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre, and loves children. He is so popular with the underworld people that they are quick to warn him when the police are expected.

He makes an Apache jealous, and this man tells the prefect that Marier is at a certain restaurant. He would have been captured had a message not come that one of his adopted orphans, whom he had picked up among refugees, is sick. He leaves, and saves himself.

On the way to see this child, his car breaks down, and he enters the house of a rich jeweler, Deprenay, to get a car. Mlle. Vire is alone. She believes he is on a mission of mercy, and lets him take the car. It is returned next day. The police are following, and he is nearly captured. The number of the car is taken. When the prefect gets to the Deprenays, it has been returned.

A little later Marier is introduced to Vire at a party as M. DuBois. Vire recognizes his voice. There is a crooked promoter there, and Marier recognizes him. A necklace is stolen. Vire suspects Marier. He proves innocence and gets back the gems. Vire has told him that when he wins from society as fine a recognition as he got on the field of battle, she will be his friend.

He learns that the crooked promoter has a scheme to swindle the community out of millions and, posing as a detective from Scotland Yard, helps the prefect get the money back. Vire and he ride away in an automobile.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Thrilling Story of a French Crook Who is Won Back to Respectability by the Love of a Girl.

After Winning the Croix de Guerre He Was Still a Thief Until Love Came Into His Life and Redeemed Him.

Highly Dramatic Story of a French Thief and His Up-hill Fight Back to Respectability for the Sake of the Woman He Loved.

Clever and Absorbing Story of the Adventures of a French Crook Who Won Recognition from Society Both in War and in Peace.

Advertising Angles: Play up Williams in his triple role and connect with his Arsene Lupin, stating that this is a similar character. Play up individual angles of the story such as "A society crook with the Croix de Guerre." "A thief with three war orphans as his wards," "Set a thief to catch a thief. Mons. Picard prevented a far greater thievery than he ever planned." Make a strong play with the stills and use character cuts for your advertising.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Window cards. Lobby display, 11x14 and 22x28. Heralds. Slides. Plan book. Press sheet.

The Hindus once more regain possession of the idol in this number, and are about to remove the stripes from the countenance of Tiger Face, when the idol is once more stolen. There is a prolonged chase over some picturesque mountain country after Randolph Gordon, who takes refuge in a cave. Belle pursues him, and is bound in a chamber of the mine, which Gordon allows to fill slowly with water. Jack is going to the rescue as the second reel closes. The instalment is one of about the usual interest.

A PRISONER FOR LIFE (Western), May 12.—A two-reel subject, featuring Eddie Polo and Eileen Sedgwick. Eddie appears as a squatter named "Black Jack," who makes a strong fight for his rights against armed aggression. In the course of the story he kidnaps his own boy. This is full of good scenes and tells a better story than the average of its kind.

THE PHANTOM FUGITIVE (Universal), May 19.—A two-reel subject, featuring Eddie Polo, Eileen Sedgwick and Joe La Cruz. This opens with election day scenes at Sunset City and goes on to picture the exciting manner in which Eddie helps to clean up a nest of bandits. This is a characterictic Western and abounds in action and adventure.

THE WILD RIDER (Universal), May 26.—Eddie Polo gets his shirt off in this two-reel Western subject, which is full of the dash and spirit that characterized the serial "Liberty." The plot concerns a kidnapped girl, portrayed by Eileen Sedgwick. There are some splendid riding scenes and the story has good suspense.

TWO MEN OF TINTED BUTTE (Western). May 31.—This two-reel subject is more original than convincing. It will hold the interest closely, in spite of weak construction, because of some unusual dramatic episodes, such as the cloud burst and the hero's adventures. The studio effects may be easily detected in this, but some of them are nevertheless very interesting. Jack Perrin, Walt Whitman and Patricia Fox are in the cast.

FRISKY LIONS AND WICKED HUSBANDS (Century Comedy), May 28.—This two-reel comic sets a new mark for the Century brand. It is a sure-fire laugh producer and hasn't a questionable situation in it. A burro, two goats, a dog, a baby and a full grown lion appear, aided and abetted by numerous human beings. The action is entirely minus a plot, but delightfully absurd and will bring screams of laughter in places. This will tickle any audience with a liking for comics.

An Announcement

OUR ACTIVITIES for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

STORIES WANTED

The Universal is in the market for stories—not ordinary stories but extraordinary stories. We want that type of story that makes folks sit up nights and lose sleep.

We want red-blooded stories about people and things. We want stories that will look as good on the screen as they do to your mind's eyes as you peruse them.

We want human-interest stories, the kind that will make folks walk three miles thru the snow and sleet to get a chance to pay their good, hard-earned money to see them.

Such stories are to be had. Such stories are going to be written now the same as in days gone by. If you know of such stories, tell us about them. If you know who writes such stories, put him in communication with us.

We will pay and pay well for the right kind, BUT they must be the right kind. No half way or "nearly good" stories accepted. We are setting the pace with superfine screen productions and we want the best there is to be had to enable us to continue the lead we now have.

CHICAGO MAKES IT UNANIMOUS

CHICAGO TRIBUNE (Mae Tinee): I chuckled for an hour. You excitedly accompany Mabel Normand through a series of incidents that give her a chance to exercise every fascination that is peculiarly hers. She's a gawky hoyden; she's a spoiled child; she's Mary Pickford; she's Charlie Chaplin. Mabel in "When Doctors Disagree" is "the old Mabel"—to the delight of everybody.

CHICAGO AMERICAN (Rob Reel): Mabel Normand's whooping it up and the audience whoops right along with her, game for anything. Mabel goes the limit. "When Doctors Disagree" is funnier and rowdier than "Sis Hopkins."

CHICAGO EVENING POST: Here is Mabel Normand as her admirers love her. Her Nillie Martin in this picture is "Peck's Bad Girl" and "Sis Hopkins" rolled into one, with something added. "When Doctors Disagree" is very funny indeed.

CHICAGO HERALD & EXAMINER: Roughest of the rough, most gawky of the gawks, grotesque, clownish, and yet somehow utterly pleasing to the eye, Miss Normand is funnier than any woman in films. With "When Doctors Disagree" to add to her phenomenal success, there seems to be nothing between Mabel and the Croix De Cutup-

LEAVE IT TO SUSAN

By Rex Taylor

Directed by Clarence G. Badger

"When Madgie left her train to Give her dog a run—doggonit!
The train sailed merrily away
Without Miss Madgie on it

And there she was right out in the middle of the desert and everything with nothing but her dog and her fur cape to keep her company."

That's the way Mae Tinee, the none-too-susceptible critic of the Chicago Tribune, felt about "Leave It to Susan." It drove her to poetry.

And then she continued:

"This is a darling of a picture—an interesting, cleverly told, human story. The whole effect is to send you forth purring. Nobody rubs you the wrong way."

That is the verdict wherever Madge Kennedy has been shown in "Leave It to Susan."

It is another link in that long, strong chain of successes that binds Madge Kennedy to the affections of millions of admirers.

More enduring than tablets of bronze is the hold that these master-artists have on the minds and affections of the millions. To them has come the supreme tribute of the seekers of happiness and the better things of life—men, women and children alike—who have enshrined them in their hearts for all time.

And that they may give to the full as their art grows in its maturing richness, they have dedicated themselves to making the motion picture screen free—an unfettered medium for all that is best in life's play hours.

To make the pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith available to the entire film world without the restrictions and obligations and limitations of the program and star series systems of film rental, United Artists Corporation has been created.

Each production—as nearly perfect as human skill and genius and art can make it—will be rented on its own individual merits.

United Artists Corporation thus guarantees to Exhibitors their full freedom in the booking and exploiting of the screen's supreme productions. It gives to them the opportunity to reap the full benefits of their own ability as showmen.

Mr. R. H. Clark,
General Manager,
First National Exchange of New York,
501 Fifth Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Clark:-

After reading the box office reports from twenty-five of the Loew Theatres in New York City which have played the First National attraction, "Auction of Souls", I feel that it is only fair to tell you that this production, without a single exception, is the biggest business getter that has ever played our theatres.

We have shown several really big specials, but "Auction of Souls" is the greatest of them all, as a production, as a story, for its phenominal appeal, and, of equal importance, as a box office energizer.

Yours very truly,

Marcus Loew

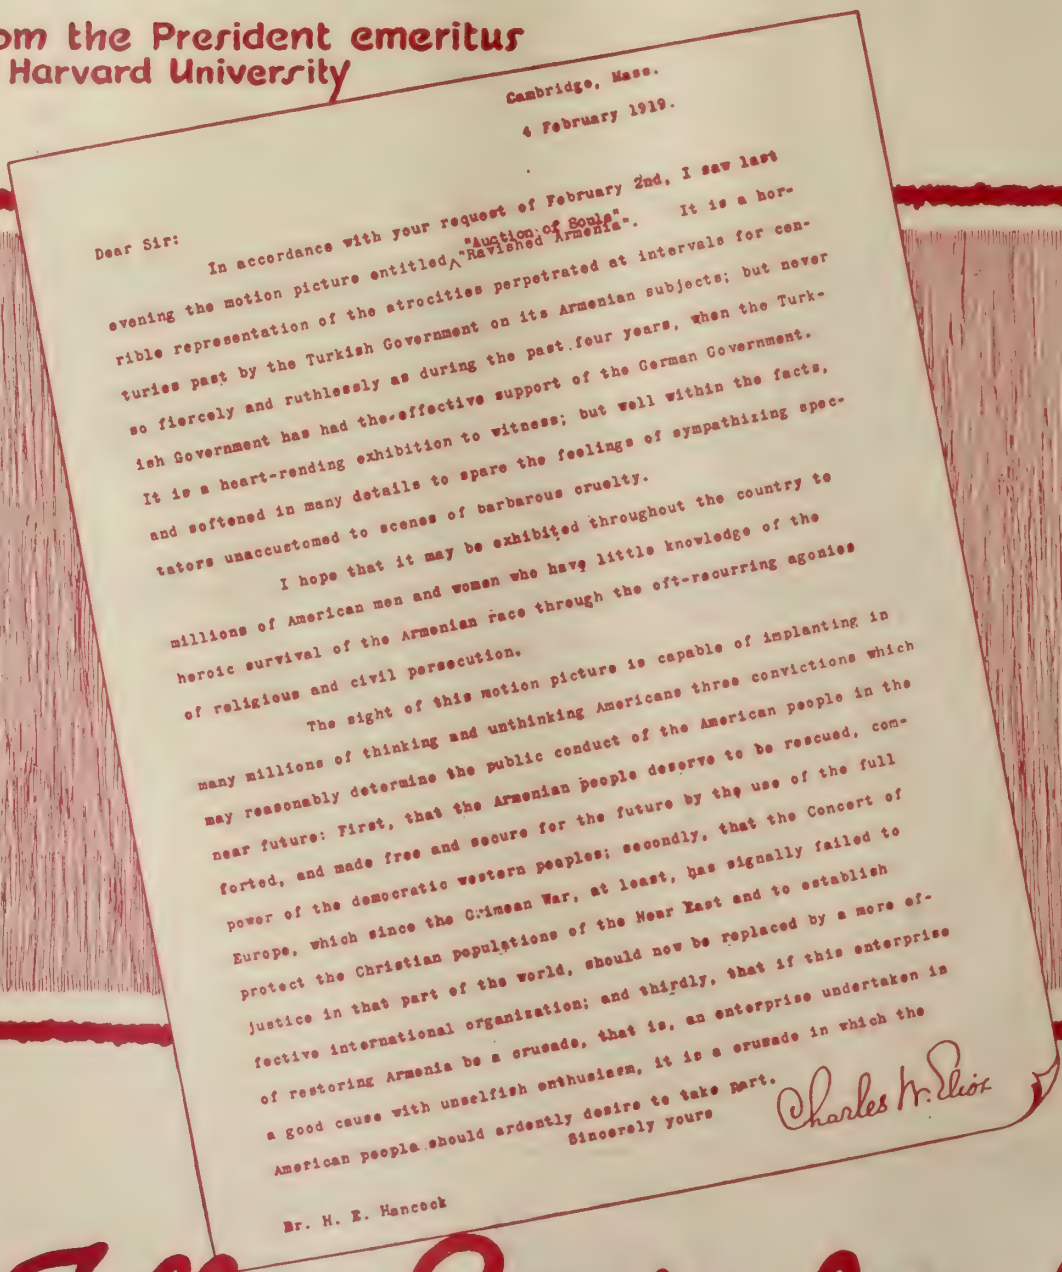
From the President emeritus of Harvard University



Cambridge, Mass.
4 February 1919.

Dear Sir:

In accordance with your request of February 2nd, I saw last evening the motion picture entitled "Auction of Souls" "Ravished Armenia". It is a horrible representation of the atrocities perpetrated at intervals for centuries past by the Turkish Government on its Armenian subjects; but never so fiercely and ruthlessly as during the past four years, when the Turkish Government has had the effective support of the German Government. It is a heart-rending exhibition to witness; but well within the facts, and softened in many details to spare the feelings of sympathizing spectators unaccustomed to scenes of barbarous cruelty.

I hope that it may be exhibited throughout the country to millions of American men and women who have little knowledge of the heroic survival of the Armenian race through the oft-recurring agonies of religious and civil persecution.

The sight of this motion picture is capable of implanting in many millions of thinking and unthinking Americans three convictions which may reasonably determine the public conduct of the American people in the near future: First, that the Armenian people deserve to be rescued, comforted, and made free and secure for the future by the use of the full power of the democratic western peoples; secondly, that the Concert of Europe, which since the Crimean War, at least, has signally failed to protect the Christian populations of the Near East and to establish justice in that part of the world, should now be replaced by a more effective international organization; and thirdly, that if this enterprise of restoring Armenia be a crusade, that is, an enterprise undertaken in a good cause with unselfish enthusiasm, it is a crusade in which the American people should ardently desire to take part.

Sincerely yours

Charles W. Eliot

SPECIAL REPORT of
The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures
70 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY

To National M.P.Com. of American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay "Auction of Souls" From Ravished Armenia reviewed by The National Board of Review on January 26, 1919 was as follows:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE Impressive.. EDUCATIONAL VALUE Unusual

ARTISTIC VALUE: Dramatic interest of story Gripping Coherence of narrative Convincing Acting Inspiring Photography Excellent
Technical handling Good Costuming (if period production) Sincere Atmospheric quality—Scenic setting Life like Historical value (if period production) Admirable

MORAL EFFECT Elevating

GENERAL COMMENT: A frank straight-forward exposition of sufferings of Armenia which makes a sincere and powerful appeal to every drop of red blood in America's manhood and womanhood.

THE FUNCTIONS OF MOTION PICTURE REVIEW.

The critics of the motion picture advise regarding morally objectionable elements before they are presented to the public. They bring to the picture the judgment of the typical audience. They appreciate the necessity of liberty of speech and liberty of creation. Under no circumstances must these be curtailed. The critics must give all liberty to ideas presented through the drama, matters of propaganda, historic interpretation, tragedy, comedy, current events, etc. At the same time society, which is being amused, entertained or inspired, must be given the right to register ethical convictions. The National Board of Review through its members aims to perform this service for society with broad-mindedness, liberality and even-handed justice. It avoids enforcing personal opinions. It does not believe in coercion. It searches diligently for fundamental convictions and renders decisions which it is convinced will have broad public support. Though it is a voluntary extra-legal body having no legal power resident in itself, its decisions become effective through the crystallization of public opinion regarding the treatment of the subjects represented, and which it seeks to gauge and reflect through the cooperation of official and non-official correspondents of the National Board of Review in all parts of the country.

NOTE:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE—This term applies to all that which is entertaining or interest-holding.
EDUCATIONAL VALUE—This term applies to pictures that are instructive in science, industry, travel, and the presentation and interpretation of great classics, or that are illustrative of customs of people and ways of living of different classes of society past and present.
MORAL EFFECT—This applies to the moral effect of the picture either consciously or unconsciously produced.
ARTISTIC VALUE—This term is interpreted broadly to include the acting, the drama itself, the stage setting, artistic out door scenes and scenery, the appropriateness of the production to the story treated, the costuming, and the absence of incongruous elements.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY:

New York Morning Telegraph: Catherine Calvert is seen at her best in the new adaptation from the French by E. Lloyd Sheldon, "Marriage For Convenience." The drama is well visualized and excellently well staged.

The Chicago Evening American: Catherine Calvert displays extraordinary versatility in her work under the Keeney flag in "Marriage For Convenience." The play is well built and it has been most advantageously pictured. Miss Calvert's acting leaves nothing to be desired.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

The NEW YORK WORLD says:

"The Son of a Gun" is one of Anderson's best bits of work. It takes one out of the crowded streets into the wide spaces and face to face with odd human crises seldom met with in Broadway.

The SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER says:

"Red Blood and Yellow," one of the latest of Gilbert Anderson's quick trigger shows, seems to be just as popular with the proletariat as have been all other "Broncho Billy" offerings. "Red and Yellow" has a regular story, and a very good one at that.

RALPH RUFFNER GOES TO SAN FRANCISCO

Butte Manager Leaves Jensen and Von Herberg to Assume Management of Rialto Theatre on the Coast

RALPH R. RUFFNER. one of motion picture's most sensational advertisers, has closed his long connection with Jensen and Von Herberg, and June 1 he will assume the management of the Rialto Theatre, in San Francisco, having closed his connection with the Rialto Theatre, Butte, Mont., last Sunday.

He goes to a house with the same name, but under a different management, and he will probably make his presence felt in the West Coast metropolis. In Butte he has done some remarkable stunts, as told in these pages from time to time. The Rialto there boasts the first theatrical advertisement to aviators, painted upon the roof. He persuaded the local fire department to give him a three-day ballyhoo for "The Still Alarm," and he there brought to perfection the Patron's Chorus, which he was using long before the War Camp Community Service gave its attention to the value of chorus singing on the morale of the army. For years he had used this feature on and off, chiefly at his midnight matinees (which he also originated in motion picture theatres), but with the outbreak of the war he made it a permanent feature and is still practically the only manager to conduct these sings entirely without a leader, trusting to slides to keep the patrons singing.

But Butte offered but a limited field for his activities, and the altitude did not agree with Mrs. Ruffner, who has been seriously ill. Jensen and Von Herberg could offer him no Coast house at the moment, and so he signed up with the Rialto, San Francisco, regretting only that he passes from the employ of a firm he has served for many years. His own letter expresses it with his usual briskness when he writes: "I think Jensen and Von Herberg are sorry to see me go—and I'm sorry, too. They are as fine a pair, as BIG a pair as the business possesses, but I am buried in Butte and we all must progress, for the guy who slows down is lost."

In San Francisco Mr. Ruffner will be able to plan all of his own advertising instead of utilizing the cuts made by the other houses in the circuit which first played the release, and interesting developments are to be expected, though Ruffner's chief value to a house does not lie so much in his advertising as in the many wrinkles of house management which are more potent local advertisements than mere newspaper spreads.

John Flinn Goes West.

John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky, left for California on Tuesday, May 27. Mr. Flinn was called away suddenly. It is said Mr. Flinn has in mind many innovations for personal service to the exhibitors that will help them materially.

Fisher Finds M. P. World Authority in Singapore

A LETTER from Joe Fisher in Singapore, Straits Settlements, brings the good news that he is general manager of Middle East Films, Ltd., associated with African Films, African Theatres, India Films and African Film Productions.

Mr. Fisher was formerly owner of Fisher's Bioscope in Cape Town, South Africa, but sold the theatre last August to become associated with Middle East Films. Isador Fisher, his brother, is also connected with the same firm.

The operations of the Middle East company cover the territories of the Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States, Netherlands Indies, British Borneo, Siam, Saigon, Philippines and China. The opportunities for unique moving picture experience, according to Mr. Fisher, are hardly short of wonderful.

Besides motion pictures, Mr. Fisher's company is also handling theatrical enterprises. The Moving Picture World in the Far East, Mr. Fisher states, is the mainstay of exhibitor information, as it has been in all his extended travels.

SCHENECTADY VOTES TO OPEN SUNDAYS

Common Council, After Hearing Arguments, Decides 8 to 5 to Grant Plea of Exhibitors

MONDAY, May 26, the Common Council of Schenectady, N. Y., at its regular meeting decided in favor of the Sunday opening of moving picture houses by a vote of 8 to 5. This victory is the more complete in that it ends several years of litigation. So another big city goes over the top.

This question, which is now becoming general in all the municipalities of the state under the new local option law, was taken up in a special hearing before the Common Council of Schenectady on the evening of May 23. A large number of citizens filled the Council Chamber, where a full attendance of Aldermen came prepared to listen to thorough presentation of both sides of the issues. Leaders in local religious thought were in charge of the opposition, although the number of clergymen present was limited. Evidently they felt satisfied to be "represented."

Ralph R. Ruffner.

As usual the weight of argument and reason, together with a courteous presentation of the case, lay with the proponents, who received a most favorable reception.

The opposition was as irritable as ever, dealing in personalities and using expressions which in kindness to them will not be recorded here. Suffice it to say that after the hearing a large number of citizens remained to congratulate the proponents upon their conduct of the debate and to apologize that visitors should have received such scant courtesy from their fellow-townsmen.

The Rev. W. H. Jackson, of the Moving Picture World, was given all the time he required, especially in rebuttal, where he was particularly successful in refuting the fictitious ideas opposing him.

Schenectady Managers to Contest Veto by Mayor

Albany, May 28.

MAYOR CHARLES A. SIMON, of Schenectady, last night vetoed the ordinance adopted by the Schenectady common council Monday night permitting Sunday motion picture shows. Managers of two of Schenectady's motion picture houses have booked pictures for next Sunday and plan to test the validity of the mayor's veto on the ground that the state law does not require that the mayor shall approve the ordinance once adopted by the common council, that body, it being contended, being the direct representative of the people at large.

BRIGHT PROMISE FOR JUBILEE BANQUET

Testimonial to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman Evening of June 18 Will Be Assuredly Big Affair

CHARLES HARING, secretary of the committee to tender a testimonial banquet to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman at the Waldorf-Astoria on the evening of Wednesday, June 18, having sent out a number of letters to the most influential and active exhibitors in the State of New York to act on the committee to enlist attendance at this affair, is in receipt up to this writing of over fifty answers.

Each one of the exhibitors who have so far answered the call couch their letters in the most enthusiastic terms. They all express the necessity of the exhibitors coming to this banquet to pay tribute to these three men who by their unceasing efforts paved the way to the legalizing of the exhibition of pictures on Sunday.

It is also evident from the quick response to Secretary Haring's letters that this affair will take rank with the biggest meeting of exhibitors of the State of New York, and it is also evident that it will take precedence in the matter of enthusiasm and unanimity of purpose over any other banquet or convention ever held in this state in which the exhibitors of New York were a party.

That there will be large attendance from up-state is assured. Already a number of the boxes have been spoken for, so that it is expected that many of the wives of members of the fraternity outside of the city of New York will grace the affair with their presence. A number of features will be introduced on that evening different than any seen heretofore at conventions and banquets, but the nature of them is being held a secret by Chairman William Fox and his immediate associates, but on one point Mr. Fox is positive, and that is: "A pleasant time will be had by all."

Whitaker Will Represent Big Four in Washington

V. P. WHITAKER, who has been closely identified with film rental in the Washington (D. C.) territory and Southern points for the past six years, has been appointed sales manager of the distributing depot which United Artists Corporation will open in Washington.

Mr. Whitaker is the first depot sales manager to be engaged by Hiram Adams, general manager of United Artists. Mr. Abrams is building the sales organization gradually, selecting the men with great care, in the hope that when the personnel is rounded out United Artists will have a sales force of specialists.

The six years of service in the Washington exchange field that Mr. Whitaker has to his credit covers a longer period than any man's in the territory, it is said, and his selection to establish United Artists' Washington depot should prove a popular choice with the theatremen in that section of the country.

Sunday Closing at Capital.

Washington will be closed very tightly if Congress passes the bill which has been introduced by Senator Jones, of Washington, providing for the "proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia." The measure provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to labor or to employ any person to labor or pursue any trade or worldly business on Sunday, except in newspaper work and public services.

Failure to comply with the provisions of the act are to be punishable by a fine of from $10 to $50 for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense by a fine of from $25 to $100, and by imprisonment in jail for from one to three months.

Local exhibitors are already making their plans to fight the measure.

Rubye De Remer Signs Contract with World Film

FLUSHED with success as the star in "Fires of Fate," now running at the Harris Theatre, New York, Rubye De Remer announces that she has signed contracts with World Pictures to star in a series of productions for that company. Her initial picture will be "Dust of Desire," written by Forrest Halsey, the well known novelist, playwright and short story writer.

Rubye de Remer.

Miss De Remer began her screen work in a World Film picture with Marie Dressler in "Tillie Wakes Up." Her second engagement saw her elevation to stellar honors in "Enlighten Thy Daughter." Her beauty attracted the attention of Florenz Ziegfeld and she became a member of the Midnight Frolic under his direction. While appearing in this attraction she was seen by Rex Beach, who engaged her to create the principal role in a picture version of his novel, "The Auction Block." When she had finished with this attraction she was engaged by Weber & Fields as one of the principals in their musical comedy "Back Again." At the termination of her contract she was engaged as leading woman for Harold Lockwood in his productions of "Pals First" and "The Greater Romance."

Following this Miss De Remer costarred with Mitchell Lewis in "Safe For Democracy." Her work won her an engagement with William Farnum when he starred in "For Freedom."

Alice Brady Is Wedded to James Crane, Actor

ALICE BRADY was married on Tuesday evening, May 20, to James L. Crane, the actor. Dr. Frank Crane, father of the bridegroom, performed the ceremony at the Crane residence. The bridegroom's mother and sister were Miss Brady's attendants.

William A. Brady, who is in London with Mrs. Brady (Grace George), was notified by cable of his daughter's wedding immediately after the ceremony, and the young couple the following day received Mr. and Mrs. Brady's cabled congratulations.

Miss Brady and Mr. Crane have been engaged for some time and had not originally intended being married until after the return of Mr. and Mrs. Brady from London. The fact that Miss Brady will continue indefinitely in "Forever After," the play in which she is appearing at the Playhouse, and that Mr. Crane's professional engagements make imperative his presence in the city also for some time to come, resulted in their decision to be married at once.

Sunday "Services" in Winnipeg.

Sunday moving picture performances have been introduced in Winnipeg theatres, although there is a law against Sunday shows in the Province of Manitoba, of which Winnipeg is the capital. These performances consist of services in several theatres and the features of these services are moving pictures. Winnipeg people have taken kindly to these shows.

At one of these shows in Winnipeg, the music was supplied by a four-piece orchestra and the "program" consisted of an introductory reel, a Burton Holmes' travelogue, two hymns, the words of which were projected on the screen by means of slides, a vocal solo, a short sermon by Rev. Bruce Thornton and finally a feature, Marguerite Snow in "Rosemary," a five-reel release. This service was held under the direction of a local clergyman, Rev. George F. Salton.

Strikers Issue Theatre "Permits."

Winnipeg, Manitoba, became isolated from the outside world as a result of the general strike of all organized workers which was called in that city to secure a universal eight-hour day and other concessions. The business of the city came almost to a dead stop, but it was not long before the strike committee which assumed the management of local operations decided to issue "permits" to local moving picture theatres to conduct their usual performances. These permits enabled the union operators and other union men employed by exhibitors to remain at work. It was felt that the usual operation of the theatres would provide a necessary diversion.

Moving Picture World covers its field like a picture covers the screen. It is read in every country and in every clime.

SUNDAY SHOWS EXCITE WATERTOWN

Council Passes Measure by Vote of 8 to 3 and Now Takes Steps to Override Mayor's Veto

Albany, May 27.

PASSED by the common council by a vote of 8 to 3, vetoed by the mayor, and with the council now attempting to override the mayor's veto, the fight for Sunday motion pictures in Watertown, N. Y., has become the question of the hour in the northern city and the one chief topic of conversation. When the question of Sunday motion pictures was voted on at last week's common council meeting, the city hall was not large enough to hold the hundreds that thronged the building to support one side or the other. So vigorous did the talk become that the police were called upon to hold the crowd to some semblance of order. In no place in the Empire State, since Governor Smith signed the bill, has there been a greater agitation both for and against Sunday movies than in Watertown.

Mayor Against Sunday Shows.

Mayor I. R. Breen vetoed Tuesday night's action of the common council last Friday. At the same time, the mayor approved the ordinance which will give Watertown Sunday baseball. The mayor claimed that there was no necessity for Sunday motion pictures in Watertown. Petitions bearing 3,281 names had been filed by those opposing the opening of Watertown's motion picture houses on Sunday, while 1,252 names were contained on the petitions favoring Sunday shows.

In his memorandum, accompanying his veto, Mayor Breen stated that the opening of Sunday movies in Watertown would be the entering wedge for other places of amusement to petition the council for the right to open, including pool and billiard rooms, as well as the dancehalls.

Pastors Urge Defeat of Measure.

Pastors in all of the churches of Watertown last Sunday urged their congregations to defeat the ordinance which has been passed by the common council, and as a result the eight aldermen who favored Sunday shows were obliged to take refuge on Sunday afternoon and evening and flee the city in their automobiles. In some of the churches, cards addressed to the aldermen were passed around and something more than 500 were signed, which petitioned the aldermen not to attempt to override the mayor's veto. GRANT.

Powers Film Products Buys Building Occupied by Firm

ANNOUNCEMENT was made on Monday, May 26, in Rochester that P. A. Powers, acting for the Powers Film Products Company, of that city, had arranged for the purchase of the land and buildings now occupied by the company. The land comprises about six acres and is bounded by Dewey, Ridgeway and Knickerbocker avenues and Primrose street.

The plant was formerly occupied by the defunct Fireproof Film Company and after being idle for a long time was taken over by the Powers company about a year ago. The land, buildings and power house are valued at close to $1,000,000. It was also announced that the company is contemplating the erection of additional buildings to cost in the neighborhood of $500,000.

During the time that the company has been in business the output of the plant has grown steadily and the operating force has been increased accordingly. Officers of the company say that the proposed new buildings are absolutely necessary to take care of the growing business of the company.

THREE OPINIONS ON OPEN BOOKINGS

Picture Showmen Express Themselves On the Subject—Freedom in Choice of Films Declared to Be Fairest

By George W. Trendle,
General Manager of the John H. Kunsky Circuit of Theatres, Detroit.

In reply to your request for an opinion regarding the advantage or disadtage of booking on the open market, rather than contracting for a program, as has been done in the past, I want to say very emphatically that we are for the open booking.

We find that through independent booking we are enabled to provide a consistent run of high-class attractions from week to week without being obliged to show pictures to our patrons which we know will not be satisfying; i. e., under the old program scheme we were obliged to take three mediocre productions to get one high-grade one, and we were also obliged to show three poor pictures to our patrons out of every four productions exhibited, and in this way, while we kept down the cost of the rental on the one extraordinary picture, our average business was reduced greatly in excess of the saving.

On the scheme of open booking we find that we are enabled to pay almost twice what we would ordinarily pay for high-grade pictures, as we find that by showing one good picture after another the attendance at the theatre increases to a point where the actual cost of the production means nothing in comparison to the amount of business it will draw. To go further, I might say to make it more explicit, we would much rather pay $2,000 for a good production than to pay $150 for a fair one, as the increased patronage during the week would more than make up the difference. I believe you will find that in going to the exhibitors who have tried out this policy that they will agree with me in every particular.

By Charles L. Galster,
Manager Palace Theatre Company, of Petoskey, Mich.

We are heartily in favor of the program star series and are sure that practically 100 per cent. of the exhibitors who are any distance from Detroit are in the same boat that we are in this matter. On account of us being some distance from Detroit, it is impossible for us to book to any extent openly.

If we were located in Detroit or a couple of hours' ride out from that city it would be an easy matter for us to get in touch with the different managers, and in that way we could possibly get on a working basis of strictly open booking. I also think that open booking is more expensive to the exhibitor, as it necessitates the selling of each film by itself, whereas on the other method you sell your service for an indefinite period.

By Jack Rosenthal,
Model Theatre, Philadelphia.

Being an exhibitor in a portion of Philadelphia where there is keen competition, the article on the "single picture" booking policy expressing the views of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was read with a great deal of interest and appears to me as being the only logical manner of solving the "single picture" system of releasing.

I prefer the star series contract because it relieves me of considerable worry and money. With the competition that I have to contend with it would be foolish for me to rent a Mary Pickford, an Anita Stewart, or any other production in which a well-known star were cast, on the single picture basis. To do this I would play into the hands of my competitor, for should I do a wonderful business with the picture and not be secured on the next release in which these stars appeared, where would I be? It would mean that I would have to compete in the rental price with my competitor and probably pay a much higher price than before. Then, should I allow the film to be shown by my rival, he would gain by my publicity campaign in exploiting the first picture. I believe in protecting myself and always take good care to see that I am going to get all future releases of pictures in which a star appears after I have extensively exploited the first one.

There has never been much protection for exhibitors, but the plan advocated by Mr. Williams seems to me as being equitable and one that should be adhered to by exhibitors all over the country, especially where there is competition.

The method of booking independent, non-star attractions by the First National is an excellent thing, providing the subject filmed is timely and is released when it is being discussed by every one.

I believe Mr. Williams has raised the issue on a vital point and should be given the backing of every wide-awake exhibitor.

Tandler to Write Music for Romaine.

Adolph Tandler, conductor of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, is to write the special music for the Romayne Superfilm production of Upton Sinclair's book, "The Millennium," to be directed by Walter McNamara.

As the story deals entirely with the future Mr. Tandler is enthusiastic over the opportunity this production will give him of letting his inventive faculties have full rein in the composition of unique futuristic music.

OLSON CRIME THEORY BASIS OF FILM

Vitagraph to Develop in Photoplay Premise of Jurist That Criminal Defectives May Be Cured

THE third in a trilogy of police dramas filmed by Vitagraph is planned for production early in the fall by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. As in the first two, Alice Joyce will be starred. The vehicle will be based on the new methods of crime detection and correction as developed by the psychopathic laboratory of the Municipal Court of Chicago. It will complete Vitagraph's cycle of police dramas.

Albert E. Smith will supervise this production, which George Randolph Chester, production editor of Vitagraph, has been commissioned to write. Aside of the elements of novelty and "punch," according to Vitagraph's prognosis, the play will have a special significance to the law-making and law-enforcing bodies and individuals who specialize in criminology.

Chief Justice Harry Olson, of the Chicago Municipal Court, is in a way the sponsor for the picture. He is lending Mr. Smith aid in its production and has placed at his disposal the mass of information contained in the criminal archives of his court as well as lending his own knowledge of the subject to the project.

Commenting on this broad-minded stand of Judge Olson in lending not merely cognizance to Vitagraph's undertaking, but giving it virtually the stamp of official approval, Mr. Smith, who is just back from his West Coast trip and who stopped over in Chicago to consult Judge Olson, has this to say:

"Judge Olson is a man of powerful personality, magnetic, learned and, with all, human. He adjourned court when he learned that I was stopping over to discuss with him the subject of reducing to the screen the fruits of his investigation in the detection of mental defectives and the breeding of criminals that goes on with these dangerous specimens of human society at large."

Tom Terriss will direct the picture and that the principals supporting Miss Joyce will be picked from the Vitagraph stock forces.

Handwriting will figure as the great test of defectiveness in the plot of the forthcoming picture, supplanting, in a way, as the media of developing interest and suspense the employment of hypnosis in the Vitagraph version of "The Third Degree."

Select Pictures to Open Five New Branch Offices

SAM E. MORRIS, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has announced that his company will, in the near future, establish several new branches at points widely separated throughout the United States. The projected new exchanges are five in number and will be located at Albany, Salt Lake City, Indianapolis, New Haven, and in New York City, where a New Jersey exchange will be established quite separate from the New York exchange, already in operation.

Mr. Morris states that the purpose in establishing these exchanges is to render an even better service to exhibitors throughout the country than the service which Select exchanges have already been making. The points selected are those where it seems possible to improve existing conditions as regards shipments and delivery of prints and accessories. It is believed that these improvements will result in a faster service and a surer service, and will necessitate less handling of shipments of films than heretofore.

The establishment of the five exchanges will bring Select's list of branch offices in the United States up to a total of twenty-six.

Ben Schulberg Still Claims London Will Be Film "Hub"

B. P. SCHULBERG, who last week issued the statement by John D. Tippett that London would "in the future be the centre of the film markets of the world," in connection with the publication of which the Moving Picture World printed the views of film executives who did not agree with Mr. Tippett's prediction, now replies in the following manner:

"Mr. Williams' statement that 'the centre or pivotal point of any industry is at the centre of production' is all right as far as it goes, but it precludes altogether the possibility of the center of production being moved; it will therefore be recalled that the center of production of motion pictures was first France, then Italy, then New York and now Los Angeles. It is no further from France to California than from California to France.

"The assertion that 'London may have certain geographical advantages as a shipping and distributing point for world commerce in films, but it lacks climatic essentials for production' requires the explanation that the first half of his statement wins the argument for us, and the second half does not affect the issue, as one need not necessarily produce exteriors in London.

"We go to Florida for exteriors from New York, we can go to South England for exteriors from London, much quicker and more frequently; the fog is partial to London, and does not extend all over England; and France and Italy are much nearer London than Los Angeles is to New York.

He Answers Mr. Selznick.

"Coming to Mr. Selznick's comment: 'How can a man who has been engaged in selling motion pictures not know that New York is the center around which the entire motion picture industry revolves? He is like the fly on the center of a cart-wheel—unable to tell how much dust his own travel was raising.'

"Let me remind Mr. Selznick that no Roman ever believed the capital of the world would not always be Rome. No German believed in 1914 that Germany would ever be defeated. Occasionally, not only individuals, but large groups, and even whole nations, are wrong, and Mr. Selznick's witty remark does none the less alter the fact that London is the financial center of the world, and finance is always the basis of any industry, and even the motion picture business.

"I would like to conclude this reply with the reiteration that Mr. Tippett referred to London's future as the center of the 'film markets of the world.' The main market of an industry is not always, and in fact is very seldom, located in or adjacent to its biggest production centers. There is more oil sold at No. 26 Broadway every day than in all the oil fields of America."

More New York Incorporations.

Among the motion picture concerns incorporated in New York State during the past week, were: Traders Film Corporation, $500, Arthur Weil, Geo. W. Yates, Joseph R. Malcolm; Thanhouser Laboratories, $200,000, Vincent Peters, T. E. Donovan, Cyrus Brim; The G-M Film Printing Corporation, $1,000, Karl Kirchway, Jerome Michael, B. J. Longstreet; Screen Letter Box, $50,000, Jack and Harry Cohn and Tobias A. Keppler; Screen Smiles, $25,000, Samuel O. Siegel, H. H. Yudkin, Frances Weinberger; The Nicholas Kessel Laboratories, $25,000, Charles and Adam Kessel and M. C. Kenny; the Aechanam Theatre Company, $10,000, Joseph Stondell, Samuel L. Stern, Moe Albert; Reel of Knowledge, $50,000, Jack and Harry Cohn and T. A. Keppler; Tiger Film Corporation, $25,000, Florence Dale, Edward J. May, H. W. Ferrin; the Brewar Amusement Company, $4,000, Hustav and Anna Brett and Henry Wartholowitz.

You Have Until June 15.

Because of its inability to distribute the necessary forms in time to permit taxpayers to make their returns by May 31, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has announced an extension of time until June 15 in which exhibitors may file their reports of admissions under the new revenue law.

Because of the variety of new taxes in this law, the bureau has had to draft and have printed approximately a hundred forms. These forms have been drafted with extreme care, and frequent changes have been made with a view to securing a form which, while complete in every respect, was simple and easily filled out.

"True Heart Susie" Little Classic.

The newest D. W. Griffith production for Artcraft, "True Heart Susie," is one of Mr. Griffith's short story series.

Mr. Griffith has set down the characters of Pine Grove into a drama that is said to rank alongside his "Birth of a Nation." It is a new and quaint comedy, the comedy of naturalness, done as only Robert Harron, under Mr. Griffith's direction, can do; and a poignant touch of sorrow, done only as it can be done when D. W. Griffith directs Lillian Gish.

Films to Show Church Work.

Moving pictures of the rehearsals of the Children's Rally and the Folk Teams which will be the features of the Centenary Celebration of the Methodist Episcopal Church beginning June 20 at Columbus, Ohio, have been taken by the Pathé Weekly.

These pictures will be shown all through the country. They will illustrate phases of a five-year program of work throughout the world planned by the church and calling for the expenditure of $105,000,000.

KANSANS FORM NEW ORGANIZATION

State Exhibitors Association Grows Out of Convention at Hutchinson May 18-20—Has 200 Members on Its Rolls and $3,000 in Treasury—Miller Is President

KANSAS exhibitors have formed a new organization. They have gone about this job in a business-like way—and they have started off in a manner that promises the most effective work that has ever been undertaken in the state.

"The Kansas State Exhibitors' Association" is the name of this new organization, born, named, and put under way at Hutchinson, Kansas, May 18, 19, and 20. That it is firmly founded is sufficiently shown in the fact that it had $3,000 in its treasury before the second day was over, with more than 200 exhibitors on the rolls. Some of these were unable to attend the convention—but their membership was brought by others, with the substantial assurances of their co-operation.

Another preliminary picture, showing the spirit and atmosphere of this convention:

Seek Good Conditions For All.

"They are aiming and seeking to bring about the best conditions for all branches of the industry. There is nothing selfish in their purposes or plans. It is the birth of a high-minded and strong organization that can show what exhibitors can do under the higher ideals that prevail today."

That's putting it in the words of Dave Rogers, national organizer and the leading spirit in the Hutchinson convention.

The convention opened informally Sunday, May 18—an auspicious day for the beginning of such work. It was a beautiful day, full of Kansas sunshine—outdoors. A dozen or fifteen of the early arrivals did not see much of this sunshine, though, for they plunged into the task of helping the local exhibitors wade through a pile of work. A contest had been put on, twenty-five local firms contributing a month's stay in California for a try-out with one of the producers. The winner, Miss Gladys Parker, received more than a million votes, so it is easy to see that there was some job doing the counting.

Sunday evening the visitors were entertained at the Royal Theatre with a private exhibition of "Daddy Long Legs," Lee Balsly, of the First National, having brought the film for the opening feature of the convention.

Robinson Opens Convention.

The convention was opened in the Chamber of Commerce rooms at 10 o'clock Monday morning by W. C. Robinson, manager of the Royal Theatre—and he was given a cordial ovation—because everybody present knew how he and Fred Savage, of the DeLuxe, had worked to make the meeting a success. Mr Robinson simply declared that the crowd was here now and ready for business—and introduced Dave Rogers as the temporary presiding officer.

H. A. McClure, of Emporia, the newest of the last crop of new exhibitors, was appointed temporary secretary.

The morning session had been informal, representatives of the exchanges being present. In the afternoon the exhibitors met by themselves, for greater freedom of discussion. It should be stated, however, that it was not a "star chamber session" in that the various exchanges were discussed, for so far as heard by the majority of those present, no exchange was mentioned. The exhibitors had big things to attend to, and did not permit any individual grievances to intrude.

Senator Thompson Welcomes.

The address of welcome to Hutchinson was delivered by State Senator Will. S. Thompson, who spoke many pleasant things about the moving picture industry and its part in the education, as well as the entertainment of adults and children.

The South Comes North.
Mrs. Baron in the center; Mr. Baron and a friend from Augusta, Ga.

Mr. Rogers kept the chair only long enough to get the organization into official shape to handle itself, which was as far as the election of a president. J. M. Miller, owner of the Palace and Princess theatres at Wichita, was chosen to head the new Kansas organization. R. T. Liggett, of the Gauntier theatre, Kansas City, was elected vice-president; Mrs. Charles Baron, of the Isis, Augusta, secretary, and William Meyn, of the Photorium, Kansas City, treasurer.

Various committees were appointed Monday afternoon, to bring in suggestions on the lines of work which the association should undertake.

Ball Held Monday Evening.

Monday night was full of entertainment, there being sufficient varieties so that every visitor had ample scope for his tastes. The leading feature was the ball at Convention Hall, an event that the Hutchinson social circles had been eagerly awaiting. A program of vaudeville started the program. There were the impersonations of famous screen stars too, though there were only five persons who ventured on this contest.

Tuesday morning, the convention dug into work again. President Miller is noted as a successful business man, who likes to see work started and finished expeditiously. Consequently, this convention worked—it worked just like a board of directors. There was no speech-making.

The new organization was formed, its bylaws adopted, the name decided upon—Kansas State Exhibitors' Association—and the division of work into committees was arranged.

Will Be Four Divisions.

There are to be four divisions, each under a chairman, with a body of helpers. These are the legislative, the censorship, the membership, and the sub-organization committees. Each will at once study its subject, and prepare for submission to an executive board, an outline of findings, and suggestions for action. The executive board has been given power to proceed, as representing the entire association, along any lines suggested by the various committees, and approved by the board.

It was made clear in many talks during the convention—brief remarks, the more impressive for their brevity—that the committees, and the association, are going about the tasks in a spirit of seeking to help solve problems. The censorship committee, for instance, is starting out with a clear slate, no prejudices or established notions of what should be done. Some members of the convention frankly declare that they believe the state censorship is on the wrong tack; others were confident that the present plan is working out admirably. But the committee has no opinion.

Investigation to Precede Action.

The same plan will be followed by the legislative committee. There will be careful investigation, and then a businesslike analysis of the situation and recommendations. This course is to be followed in all the activities of the association, it is announced—there is to be an earnest effort to find the right solution for all problems, after getting at all sides of the problems.

Membership work is to be tackled in a practical way, too. A man will be sent into all parts of the state to tell the exhibitors personally just what the association is trying to do, and how it is going about the job.

With a membership right on the jump, including exhibitors from nearly every section of the state, the necessity for frequent "get-together meetings" can be handled by means of district organizations. These sub-organizations will be semi-formal, and in no way prejudicial to the importance of the state body. There will be a chairman for each district, who will call meetings, and act as the intermediary between the district and the state organizations.

Name Delegates For St. Louis.

The following delegates were appointed to the national convention to be held in St. Louis in June:

Fred Savage, Hutchinson; R. G. Liggett, Kansas City; G. L. Hooper, Topeka; A. E. Baker, Kansas City, and Mrs. Daisy Cunningham, Fredonia.

One thing might be mentioned that the convention did not do. It did not appoint a grievance committee. It is understood that the generally felt opinion of Kansas exhibitors is that each exhibitor should settle his own business affairs with each exchange with which he deals.

There was one exception to the rule of no speeches—but no exhibitor was the subject of the exception. The orator was Lew Hussy, state fire marshal of Kansas. He made an interesting talk on the fire laws of the state, reading from the statutes. And he complimented the exhibitors highly on the safe condition of the moving picture houses of Kansas.

Declare Against Music License.

One of the most warmly discussed subjects of the convention was the payment of fees for the use of music. The discussion was all one way—against paying. The following resolution was adopted, unanimously:

"We, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the State of Kansas, in convention assembled at Hutchinson, May 20, 1919, do absolutely refuse to play music where a license fee or tax is charged to the exhibitor by the composers, publishers or authors. This resolution was passed unanimously by the 200 exhibitors voting."

The next meeting of the new association will be held in Wichita, probably in August. At that time the committees will have been organized and will have made their preliminary investigations of the activities which they hope to undertake along their lines. It is possible that the executive board may have "started something," too, by that time, since the board has authority to act.

Notes of the Convention.

J. E. Tompkins, proprietor of the Liberty theatre, Colorado Springs, also interested in the Royal, operated at Hutchinson by W. C. Robertson, and the Tourney, managed by W. E. Johnson, at McPherson, was present at the convention. Mrs. Tompkins and their daughter joined him Monday, bound for Leavenworth.

Hutchinson's Future Screen Star.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Savage showed the town to several of the visitors in their new motor car.

Mrs. Charles Bull accompanied Mr. Bull, proprietor of the Holland and Novelty at Wichita. Mrs. Bull does not profess to help manage the houses—although she sometimes passes on the pictures.

Mrs. Daisy Cunningham, manager of the White Way, Fredonia, elected a delegate to the national convention, expects Mr. Cunningham home from France soon.

An Argus Crystal Bead screen was installed recently in the DeLuxe, and the visitors had a chance to see it under the light. C. D. Struble, of Kansas City, also got another new thing before the exhibitors, in the Simplex new Mazda Lamp equipment, which was used in showing pictures at the Chalmers Hotel Monday and Tuesday evening, on a machine brought by Mr. Struble. Several of the exhibitors were much interested in the equipment.

E. W. Green brought the Fox picture, "The Wilderness Trail," which was put on for a party that crowded the dining room of the Chalmers Monday evening, and it was a decided success. Mutual and Equitable pictures were shown Tuesday evening. One of the salesmen had the distressing experience of discovering at the last minute, that the big picture he had promised for exhibition during the convention, had been "delayed in transit"—by some exhibitor in another part of the territory. He used the incident as an awful example of what the exhibitor feels like when some other fellow doesn't come through promptly.

Charley Harden borrowed somebody's automobile, and took a good looking party (in the sense of several persons) for a ride. He drives well.

Mrs. R. G. Liggett and Mrs. A. F. Baker accompanied their husbands from Kansas City, and enjoyed the visit to Hutchinson.

Appreciation of the leadership and help of Dave Rogers was shown by the exhibitors in the presentation of a gold-mounted fountain pen, with his name engraved on it.

Outside of the convention there was

The gentleman on the left is unidentified. Next to him come Claire Patee, Van Prosy, Henry Dean, and William Meyn, treasurer.

some conversation among the exhibitors and individual comment on the Kansas City Film Board of Trade. There was a disposition among some exhibitors to take the position that all dealings between exchanges and exhibitors were matters of individual contract, and there was a tendency to deprecate any general rules that might apply to all, or through which any effect might react upon the relations of an exhibitor with one exchange, because of incidents in his relations with another exchange.

Miss Gladys Parker, who will have a try-out as an actress, won her honor by hard work, supported by the belief of her fellow-townsmen that she will make good in moving pictures.

Dean Was on the Job.

Henry Dean, who has been of great help to the exhibitors of Kansas City, Kansas, has been retained as attorney for the new state association. He was present at the convention, so got on his new work early, advising during the proceedings.

Exchange Men Look On.

Among the exchanges and supply firms represented were the following: Joseph H. Gilday, Paramount; Joe Fox, Select; Y. Darnell, Vitagraph; E. E. Reynolds, Mutual; E. McAvoy, Mutual; L. UNION THEATRE EMPLOYES CONVENE

Annual Convention of I. A. T. S. E. and Moving Picture Operators Assembles in Ottawa and Largely Attended

THE annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators was held in the Horticultural Building of the Central Canada Exposition at Ottawa, week of May 26. Approximately three hundred and fifty delegates from all sections of the United States and Canada were in attendance when the convention was called to order by President Charles C. Shay, who has been the executive head of the alliance for the past eight years. President Shay gave out the information that his organization now has a membership of nearly 25,000 and that a solid chain of local unions in every center of any importance across the continent has been established.

The executive of the Alliance had been at work all during the previous week at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, to consider minor grievances and to arrange various plans for the convention sessions. A number of deputations had been heard and many communications were read.

This arrangement had been followed so that the time of the convention would not be consumed with trivial matters. F. G. Lemaster of New York, general secretary of the alliance, arrived in Ottawa May 22.

More Than 500 Locals.

Announcement was made that the International Alliance now has more than five hundred local unions on its roll. One of the most active of these locals is the Ottawa Moving Picture Operators' Union, whose members took a prominent part in arranging for the reception and entertainment of visiting delegates. At a meeting of the Ottawa local, held just previous to the big show, the members voted unanimously to dig down deep into their pockets for a special assessment as their share of endeavor to make the delegates remember the Canadian capital.

The chief operator of each local theatre was delegated to request that the courtesies of the theatre be extended to all visiting delegates. Manager Hanitch, of the Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, invited all delegates to attend a performance at the theatre in a body, reserving a large block of seats for the purpose.

Goldwyn Will Suggest Lobby Display Methods

COINCIDENT with the growth and expansion of Goldwyn picture service and promotion department comes the announcement of a novel plan for lobby displays and exterior exploitation.

Hunt Stromberg, director of service for Goldwyn, announces improvements that will minimize the investment of time, effort and money by the exhibitors.

"Plans for lobby displays have been more theoretical than practical," says Mr. Stromberg. "Exhibitors have been urged to do all sorts of things with their lobbies and, in the majority of instances, the ideas set forth involved too large an expenditure for the average theatre or were incapable of fulfillment by showmen in the smaller communities.

"With each Goldwyn press and service book, there will be pages or a section devoted to illustrated descriptions of lobby displays and stage settings. We will suggest displays and back them up with a sketch that will prove their practicability and timeliness.

Will Give Ideas for Cutouts.

"We shall incorporate ideas and plans for making cutouts of poster material. These suggestions will be guided by the advice of prominent showmen and lobby decorators.

"To co-operate efficiently in outdoor promotion, the service department has arranged to distribute new star twenty-four sheets to all exhibitors who agree to post one or more. The announcement of this policy was made several weeks ago and to date we have circulated several thousand.

"We have additional plans for exploitation and service—several of them absolutely original, almost a revolution in the industry—and these campaigns, fully described and illustrated, will be announced by means of The Goldwynner and the new press and service campaign book."

Oscar Apfel to Direct for World.

Oscar Apfel will for the next three years produce five-reel pictures at stated intervals which will be known and designated as Apfel Productions, and will be distributed through World Film exchanges. Mr. Apfel has completed "Phil For Short," with Evelyn Greeley as the star, as his first production. The second will be put in work next week with Miss Greeley again as the star in "Bringing Up Betty" by Charles Sarver and adapted by Clara S. Beranger.

FOX BUILDING NEW HEADQUARTERS

Structure Being Erected Within Walking Distance From Longacre Square Will House All Eastern Operations—One Block Long, Three Stories High, Will Contain Every Film Activity From Producing to Developing and Selling

TO provide the Fox Film Corporation headquarters that will adequately care for its business, William Fox is erecting in New York City what is designed to be the biggest motion picture plant in the world under one roof. It will be a motion picture city, two minutes from Broadway.

The building, work on which is well advanced, will occupy the block at Tenth avenue and Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets, and it is estimated will cost more than $2,500,000. Designed from plans outlined by Mr. Fox as a result of his experience and observation of film affairs, the building not only will include every modern device for the expeditious and economical production of films, but will obtain a maximum of efficiency in administration, a minimum of lost energy and waste, and the greatest safety and comfort for employes.

Will Center Eastern Activities.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, made the announcement of details this week. Three stories and basement will house all the William Fox film activities in the Eastern laboratory, studios and administration offices.

It is the manifestation of the growth of the Fox organization since its inception nearly six years ago. The executive offices now occupy seven floors of the Leavitt Building, but for the last year this space has been inadequate.

Plans laid by William Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan on their recent trip to Europe call for an extension of business which makes an enlargement of producing necessary. While in various countries on the continent Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan established ten exchanges for the distribution of Fox films. These depots are in addition to the distributing system which Mr. Fox has maintained for the benefit of European exhibitors.

Great Development Expected.

The American motion picture industry, in the opinion of Mr. Sheehan, is at the dawn of a period of its greatest development—and much of this expansion will come in Europe, where the people, shut off from film production during the war, are hungry for America's pictures. It is as much to care for this expansion as to provide adequate facilities for the present organization that Mr. Fox is erecting his new structure.

Besides seven floors of the home office building, the Fox organization also has a laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J., equipped for handling, developing, and printing films; and also extensive studio accommodations in the New York district. The eastern studios used during the last year include six in New Jersey, four in Manhattan and others in Yonkers, the Bronx and Brooklyn, and it was necessary last winter to send four companies to a temporary studio at Miami, Fla.

When the new building is in operation, all these forces will be co-ordinated under one head, in one building. This plant will not decrease the output of the Fox establishment in California or affect the plans for plants in England and France.

Building a Block Long.

The new building will have one block frontage on Tenth avenue and will extend 275 feet along Fifty-fifth street. The frontage on Fifty-sixth street will be 130 feet. The total floor space of the structure will be 150,000 square feet.

All of this space will be utilized exclusively for the William Fox business; there will be a humming hive of films, and people handling films and film affairs. In view of the fact that this location is near the center of the city, and not in the suburbs, the Fox structure is unique in the moving picture industry.

In the plans ordered by Mr. Fox elaborate precautions were taken to insure safety for employes. At a recent meeting of municipal fire experts, various suggestions were made to minimize fire hazards in film manufactories. All of these ideas have been embodied in the new plant, besides a number of others which Mr. Fox devised himself.

The building will be rated as fireproof. Its walls will be of brick, with a front of pressed brick, and the main construction will be of steel and concrete. The floors will be of concrete throughout.

Fireproof and Modern Construction.

The offices of the various departments of the organization will be grouped according to the relation of their functions. The executive offices have been laid out in a unit plan, which is the development of numerous consultations with efficiency engineers. As a result, there will be a minimum of waste motion and at the same time the whole establishment will be arranged on the simplest of plans.

In addition to the efficient arrangement of the offices, facilities will be provided to increase the physical comfort and efficiency of the employes. There will be rest rooms on each floor, recreation rooms, shower baths, gymnasium and other features which are designed to make for the well-being of the employes.

The building will be divided so that the making of pictures will be confined to one section, the clerical offices to another, and the handling of the film to a third, and each of these three departments will be within easy reach of the executive offices.

Busy From Basement to Roof.

The basement, which has a floor space of more than 45,000 square feet, will contain all the departments that have to do with physical administration of the building. There will be a high pressure boiler plant and bins for coal. Here will be a room, equipped with everything needed in the way of electrical apparatus.

There will be a hypo room, a filter plant and quarters for laboratory research work, where a staff of chemical experts will devote its time to devising chemical formulas for the improvement of photography, film developing, tinting and printing.

The rear sections of the first and second floors will be devoted entirely to handling film. This will include the laboratory, which has been laid out to give a capacity of 3,000,000 feet of film every week. The floor space of the laboratory will comprise 40,000 square feet, and the arrangement will be such that film will go through the various processes of development with a minimum of waste effort.

Comforts for All Employes.

The film editors will have their offices in the laboratory section, and in addition there will be room for directors while cutting and editing their productions. On this floor also will be thirty-five fireproof and waterproof vaults, which will contain negatives and in which prints will be stored.

Besides these facilities, there will be twelve projection rooms; miniature theatres, equipped with every convenience for the comfort of audiences. The seats will be arranged on a sloping floor, and will be comfortably upholstered. Each projection room will have a piano and provision for other music, so that photoplays will be seen in an atmosphere approximately that of a theatre.

Pure Air and Comfort.

In the laboratory section there will be rooms for examining films. Besides these there will be a rest room for women employes, with ample locker space; a men's room with lockers, and a gymnasium.

An unusual feature will be a large air-conditioning plant which will supply washed air for the whole structure, so that the temperature of 68 to 70 will prevail throughout the building during all seasons of the year. This plant will also supply fresh air for the building.

The Tenth Avenue front of the first and second floors will be devoted to administration offices. Here will be the private offices of Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheehan, Jack G. Leo, vice president; John C. Eisele, treasurer; Herman Robbins, assistant general manager; James E. McBride, chairman of the executive committee, and other officials. Grouped near the administration offices will be the offices of the numerous departments and sub-departments—contract, sales, financial, auditing, foreign, advertising, exhibitors' service bureau, printing, requisition, purchasing, etc.

All Departments in Order.

The scenario department will be in close touch with both the administration offices and those of the directors. In the scenario department there will be library space for filing the books and manuscripts obtained by Mr. Fox for production. Near the executive offices also will be rest and recreation rooms for women and men, and a restaurant.

The back portion of the second floor will be given over to offices and dressing rooms for the people connected with the studios. "Extras" will come into their own in the new building. Shunted about for years, these assistants will find two well-appointed rooms—one for men and one for women

The directors also will have commodious private offices, close to the administration offices. Conveniently near them will be a carpenter shop; a shop where artists can make plaster casts for sets; a room for scene artists; three working prop rooms; a sewing room; a drapery room; wardrobe department; storage space for studio properties; and a studio library where information regarding locations, costuming and sets will be assembled.

This room will be in charge of the research department. Samuel F. Kingston, casting director, will have his general offices on the second floor, with private offices for consultation with players and others.

Studios Occupy Top Floor.

The top floor will be utilized exclusively for studios. There will not be a post or other obstruction, the roof being supported by flying trusses. There will be accommodations on this floor for twenty companies working simultaneously. Here, of course, the lighting facilities will be an important factor. It is estimated that the studio lights alone will cost $150,000 and this artificial light will be supplemented by an unusual amount of window space.

Fox stars will be in their element here. Each star will have a well-appointed dressing room. Provision will be made for shower baths, lockers and toilet facilities, and the equipment will make these quarters luxurious. Adjoining the studios will be twenty dark rooms for cameramen; a restaurant for players, a first-aid room, a room for the technical director and his staff, and quarters for draftsmen and interior decorators.

Safety First and Last.

This comprises the broad plan of the building, but the statement gives only a rough, general outline of the main features. The factor on which Mr. Fox has laid more emphasis than on any other is that of safety. The architects are authority for the statement that no person will be further than 100 feet from an exit. Fire walls will extend through the building at frequent intervals, so that any section can be immediately cut off and the spread of fire limited.

Although the main entrance will be on Tenth avenue, there will be three ramps, or inclined roadways, on the Fifty-sixth street side of the building, one extending to each of the floors. By means of these, it will be possible not only to give ingress for employes, but trucks and motor cars can drive into the building if necessary.

The ramp to the first floor will be 25 feet wide and 100 feet long and will allow trucks to reach the shipping department. The ramp to the second floor will accommodate the employes in the executive offices and laboratory, while that to the top floor will enable directors to get props of any size into the studio.

The main entrance will be of limestone, marble and brick, with bronze trimmings. Marble steps will lead into the reception hall. Off the reception hall will be a room for the board of directors of the corporation.

Expect to Occupy by October 1.

Indirect lighting will prevail throughout the administration and executive offices; in fact, the lighting will be one of the most important elements in the structure. One hundred large windows of a type which open in sections will allow of perfect ventilation and let light into the offices from all four sides.

The interior partitions will be of steel and glass, so that exterior light will reach even to the center of the structure. These partitions will be equipped with room-width transoms to insure a free circulation of air.

An idea of the building may be obtained by a list of some of the minor costs. The expenditure for plumbing alone will be not less than $40,000, the air-conditioning plant will come to $75,000, the heating system to upwards of $30,000, and the sprinkling system, which will include a 50,000-gallon water tank on the roof, will cost $60,000 more. It is the expectation of the architects that the building will be ready for occupancy by October 1 of this year.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Mary Pickford Plays Fair with Fans and Puts Herself in Soak While She Makes Good

By Giebler

IT was a dark and stormy night—in spots. Part of Creagan street was as dry as the hyperbolic bone, while other spots were weeping with wetness, particularly that part of the street near the entrance to A. Lapidowitz's new and second-hand store. It was awfully damp around Lapidowitz's place.

The rain came down in sheets. It rattled on the windows of the store; it wilted a coat and took all the creases out of a $2.98 pair of all-wool pants hanging out in front.

Two men, sheltered under a giant umbrella, looked out in the rain with cold and calloused eyes to where a frail looking girl with golden hair and only six hundred thousand dollars worth of Liberty Bonds in the bank, and a job that pays her only a little over a measly half million seeds a year, stood and shivered in the rain.

Did either of those two men say, "Lady, come in out of the wet," and then maybe step next door to the delicatessen store of Jacob Goldstone, and buy her a hot dog sandwich or something?

The Low-Lifers Let 'Er Soak.

They did not. They were a couple of hard-boiled eggs, those two fellows under the umbrella—regular low-lifers. They just stood there and let her get soaked.

Didn't the girl have any place to go? Sure, she did. She could have scooted around the corner and into a nice little bungalow and touched a match to the gas log; or she could have stepped right out of the rainstorm into a dry place—it was only a local rain anyway—there were lots of dry places around there.

Why didn't she do one of these things? Because it would have spoiled——

Dear reader, I can't deceive you any longer. This is not a sob story. It was not real—it was just a movie scene.

The poor little rich girl was Mary Pickford, and the two hard-boiled eggs under the umbrella were Syd Franklin, her director, and Charles Rosher, her cameraman. They were making night rain stuff for Miss Pickford's new picture, "The Hoodlum."

Miss Pickford, as Amy Burks, the daughter of a rich altruist, who gives up his home and goes to the slums to live with the poor, has just come to Creagan street to join her father, and she gets lost in the rain. And such a rain!

Such Another Rain There Wasn't.

Jupiter Pluvius hasn't anything at all on an enthusiastic property man with a well-oiled movie rain storm to operate.

I had heard of the big set out at Brunton, where Miss Pickford's second First National feature was being filmed, and it was all that people had said it was, and more. Creagan street is the most realistic thing in the way of a built-up street set I have ever seen. But of Creagan street later, in its daylight hours and filled with its three hundred people.

They did not lose any time when they got started on that rain stuff. It is not very good for little girls who almost went up the flue with the flu a few weeks ago to be standing around in the rain. California May nights are bad enough to stand around in just as they are, goodness knows; but add the contents of two or three rain barrels and they are apt to be fatal.

Just a Few Words Here.

There was no fiddling with the camera; no slapping the light machines on the back to make them shine brighter. They got all set first, started raining on Mary, and rushed the action through in a hurry.

I wonder if all of the Mary Pickford fans give her credit for the conscientious work she does in her pictures? Little Mary could just as easily have employed a double for the rain stuff. They could have made a shot of her standing in a nice dry doorway looking out at the downpour; then a shot of the double out in the rain with her back to the camera; or of the double kind of doubled up to shield her head and face, which would have looked perfectly natural, and it would have all got by.

But because Mary believes in playing fair with the fans she did it herself. She took the rain like a game little duck, and although there was a doctor on the set who made all kinds of a fuss about it being a foolhardy stunt, she was none the worse for it.

I saw her three days later getting ready to go out on location to Jim Jeffries' farm and make some scenes in a pig pen for "The Hoodlum," and she didn't even have the sniffles as a result of her soaking.

After they got through with the rain stuff, they made some night shots of the street, with a lot of extras, and—Oh, yes, speaking of extras, I want to tell you about T. L. Tally, vice-president of the First National Exhibitors, and Seymour Tally and Bill Knotts, manager of the First National exchange, acting in the movies.

Big Guns Become Movie Extras.

The Tally party had come out to see the work, and Syd Franklin pressed them into service as extras. Of course I'll not say that T. L. is a second Nat Goodwin, and Charlie Chaplin still has considerable on Seymour, and so far as Mr. Knotts is concerned, a rank injustice was done that man, as you shall see later in this story.

Taking it by and large, however, they acted real nice, so far as histrionics was concerned, but in another way they were bad actors. After they had worked for about an hour they got tired and concluded they would go home, but just as they were about to make a nice little get away down at the end of the street near the engine house, Syd Franklin's eagle eye spotted them.

It's a Doggoned Shame Little Mary Has to Be Filmed in Such a "Low Life" Place as Creagan Street.

"Here," he yelled, "Whaddye mean walking off the set that way?"

They said they had just wanted to get out in the lot and see if the stars were shining.

"You'll never shine as stars yourselves if you don't stick around," said Syd. "You gotta work yourself up in this business."

Shine Stars Are Shines.

So they came back and stuck around till the last dog died.

I went out to the set again the next day, because I wanted to see it in daylight and full of people.

Creagan street was an artistic triumph. It was the mean street of any large town set down there on the lot, complete with all of the atmosphere—all of the outward signs of misery and poverty that goes with such streets.

The street was a block long, paved, and built up solidly with brick buildings on both sides. There were granitoid sidewalks, gutters, fire hydrants, and at the end the engine house, with its horses all ready to run at the sound of an alarm.

Two hundred and fifty people were in the street, and half a hundred more at the windows of the second and third stories of the houses, on the balconies and the fire escapes. Men with clothing barrows, men with hand organs, men with fruit barrows, vegetable wagons hawking their goods. A walking haberdashery with a string of neckties, suspenders, hats, shirts, shoes, everything, strung all over his person.

Mean Street on a Busy Day.

People passed in and out of the shops and stores, Lapidowitz's, Goldstone's delicatessen, the dancing academy, the pawn shop, Mme. Bertha's millinery shop, with its windows filled with the pitiful hats and the makeshift finery of the poor; into Tim Murphy's Fine Wines and Liquors; in the drug stores and bakeries.

I walked up and down the length of the street, mingled with the extras, talked to Mrs. Becky Einstein, who came from her little clothing store on the east side of our own fair city, to earn an honest penny at being a citizen in this east side street of the films, and to A. Schwartz, who gets all the extra work he wants to do, because he is a good bearded type.

I never saw such types—caps, lower case, italics, pearl and agate; children jumping ropes, peddlers, cops, beggars, bums, and Appetite Andy, who ate his way into the films long ago, and is still eating and still extra-ing. If there is any eating or drinking to be done in a film Andy is sure to get a bit, because of the great realism he puts into his work.

Andy, of the Thirst and Appetite.

Most of the cast was there. Ralph Lewis, who plays Andrew Guthrie, Amy's grandfather, with a wonderful make-up and the club foot he wore as Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation"; Dwight Crittenden as John Burke, the father and altruist; Kenneth Harlan, the juvenile lead; Agie Hering, who plays Nora, a fine character part; Andrew Arbuckle as Mr. O'Shaughnessy; Max Davidson, of many vaudeville circuits, as Mr. Isaacs; Inez Gomez; Mary Bruce; Sally Cohen's sister; Mike Ready, who started in the films along with D. W. Griffith, and is still going strong; and of course Little Mary, who was here, there and everywhere.

"The Hoodlum" is going to be a pretentious production. The street cost $15,000 to build; there were three hundred extras at work in the set, in addition to the cast, and it must have cost a tidy sum just to pay for the fruit that was on the carts, the ice cream cones, the pies, the pastry in the bake shop windows, the kosher meat and sausages in Goldstone's window, and I personally saw Appetite Andy get away with four glasses of beer for an atmosphere bit in front of Mike's place at the corner of the street.

The High Cost of Supers.

While I was talking about the cost of the production to Studio Manager F. E. Benson, along came somebody and handed him a bill from T. L. Tally for the work done by him and his party the night before. Mr. Tally had reckoned the services of himself and party at one hundred dollars and twenty-five cents. The quarter was for Bill Knotts, exchange manager.

I told you a great injustice had been done to Bill Knotts. Think of Tally rating himself way up and poor Bill way down that way. Benson roared.

"I can get all the extras I want, good fresh ones, at five dollars a day, and these people want a hundred dollars for a few hours' work!"

Syd Franklin tore his hair.

"A hundred dollars for those birds isn't so bad," he said, "but what's that two bits down there in the corner for? Twenty-five cents for Bill Knotts? Well, I guess not! Not if know it."

Then Miss Pickford got in the argument.

"You all know we are making high class pictures," she said, in her most severe tones, "and we want only the best talent to be had. We'll pay the bill. We'll pay it in nice new crisp movie money. There's a whole bale of it over in the property room."

Mr. Tally says he is going to frame his share of the hundred, but poor Bill Knotts is still in the hole, because there is no silver stage money.

UNIVERSAL'S INDUSTRIAL MEN DINE

General Manager Harry Levey Outlines Work of Two Years—Many Executives Praise Progress

AN event in filmdom last week was the second anniversary dinner given by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal educational and industrial department, at the Hotel Astor on Saturday, May 24. The occasion marked, as one Universal official expressed it, two years of "startling progress in a field of motion picture which, while yet in its infancy, has shown by its marvelous development that it is as rich in promise as was the motion picture industry itself in its first years."

The realization that in industrial and educational pictures for general distribution, Mr. Levey's department had struck a new note in film production, and on which serves many capacities, was brought home to the fifty guests who heard the speeches of the afternoon. With the exception of Carl Laemmle, who was unable to be present, and R. H. Cochrane, who was out of the city, every executive of the Universal company was present, as were the divisional heads of Mr. Levey's own department.

Fifty Subjects Have Been Made.

It was brought out during the talks of the afternoon that in spite of the department's youthfulness, the list of productions made in that time compared in size very favorably with any other Universal department. Mr. Levey made the statement that more than fifty subjects had been produced and released, most of them for distribution over selected areas.

It was pointed out that the Universal industrial department had developed the industrial release from an insignificant "trailer" period to the present day education-industrial feature. Five reelers, it was stated, with real stories for backbones; with interest and entertainment qualities, and with all the other touches are features of this department's development.

"These are only the start," declared Mr. Levey. "The demand for educationals and industrials has never been so great as it is today. I am violating no trade secret when I say that my department, with the sanction of the Universal directors, is even now considering the inauguration of what we are to term 'the Universal library.' This will consist of hundreds of educational and industrial releases placed at our seventy-six exchanges for the benefit of corporations and organizations in their vicinity who may care to use them in programs. This is a new idea, but is one, I am sure, which will be in keeping with the Universal idea of service."

Opens Seven Branch Offices.

Mr. Levey also made the announcement that his department had grown so rapidly, and that demands for further information and service had become so general throughout the country, that he had been compelled to establish branch offices in seven of the country's largest cities. These branch offices, he stated, would serve the territories in which they were situated.

Of further interest along this line, and as further evidence of the rapid growth of the industrial field, Mr. Levey said that he was planning to install a representative of his department in every Universal exchange.

"Heads Win" Is Heavily Booked.

Among those present was P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal and well known in the film world. Mr. Powers made one of the inspiring talks of the afternoon.

One five reel feature, "Heads Win!", Mr. Levey announced, had been started on a career which would take it into 8,000 theatres, with 120 bookings in New York City and vicinity. It is to be exhibited, he said, in every city of importance in America.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' TOP-NOTCHER

For Special Lavish Production, Clever Direction and All-Around Entertaining Qualities the Comedian's New Artcraft, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," Is the Big It

By Edward Weitzel

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has jumped "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" over the highest hurdle of his screen career. This athletic comedian long ago set himself a pace which should take his stories along with record-breaking speed and leave the spectator marveling at their combination of machine-gun fire fun, physical fireworks, adaptability of plot and completeness of production. In other words, a moving picture comedy which should reflect the spirit of here and now, when airplanes are whizzing human beings through space at one hundred miles an hour and it is the fashion to run our lives on the eight-cylinder plan.

The reconstructed screen version of "Arizona" was patterned after this model, but it defied the skill of its new builder to shape it to his will.

But Douglas Fairbanks had a bright idea in the back of his head. All he needed to support his theory of what a modern screen comedy should be was the right sort of a story. "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is his vindication. It couldn't have been better suited to his purpose if the entire film industry had concentrated its effort on it, after the method used in building the Liberty motor.

Beats His Own Record.

"The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is as full of jumps as a kangaroo's hind legs, and there isn't one of the jumps that doesn't advance the action of the story. Every daring move made by the agile comedian carries a connecting link of the plot along with it, and the short time in the middle of the picture when he is confined in a cell and obliged to remain inactive affords the spectator a much-needed chance to relax also—in imitation of a seventh inning stretch.

It is evident from the first flash on the screen that the producer of "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is out to beat his own record. But it is when the town of Sonora, on the Mexican border, is reached that the skill of the producer is best shown. It is difficult to believe that the place was built by moving picture workmen.

The Knickerbocker Starts West.

Teddy Drake, the part played by Douglas Fairbanks, belongs to the class of fortunate young chaps who waste their time and money in the clubs and on the night life of New York. His playful habit of leaping over the tables and other articles of furniture in the aristocratic club that is honored by having his name on its roll and being general upsetter for the organization, ends by his being expelled.

The matter is serious enough to make even Teddy take it seriously and he arrives at the conclusion that his thoughtlessness comes of thinking only of himself, so he resolves to give the other fellow a thought and try to make him happy. No sooner is his great idea born then he starts to put it into practice. Selecting a spot on the map by shutting his eyes and putting his finger down blindly, he learns he is booked for the Southwest. His trip in the Pullman enables him to test his benevolent intentions on several of his fellow passengers with amusing consequences, but he finds he has carried his helpful creed too far when he helps an old lady off the train and boards the wrong train himself in his hurry to get back to his coach.

Teddy's gallantry was undertaken before he had finished dressing and he is minus a shirt and a collar. His attempts to beg, borrow or steal a shirt from the passengers meet with no success until he runs into a Mexican bandit who is on his way to see his sick mother but knows the train will be searched for him by the sheriff when Sonora is reached. Teddy offers to change clothes with the Mexican. The thing is scarcely done when the train stops at the town and young Drake meets with a red hot reception.

The sheriff is crooked and heads a band of outlaws that is trying to get a young girl and her brother to tell where they have hidden the money they received for the sale of their ranch. At the time Teddy drops off the train the sheriff has the girl in jail and her brother is a prisoner in an old shack some distance from the town. The dishonest official and his pals want to get hold of the Mexican because he is one of the gang and has defied the leader.

The Race Is On.

Dressed in Manuel's clothes Teddy does not pause to thank the citizens of Sonora for the way they receive him, but does a flying leap for the roof of the nearest building. Then ensues a chase that outstrips everything seen before it on the screen. Up and down the town, all over the town and all around the town goes Teddy, leaping from roof to roof like a two-legged Rocky Mountain sheep. While seated comfortably on a window ledge of the jail he meets his future wife. She is on the inside of the bars and is the girl the sheriff is trying to rob. Her name is Mercedes. She tells Teddy about the plot against her and her brother, and where the money is secreted. About this time the bandits catch sight of Teddy and the whole town is off on the second lap of the lively free-for-all, and there is no slacking of the pace until Teddy is captured and himself put behind the bars. Another short breathing spell, then a prison escape and the third heat of the race is on. When it has finished Mercedes and her brother are free, their money is safe in their keeping, and a United States marshal has the crooked sheriff and his gang.

Doug Puts Up a Great Race.

Neat comedy points and slick bits of laughable business are stuck all through the picture, and it is supplied with a line of subtitles that run neck-and-neck with the best smile getters in the release.

Under such track conditions Douglas Fairbanks puts up a great race for the Popularity Stakes and goes past the grand stand to enthusiastic applause. His support contains Frank Campeau, Marjorie Daw, Edythe Chapman, William Wellman, Albert McQuarrie, and Ted Reed. The author of the story is not named, but Director Albert Parker and his two cameramen, Hugh McClung and Glen MacWilliams, have done themselves proud.

"The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is Douglas Fairbank's ton-notcher.

A Reply That Is Not an Answer

THE secretary of the Film Exchange Managers' Association, of Atlanta, Mr. Tuttle, writes a reply to the letter of Melton Phelos, of Elyria, Ohio, printed in the issue of May 24. "The Film Exchange Managers' Association of Atlanta would like to call to the attention of Mr. Phelos a situation which shows that organization by the exchanges was an absolute necessity," says Mr. Tuttle.

The secretary of the Atlanta exchangemen proceeds to outline a situation which he says exists in one of the Georgia towns. A colored house, it is charged, was being supplied surreptitiously with films that had been booked to two houses catering to white persons. The story goes on to tell how a policeman saw screened in both white and colored houses the subject in question and of how he made an affidavit to that effect.

"When managers of prominence are known to be sub-renting we claim there is urgent need of organization of exchanges," says Mr. Tuttle, and inquires: "What about this, Mr. Phelos?"

We hold no brief for Mr. Phelos. We desire to point out, however, to Mr. Tuttle that he has missed the point of the complaint of the Elyria manager. The grievance, as we read his letter, was not in the fact that exchangemen flocked together or that they passed rules. He made the statement that under these rules exhibitors did not get a square deal; that the rules were in the interest of the exchanges; that if through error and not through intent a check in payment for film failed to reach the exchange the film did not go forward; that if through error or blunder of the booker or the express company, after the exhibitor had fulfilled his part of the agreement, the film failed to reach the theatre manager the only satisfaction obtainable was an expression of regret and an assurance that the subject would be sent some other time.

Mr. Phelos complained that on the part of the exchange there was little, if any, consideration for the amount of money the exhibitor had lost by reason of the mistake. He did not, as Mr. Tuttle seems to feel, condemn the idea of organization. He did not condemn the adoption of punitive measures in the case of any exhibitor who might have been proved to be guilty of unfair practices.

Mr. Phelos did condemn the absence of a disposition on the part of an exchangeman to make every amend when an exhibitor of integrity, after complying with the association rules, had been injured. In other words, that no distinction was made between the sheep and the goats, that goats were made of the sheep. If Mr. Tuttle will take up this angle of Mr. Phelos' letter undoubtedly he will provide matter of much interest for the distributing as well as the consuming division of the industry.

Science May Dig Too Deeply

AND now a New York man has invented a camera which photographs air in motion. It has been taken up by the army and will be employed in the work of designing and operating aircraft.

Another New York man—one prominent in the distribution of motion pictures—remarked the other day: "There are too many liars in this business. Do you know that men in the same office will lie to each other?"

Perhaps some day some other New York man will invent a camera which will photograph the thoughts passing through the human mind. Then, indeed, if our friend the film executive is correct in his characterization will there be valid grounds for cumulative and unexpected trouble in an already harried industry.

Eucalyptus Tree Offends Alaskans

THE sourdoughs up in Alaska complain of the "atmosphere" surrounding some of the "made in Alaska" photoplays which are furnished to them with a guarantee that they are the Simon Pure article. They insist that the portrayal of villains shod in mail order snowshoes, struggling through masses of the studio sample of the "beautiful" banked deep about the base of eucalyptus trees—one of the prides of Native Sons—jars their artistic as well as their practical souls. Very likely the adopted and adapted sons of the North have indulged in a slight exaggeration. Most probably they are looking with jealous eyes toward the gold that flows into Los Angeles from the coffers of the motion picture magnates. They are not satisfied with extracting the precious metal from Mother Earth; they would have returned to them in most alluring mold and fashion the gold that other men have dug—perhaps even in California.

The residents of Valdez have been thrown into a mild flutter by a report that a company was coming north to make some real Alaskan motion pictures. "Heroes working in Valdez could slide down a mountainside in an avalanche without bankrupting their employers buying snow," says an official of a local organization. "Heroines could get up to their neck into the stuff the poets rave about."

Unless actors are built of sterner material than most humans it would appear that that Valdez official hardly will qualify as an A1 press agent.

Daylight Saving Still Under Fire

OUR Washington correspondent tells us of a determined effort to be made at the extra session of Congress to bring about a repeal of the daylight saving law. The farmers will continue to bring pressure upon Congressmen. They are strongly opposed to the lenghthening of the afternoon at the expense of the morning. And farmers stand second to no other division of human activity in the United States in their ability to accomplish in a legislative way anything they set their hands to doing.

Motion picture showmen have been among the more outspoken of the opponents of the innovation, and for reasons which require no enumeration. If we do not hear as much these days of their opposition it may be because they have become convinced of the futility of the attempt to upset the present rule. We are disinclined to agree with our correspondent that "the theatre men are for the most part willing to see the law stand." Certainly this statement hardly can be true of that part of them which owns and operates open-air houses. These men have been and undoubtedly still are unwilling to see the law stand. As to those who manage closed houses it may be different.

Pay the Cash, By All Means

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland has adopted a rule whereby the annual membership dues are placed at $50, payable in cash in advance for each theatre. There is an alternative to the payment of cash. That is the running of a slide for the association or an advertising film for at least fifteen seconds at every complete program during each day of the year. The best investment any exhibitor in the Cleveland League can make is to pay the $50 in cash for his dues. Not only does he obtain the advantages of membership in an organization that will further his own interests, but he will take no chances of offending his patrons by showing them advertising devices when they have paid in their good money to purchase straight entertainment.

Great Studios Indicate Confidence

THE motion picture showmen are not to have the building field to themselves. Matching the confidence in the stability of the industry displayed by exhibitors all over the country, as reflected in the great temples to the motion picture now under construction, the producers are forging ahead. Over in Long Island City the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is putting up a studio which indicates the faith of the officers of the company in the immediate business future.

Here close to the heart of Manhattan William Fox has well under way a structure that will be unique. It will contain executive offices as well as studios and laboratories. The building is near enough to film row almost to be a part of it. It goes without saying the innovation of a large studio in the city proper will be welcomed by players and directors and all who have to do with the physical making of pictures. As a rule these persons are compelled to travel many miles to reach their work.

An Old Law in a New Light

THE Supreme Court of Tennessee has held that the act of 1803 which prohibits any person from following his usual avocation on Sunday, except as a necessity, only applies to those matters which were in existence at the time the act was passed. As baseball did not become a national game until 1865 it decided the law did not apply to baseball. Judge McReynolds, in the Hamilton County Criminal Court, after quoting this decision of the Supreme Court of his state, declared that as moving pictures, like baseball, were not in existence in 1803 they were not within the purview of the act of that year. In order that the law should be applicable to pictures there must have been on record prior to its enactment a decision that they were a nuisance.

Does not Mr. Shakespeare somewhere say, "Every time serves for the matter that is then born in it"? And why should it not?

Have Writers Come Into Their Own?

AN announcement of significance to the makers and distributors of moving pictures is that of Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., the story of the activities of which is printed on another page. It has large interest, too, for those who lean heavily upon the screen for their entertainment.

Ever since the motion picture began to demonstrate its possibilities for the amusement of the larger portion of mankind it has been a common—certainly not an uncommon — complaint of the more prominent writers that in a majority of instances in which they had a parental interest the finished photoplay did not reflect the spirit and sometimes the plot of the tale it pretended to portray. Authors have made this statement singly and in associated groups.

In the company of which Mr. Beach is president it is broadly stated that the writers will have "direct authority" over the details of making the picture—and the published statement makes haste to add that the work of the practical director will not be invalidated. Undoubtedly these prominent persons of the pen will realize that in the making of the pictures upon which they are setting out they are themselves on trial. They must many times be prepared to sacrifice lines they know were important in putting their work in the "best seller" category. The "talky" book, even though filled with brilliant dialogue, is frequently, like a "talky" play, poor material for a great motion picture. Upon the willingness of the author to defer to the judgment of those who may be possessed of a nose for screen drama much of the success of the undertaking is bound to depend.

Well-wishers of motion picture entertainment, those who are most concerned in its steady advance, will follow the productions of the new company with hearty interest.

The men and women contributing to the list of subjects of Eminent Authors' Pictures, by the way, will not have the field to themselves. We have heard recently of the Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., which includes in its list of writers such names as those of Winston Churchill and Irving Bacheller.

If the bestowal of authority upon the novelist works out in pictures that strike nearer to the heart of the great multitude we then may know that the long standing complaint of writers was well founded. And —the writer will have come into his own.

GREAT AUTHORS' PLANS ARE OUTLINED

Hodkinson to Distribute Productions Made by Hampton Company from Stories by Great Writers

JUST what W. W. Hodkinson's big and ambitious sales and distribution policies for the forthcoming year are was revealed on May 23, backed up by an array of announcements of product that will show the exhibitors of the country that this pioneer has resumed his position in the industry.

First in importance came the revelation of the complete plans of the Great Authors Pictures, Inc., which Benjamin B. Hampton organized and has been building for months in California, with two powerful pictures completed.

Mr. Hampton's Great Authors' organization at this time controls the stories of Stewart Edward White, Emerson Hough, Winston Churchill and Irving Bacheler, with still other authors of like prominence to be announced.

"Desert Gold" Has Been Shipped East.

Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner control the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and have just completed Mr. Grey's most notable story of the Southwest, "Desert Gold," which has been shipped East for Hodkinson distribution. Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., has completed the production of Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," and other novels of this famous writer to be screened include "The Leopard Woman," "The Rules of the Game," "The Riverman," etc.

Mr. Churchill's most immediate novels to be screened include "The Dwelling Place of Light" and "The Inside of the Cup." Mr. Hough's two big contributions are to be "The Mississippi Bubble" and "54-40 or Fight." Irving Bacheller's initial screen contribution will be "Keeping Up With Lizzie."

During all the months of preliminary organization, William W. Hodkinson, foreseeing the evolution in the industry that makes recognizably big stories a demand of exhibitors, has been fostering the organization of other producing units that will make productions only from stories by authors of established fame.

Harry Raver's Four-Star organization, which recently completed and released "As a Man Thinks," by Augustus Thomas, through the Hodkinson sales mechanism, has just completed his second Thomas production, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving. There are to be four more of Mr. Thomas' biggest works in this series, representing this foremost dramatist, giving his personal attention to the production of his picture.

Down in San Antonio, the Sunset Pictures Corporation, another Hodkinson ally, is completing the production of Sir Gilbert Parker's noted story of Canada, "You Never Know Your Luck," with House Peters as the star, and under the direction of Frank Powell. The Hodkinson literary and technical departments have given their personal supervision to the preparation of this story for production.

More Announcements Later.

Still another unit controlling the stories of one of the country's most popular authors is to be announced within the next few days by the Hodkinson organization. This additional unit will make not less than four stories with a star of established popularity, under a producer of splendid ideals, and personally supervised by the author of the stories in person.

The nucleus around which this evolution has been built has been Mr. Hampton's two organizations which have completed and are delivering their first pictures from California. To Mr. Hampton with his fine editorial and publishing experience, Mr. Hodkinson pays unstinted praise for his vision and achievements.

"Yankee Doodle" Film Plays to Record Business in West

MACK SENNETT'S "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the five-part comedy drama with which the original Sennett bathing beauties are appearing in person at each performance, played to over $10,000 in San Francisco at the Tivoli the first week. For two weeks in Los Angeles the box-office returns showed over $20,000 net; at Denver more than $10,000 net in one week; at Indianapolis, $11,000 in one week, and at Cincinnati, which is still playing the picture, indications are that the receipts will be over $12,000.

The Stanley Booking Company, Philadelphia, has leased the Chestnut Street Opera House from the Shuberts for a four weeks' run of the Sennett picture, beginning June 2. Likewise another four weeks' run has been booked for the Ziegfeld Opera House, Chicago, to start on June 21.

AUSTRALIAN FILM MAN GOING HOME

Harry G. Musgrove Gives American Film Interests "Once Over" and Prepares to Go Back to the Land of "Wowsers" —Buys Rights for the Far East as Well as Australia

By Walter K. Hill

AFTER four days of effort, Harry G. Musgrove, of Australia, had received an introduction to the clerk who knew the man who could introduce him to the official who issued passports; and with this document in his possession all Mr. Musgrove had to do was get it vised by the English consul —and then he will be off for his homeland. This may be within ten days.

Meanwhile the Moving Picture World man was treated to a lunch and very pleasant interview with the soft-speaking and mild-mannered Mr. Musgrove while Broadway was being drenched with a holiday afternoon rain. Offhand one might never select Mr. Musgrove from the magnates who frequent the Astor's magic mat as representing one of the oldest theatrical families in Australia and managing director of film interests that command the major part of the distributing and exhibiting facilities of the antipodes.

"I have been in America several weeks," said Mr. Musgrove, "getting in touch with film affairs and leasing attractions that will be suitable for showing in Australia. I am going home to take active charge of Australasian Films, Ltd., our distributing organization, and Union Theatres, the corporation which does the exhibiting of films in our country."

No Such Thing as a "Combine."

"That's the 'combine,'" ventured the interviewer.

Mr. Musgrove made haste to explain that there was no "combine" in his country, but the name had stuck to certain film interests since concerns who were in opposition to them "wished" the name on to certain other interests which were distributing and exhibiting films down that way.

"There is and can be no 'combine' in Australia," continued Mr. Musgrove. "Altogether there are only 700 places on the continent for showing pictures and practically every brand of American films are shown in some of these places. Two circuits compete for this business, but we have nothing that is known here as coming under the head of 'opposition.' When one system drops an exhibitor for one reason or another, the other systems continues the supply of entertainment."

Asked what firms were distributing films on his great island Mr. Musgrove explained that Metro distributes through Co-Operative Films, the direct competitor of Australasian Films; Paramount and William Fox have their own distributing organization and Goldwyn features are circulated through the theatrical firm of J. C. Williamson—who is the K. & E. and Shubert of Australia rolled into one.

Hold Sixty Per Cent. of Traffic.

"Australasian Films and Union Theatres control 60 per cent. of the film business in our country. Union Theatres represent 35 of the first-run theatres throughout the continent. Of our total business 75 per cent. is done in Sydney, capital of New South Wales, and Melbourne, the capital of Victoria. The rest of the exhibition business is conducted in towns ranging down from 30,000 population to a few thousand. In gross numbers the largest share of the exhibiting business is done in towns where pictures are shown from one to three nights a week."

Asked how the demand was supplied, Mr. Musgrove said leases were made by Australasian Films, Ltd., for five years —amounting practically to outright purchase, as the life was pretty well out of a film by that time. The money investment begins "F. O. B." New York. Thereafter expense starts with loss of time en route and excessive carrying charges by rail and on shipboard.

"Rates on films are extremely high. The rate makers seem to think that because we make money out of films we should pay more than our merchants must to have their stocks hauled to them," said Mr. Musgrove, as he continued with different examples.

Many Drawbacks to Doing Business.

"The Australian field is different than any other part of the world where films are used in such great quantities," said Mr. Musgrove. "Apart from the original cost of films and transportation the 'Wowsers' deny us the privilege of showing on Sunday; we get no benefit from the flood of national advertising distributors do in America; we have both state and federal censorships; a federal and state war tax—and 12 cents is the average price per ticket to see film shows in Australia."

The interviewer expressed curiosity concerning a "Wowser"—much after the style of the Englishman who wanted to know, through a friend in New York: "What are Yonkers?"

"Somebody put that name on the reformers," said Mr. Musgrove, "and they have been 'Wowsers' ever since. They keep Australia absolutely dead on Sunday. No Sunday shows of any nature; no Sunday papers, no stores open, nothing to drink—nothing doing on Sunday. The 'Wowsers' have it."

Harry G. Musgrove
Managing director of Australasian Films, Ltd.

American Films Have the Call.

"And where do you get most of your films?" the World man asked.

"Almost entirely from the States. Not a dozen films have come to us from England during the war and of that number 'The Better 'Ole' was the only one to make an extraordinary success. We kept five prints of that film going.

"Australasian Films, Ltd., has the franchise for First National in our country. We have exclusive control of Chaplins on an agreement separate from our First National franchise. We have Vitagraphs, Pathe, Triangle and Jewel features—besides negotiating any independent features our organization here in New York selects as suited to our needs."

Asked what he thought was the most distinctive feature of film traffic in this country, Mr. Musgrove said:

"I believe the First National's idea of assessing a proportion of the cost of negative to all franchise holders is the system that is best and will eventually be adopted as the method of production. It's fair and likewise practicable.

"American films are knitting together the people of our two continents. They bring American scenery, American people and American customs before Australia and we are better acquainted with Americans now than we were before the war," was Mr. Musgrove's parting observation.

Incidentally he made known the fact that his concern is buying films for distribution in the Far East, having arranged for distribution in Dutch East Indies, China, Java, Japan, India and the Philippines in conjunction with his purchases of rights for Australia.

CANADIAN PARAMOUNT GOES TO REGAL

Distribution Previously Vested in Famous Players Film Service Switches in September to Opposition

OUR Toronto correspondent advises that Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, has acquired the Canadian distribution rights for Paramount Pictures, the contract to start in September. The company which has been handling Paramount in Canada has been the Famous Players Film Service, Limited, controlled by Jule and J. J. Allen. The latter also recently lost Select Pictures to the Regal Company.

Regal Films, Limited, with headquarters in Toronto and branches in six Canadian cities, is officered by a coterie of Toronto financiers, headed by J. P. Bickell. The managing director of the company is N. L. Nathanson. Associated with Regal Films, Limited, is the Paramount Theatres, Limited, a company which has a considerable number of theatres in Ontario.

The same interests also control the St. Denis and Francais theatres in Montreal, while arrangements have just been made, it has been declared, for the erection of a large theatre in Winnipeg. This is the company's first invasion of the Canadian West with a theatre.

Regal's Distributing Interests.

Regal Films, Limited, have been handling World, Select, Triangle, Metro and other releases throughout the whole of Canada and has been distributing First National pictures in Eastern Canada for Harry Brouse, of Ottawa, the Eastern Canadian franchise holder. The Regal Company has also been handling a number of minor releases, including the Ford Educationals and Ontario Government subjects.

The Regal company distributed Goldwyns in Canada during the first year of their release, after which Goldwyn features were acquired by the Allens and were distributed through the Monarch Film Company. Last winter, however, the Regal company secured the Selects which had been distributed by the Allens.

The Allens have never been very strong for serials, but Regal has had two of importance recently: "The Master Mystery" and the Craig Kennedy serial, "The Carter Case." The Regal interests have the Regent and Strand theatres, two of the few large downtown film houses of Toronto, and they have announced that they will build a huge combination house in the central section of the city at once.

Large Theatre Holdings.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the Regal interests are said to control the Pantages vaudeville franchise in Toronto and other Eastern Canadian cities. Pantages vaudeville may therefore be seen in the large new house which is to be built in Toronto. The Regal and allied companies figure in the control of at least seven theatres in Toronto and other houses in Ottawa, Kingston, Peterboro, Guelph, Galt, Montreal and elsewhere.

The Regal company is comparatively young in years, having been organzed in Toronto about three years ago. The Allens started in the film business in the early days of store shows when they opened a number of "nickel shows" in and around Brantford, Ontario.

The Allens Important Factors.

At the head of the Famous Players' Film Service, Limited, are Jule and J. J. Allen, who also control the Allen Theatre Enterprises, British Films, Limited, Paramount Pictures Corporation, Limited, Monarch Film Company, Limited, and other interests. The Allen have some thirty-five large and up-to-date moving picture theatres in actual operation or in process of building across Canada. They have an extensive chain of theatres in the Canadian West as well as in the East.

A large new house has been started at Winnipeg, where they already control two theatres. The Allens have also announced that they are building new houses in Halifax and St. John, on the East Coast.

Will Hunt Big American Game for Outing-Chester

ROBERT FROTHINGHAM, advertising and clubman, and Joseph McAleenan are the leaders of a group of big game hunters who recently left New York for the eastern slopes of the Rockies to lasso grizzlies, big horn moose, elk and other big game before a motion picture camera. The expedition was planned by Mr. Frothingham, and a complete record of the trip will be made in full colors.

A Prizma motion picture camera will be used, which photographs all scenes in Nature's colors, and thus, for the first time, a group of big game hunters will be able to bring back with them for the enjoyment of others all of the natural beauty and exciting scenes of such an expedition.

Dr. Leonard S. Sugden and Henry Berger, Jr., will represent Prizma in the expedition. Dr. Sugden's lectures and his pictures of Alaska, taken with a Prizma motion picture camera in Nature's colors, have excited comment throughout the country.

Mr. Berger is perhaps the foremost color photographer in the West. He is an experienced operator of a Prizma camera.

Included in the expedition are Ambrose Means, who did all the roping in the Buffalo Jones pictures taken in Africa; Dr. Harlow C. Brooks, George Murgatroyd, the taxidermist, and Joe Jones, the owner of a 200,000 acre ranch at Valley, Wyoming.

Protest Strongly Against New York City Censorship

ORGANIZED labor joined with New York exhibitors and the National Association on Wednesday, May 28, to protest against the ordinance proposed by Alderman Augustus Wise, to make the New York City commissioner of licenses the municipal censor of motion pictures.

James Holland, president of the State Federation of Labor, representing the opinion of the union workmen of the city, told the members of the committee on general welfare at City Hall, that he considered the ordinance autocratic and un-American.

Commissioner of Licenses Gilchrist, according to Mr. Holland, would be averse to taking on the powers given him by the proposed ordinance. The measure would compel every exhibitor to apply in writing for a permit from the license commissioner, who would pass on each picture before it could be shown. A fee of $1 a film would be charged.

About fifty exhibitors and representatives of other branches of the industry were present to protest against the drastic and impractical provisions of the ordinance. Dr. D. Everett Martin, chairman of the National Board of Review, and director of Cooper Union Forums, declared the ordinance would create dangerous social unrest.

So strongly was the case against the ordinance argued that decision was reserved by the welfare committee for the submission of additional briefs.

"THE RED LANTERN" SHINES IN OMAHA

Boyd Theatre Puts On Nazimova Production for Two Weeks in Manner That Arouses Comment—Bring Ballet from Chicago and Chinese Fixin's from All Over

OMAHA, or any other city in Nebraska or Iowa, never saw such exploitation as was given "The Red Lantern," showing two weeks at the Boyd Theatre, Omaha, two weeks, beginning May 18. That the methods used will mark a step forward in the business of motion picture exhibition in Omaha and the middle west is not unlikely.

Paul Le Marquard and his associates, including some of the leading theatre and filmmen of Omaha, put the picture over. They spent more than $6,000 in exploitation and "trimmings," according to receipted slips on hand, and it is certain they spent some of the busiest minutes ever devoted to a motion picture in Omaha.

The chief item, perhaps, and the most unusual, was the bringing of a celebrated dancer of Chinese numbers from Chicago, with a ballet of fourteen girls. The ballet made an instant hit with Omaha. Mlle. Marion, the leading dancer, has for years been a close student of Nazimova's methods, and was enabled to give the Dance of the Red Lantern in a remarkable impersonation of Nazimova. The dance was used as a prologue to the picture. The stage was gorgeously decorated with curtains, hangings and scenery. In the background loomed a big curtain, with a sliding circular door, similar to the one shown in the motion picture.

Special Orchestra Engaged.

A special orchestra of seventeen pieces, some of the players brought from out of the city, furnished the music. The picture enabled elaborate musical interpretation throughout, and this was one feature. Chinese music became the vogue in Omaha immediately after the run of "The Red Lantern" started. Downtown music stores decorated their windows with the Nazimova Red Lantern song, and included in the decorations, posters and artistic cut-outs advertising the show.

The entrance and lobby to the Boyd were utilized in an unusual way for advertising.

Over the entrance and the canopy, which were already unusually large, a Chinese palace was constructed, with wicker-work, funny gables and roof, and the other architectural effects which characterized it as Chinese. Under this canopy were hung rows of gigantic red lanterns, furnishing the light at night.

Bring Peking to Omaha.

For the interior of the lobby, the promoters raided the Chinese costume houses and curio shops of every city as far east as Chicago, borrowing, buying and begging anything and everything Chinese to use in the lobby decoration. Filled with Chinese hangings, tapestries, curios, lanterns, ornaments and relics, it was a regular bit of old Peking transferred to Omaha. The ticket cashier was behind a wicker-work affair of bamboo. The doors were such doors as might have permitted entrance to a Chinese palace.

And the girl ushers were all dressed in Oriental costumes.

The atmospheric effect, beginnig with the entrance, then the lobby, the ushers, the interior of the theatre, the stage and the ballet, and then the music, was astonishing. The picture fitted into the setting in a marvelous way.

Make Use of Downtown Windows.

Downtown windows were utilized. The Orkin Brothers' store of women's wear was the most attractive. Chinese silks, dresses, clothing and curios, with artistic cut-outs and posters of Nazimova, and scenes from the picture, were shown. Another such window was in the Burgess-Nash department store. The window was situated so that should one look up from the window, in the distance, up the street, standing out above the crowds, was the palace entrance to the Boyd Theatre.

On Saturday night, before the show opened on Sunday, a premier showing was given to prominent residents, newspaper folk and motion picture people of the city. This showing aroused widespread comment.

Picture Advertised In a Big Way.

Newspaper advertising was utilized to the utmost, of course.

Dramatic, society and dance critics of the Omaha daily papers paid marked attention in their columns to the ballet; art editors made learned comments on the artistic features of the production, while the music critics were high in their praise of the musical interpretation given the picture.

The ballet, the orchestra, the lobby, and the methods used in presenting the picture were to be transferred bodily from the Boyd Theatre to the Orpheum, Lincoln, for the week beginning Monday, June 2. The picture will be shown in other cities of Nebraska and Iowa.

The Boyd played to capacity houses, even at the matinees.

The prices were 25 and 35 cents for the matinees, and 25, 35, 50 and 75 in the evening—the highest prices ever charged for such a feature in Omaha or that part of the middle west. The same rate of prices will be charged in other cities where the picture is shown with such exploitation.

EXCHANGEMEN ADOPT NEW TRADE RULES

Cincinnati Managers Recognize Need for Change in Business Methods and Get Up New Regulations

THE Associated Film Exchange Managers of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce held a meeting May 20, at which the new trade rules for that district were adopted. For some time the exchange managers have felt that new rules and regulations were necessary for the good of the business as a whole, exhibitors and exchanges, and the rules adopted are the result of many conferences and committee meetings, at which all angles of the proposition were discussed and analyzed.

The rules adopted are to become operative June 15, and they have been sent to all exhibitors in that section in the shape of a folder, signed by all the members of the association. A letter accompanying this folder explains the action and assurance is given that no deviation will be made from the rules as set forth.

The principal difference between the new rules and the present practice is covered by Rule 2, relating to terms of payment for service. The exchange managers contend that the old system of shipping films and advertising matter C. O. D. caused unnecessary expense and annoyance, and the new rules require that advance payment be made for this service.

The Nature of the Rules.

The rules, in essence, are as follows:

Rule 1. All transportation charges must be paid by the exhibitor.

Rule 2. Remittance must be sent in advance.

Rule 3. Exhibitor must carry out all terms specified in contracts. No verbal agreements recognized.

Rule 4. No change in booking of any service will be granted unless requested in writing fourteen days before original play date. If change of date is granted, a later definite play date must then be arranged, and picture must be paid for at time of change and the protection against any exchange or manager; and clause may be forfeited. No change in play date granted which will prejudice other accounts.

Rule 5. No film shall be held by the exhibitor beyond playing date as per contract, and all damages occasioned through disregard of this rule are to be borne by exhibitor.

Rule 6. Whenever play dates are not agreed upon in writing when contract is executed, the exchange shall fix play dates as provided in contract. The association calls attention to the fact that a committee has been appointed to hear complaints exhibitors may wish to make at any time complaints are to be decided by this committee the exhibitors will be allowed to name two of their number to serve with this committee in adjusting differences. The spirit which prompted the association in its dealings with exhibitors is set forth in the closing paragraph of the folder as follows: "Prompted by the spirit of the Golden Rule, let's all co-operate for the good of the industry and to the mutual advantage of all concerned."

At the meeting new working arrangements were made between the Cincinnati association and the Film Exchange of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, as a result of the visit of Miss Elsie Green, secretary of the latter body. Other visitors were Messrs. Barnett and Paulson, representatives of the Star Feature Film Company and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, respectively.

QUEEN CITY SHOWMEN HOLD SECOND MEET

Adopt Name of Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League—Elects Officers and Directors

THE new organization of Cincinnati exhibitors held its second meeting in the Hotel Sinton, May 20, and elected its board of directors. The name adopted is the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and it will work in harmony with the older Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, getting at the problems of the exhibitors from a slightly different angle from that of the older organization.

It is impossible to give an exact outline of the proposed activities of the new association at the present time, owing to the fact that some of them are still under discussion in committee, but it is stated that the league will be incorporated for profit, and probably will engage in co-operative purchasing of some of the materials used in the picture houses, as well as devote its energies to combat legislation detrimental to the interests of its members, and to encourage that of a beneficial nature. It will also consider and act upon any other matters effecting the industry which may be furthered by co-operative effort.

Music Tax Chief Topic.

More than fifty exhibitors were present at the meeting and matters requiring immediate attention were discussed. The topic of chief interest was the action of the music publishers in demanding a royalty of ten cents per seat annually for the use of their music in the picture houses. The exhibitors say that the music men have adopted a rather arrogant spirit in this matter, and it is the general belief of Cincinnati exhibitors that the present proposition is only the opening wedge, which will be used as the basis for larger demands in the future. In fact, one of the local exhibitors states that a representative of the music publishers remarked that "we might charge you 25 cents a seat next year." This attitude has caused much antagonism among the exhibitors, who declare that they will not pay the tax.

A letter of a conciliatory nature was received by the secretary of the Exhibitors' League from the music association, in answer to his protests, and it may be that a satisfactory adjustment of the matter can be effected.

Names Board of Directors.

The board of directors of the new association is as follows: John A. Ackerman, of the Glenway; Dr. Otto Dieckman, of the Nordland Plaza; Thomas Reilly, of the Colonial; J. J. Huss, of the Fifth Avenue; Otto Luedeking, of the Waldorf Amusement Company; Henry Hoefle, of the Clifton; Henry Levy, of the Columbia; A. G. Heddesheimer, of the Orpheum; George Talbert, of Peoples; I. W. McMahan, of the Gifts, and I. Frankel, of the Hippodrome. This board elected officers as follows: President, J. A. Ackerman; first vice president, Henry Hoefle; second vice president, Thomas Reilly; secretary, Dr. Otto Dieckmann; treasurer, Otto Luedeking.

THRASHING OUT STORY QUESTION

Motion Picture Directors' Association at Its Last Monthly Meeting Listens to Two Sides of the Author Query When Prominent Writers Express Their Views

A BETTER understanding by writers of reputation of the needs of the screen in relation to their own product is one of the things that is increasing daily. To this end the Motion Picture Directors' Association has invited a number of the leading novelists to attend its monthly meetings and give the members their views on the subject. The following account of the last meeting has been sent to the Moving Picture World for publication by President George Irving. Two well known writing men, Arthur Somers Roche and George Randolph Chester, were present. Their remarks did not always agree, but showed that both had devoted considerable thought to the matter.

Some very plain truths about the value of the writer to the motion picture were uncovered in rather a dramatic manner at the last meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Arthur Somers Roche Has His Say.

No one questions the fact that the stories made for the screen have a long way to go before the perfect picture is reached, and to no branch of the industry is this more important than to the director, for, like the builder of a great house, the finished result can be no greater than the architect has planned. And the director is the builder, the one who puts the parts together in the spirit of the man who conceived the idea. Too often, in pictures, there is no idea or it is lost before it reaches the Director. Of course it is sometimes lost by him, but it would be foolish to think that any director does not wish to make the best picture he can with the material at hand. The business end of the industry has come to believe that directors are chronic kickers because usually when a scenario is presented to them they say "Rotten!" and proceed to make changes which will, in their opinion, greatly improve it. Is the director wrong? Or is it true that the majority of scenarios are weak dilutions of the big idea that the original author had in his mind?

The first speaker of the evening, Arthur Somers Roche, opened with the remark, "The majority of well-known authors hold the moving picture in contempt as a medium of expression for their ideas because so many of them have sold their works to producers and have been unable to recognize their story when it was finally presented on the screen. Pictures have for them become merely a means of getting a few extra thousands for their labor. They welcome the money, of course, but as far as being a personal affair it doesn't get them at all, their names being usually lost in small type and their reputation as an author not suffering when the picture was pronounced bad. All the blame goes to the director, who has to shoulder the producer's desire to fit the story to Miss Sunshine, when the part was written for Madam Lightning, or for some other reason the whole idea is changed. So the author simply takes the money and has no further interest except as the failure of the story might affect future sales of his works. As to loss of self respect—nothing doing.

"Picture producers come to the author and talk of having them write especially for the screen. Good! But when we ask for the advance that a publisher is glad to make, the producer says, 'Show me the goods first!'

"Why should we show him the goods first when others are only too glad to give us an order for a story and pay in advance, knowing from our previous work that the result will please the reader? Why should we write for the screen when we can get more money from the publisher and then sell the picture rights for more than the producer is willing to pay in the first place? The advertising from the book gives the story added value and makes the producer willing to pay more than he would for the story as an original script. We are business men as well as authors; show us where the producer's offer to write especially for him comes in!

Changing the Author's Work.

"Then look at the method of handling our stories. The producer makes general changes to fit his star. He turns it over to a salaried writer to make a continuity and there in that mysterious sub-cellar of hack work begins the rape of Belgium. What wonderful changes occur! The editor of a publication would not presume to change without consultation the work of a famous author, but these supermen of the moving picture change everything that the author loved most in his work. Then your General Director rewrites the entire story, perhaps without having read the original, and passes it to one of you directors, who is supposed to give a finished result that will show the world what the author intended. You have never met the author, you get his idea at third hand, and it is impossible for you to do us or yourselves justice. That you turn out the results you do is a wonder to us, even if the picture has no relation to our story except the name. And sometimes not that. The scenario should certainly have the O. K. of the author and the director, and the author should have a final conference before the work begins. I agree with you that then is the time for the author to take a long vacation, and if the director does not produce a picture that satisfies the author, said author should see to it that he has a new director for his next.

Composite Method of Production.

"I forget to mention that after the picture has been taken, you directors, in many cases, lose sight of it, and a few dozen more changes are made by the cutters and title men and others I do not know of. So that when the final result is shown on the screen it is the composite work of at least half a dozen men, and I do not believe that you can get a work of art by that method. The man who makes the picture should have all these other departments under his supervision. He should be the editor of the publication.

"I cannot see the reason for all these changes. We authors are willing to meet pictures half way, but——"

"No, you are not!"

The speaker was George Randolph Chester, who had come in during the first address. The two authors proved to be old friends and had a good laugh at their manner of meeting. At the earnest invitation of the first speaker and of the directors, Mr. Chester took the stand and said that he had had the same ideas as

Nope, We Won't Say "The Water's Fine," And we're strictly prohibition, too. Here are seventeen reasons the first speaker until after several of his stories had been pictured with unsatisfactory results, and he had made up his mind to find out the reason. After several months of close study he was willing to stand by his statement that the authors were not inclined to meet pictures half way. That to do so they would have to learn a new trade. That for the making of stories for the screen a new method must be studied and that those poor maligned scenario writers who were doing their level best to turn out good scripts knew more about the requirements of a picture that most of the authors who complained of the murder of their stories.

"We authors," continued Mr. Chester, "think in words—words—words. We must think in pictures or acts if we are to be successful in this new medium which, after my study, I am willing to state is greater far than the printed page. There are, of course, limitations to the screen, but the more we study it the sooner do these limitations fade away, and even those deep ideas of psychology and philosophy which we say can never be shown in pictures gradually take concrete form, for, after all, they are but the written expression of acts or thoughts, and thoughts are usually translatable into acts; and the screen is the art of actions and actions can show almost every emotion we know. But we do not know how to do it as yet and we will never know until re realize what a wonder we have to work with and until the great minds get rid of their contempt and settle down to a serious study of the screen."

The discussion then became general and, for the first time in the history of the screen, this subject was discussed in company by the men most interested. From this and other meetings which are to be arranged between the men who write the stories and the men who make them may come that improvement which the whole trade is striving for.

TRIANGLE TO PRODUCE IN THE EAST

President Waters Believes Eastern Location Offers Greater Variety in Climate and Locale

DISCUSSING the sale of its Triangle Culver City studios, P. L. Waters, president of the Triangle Film Distributing Corporation, announced that the disposition of these properties has been under consideration for some time, and that the sale of them to the Goldwyn company will enable Triangle to begin, sooner then they had anticipated, their new plans.

In fact, the rental of these studios to the Goldwyn company last November directly accords with the plan of Triangle to erect studios and to start production activities in the East. Not to minimize the advantages of California as a production center, Mr. Waters referred to the advantages of the East in variety of climate and locations, factors which a number of producing concerns lately has been emphasizing, as evidenced by the large studios now building in this vicinity.

"Furthermore," remarked Mr. Waters, "both the stars and their supporting casts, and in fact the entire personnel entering into the production of films, frequently express their preference for Eastern locations, where they are free from the monotony of even the most perfect climate, more contented in their surroundings, and hence more enthusiastic about their endeavors."

While the plans for Triangle production activities are not sufficiently matured for specific announcement, Mr. Waters made the statement that studios and location had already been provided for in the East, so that the stars and their companies that shortly will be under the Triangle contract may start work soon. Just where these studios will be located Triangle did not care to announce at this time, but a definite policy will shortly be coming.

Robertson-Cole Contracts for Brentwoods for Year

EXULTANT over the success won by "The Turn in the Road," through its exploitation by Robertson-Cole, the Brentwood Film Corporation, through its president, L. C. Haynes, has just entered into a contract whereby its entire product for the ensuing year will be assigned to Robertson-Cole. The contract calls for the same code of acceptance governing all productions made by the various Robertson-Cole units, which gives Robertson-Cole the power to decide when a photoplay comes up to its standard before releasing it through Exhibitors Mutual.

The Brentwood Corporation has decided upon no definite number of productions for the year, but will devote as much time as is necessary to make every one of its attractions the best possible.

Under the terms of the contract with Brentwood, Robertson-Cole will release "Better Times," the second King W. Vidor production, as successor to "The Turn in the Road." "Better Times" is a comedy and has just been completed.

The Brentwood-Robertson-Cole alliance undoubtedly will be received as a radical step by the industry inasmuch as Brentwood is probably the only big producing organization which does not employ high-salaried stars. It depends upon clean, wholesome, entertaining stories, well fitting types of all around competent players and upon the keenness of the ability of its director, King W. Vidor.

Truex Will Be Starred Individually in Comedies

ERNEST TRUEX will be starred individually in the new series of two-reel screen comedies soon to be placed in production by Amedee J. Van Beuren, who recently signed this star who is at present scoring in the stage farce, "Please Get Married," at the Fulton Theatre, New York.

Several stories with vast laugh-making possibilities have been purchased for Mr. Truex. Although the first starring vehicle has not been definitely decided upon it is not at all unlikely that Mr. Truex will make his debut in two-reel comedies in one of Albert Payson Terhune's stories.

The Truex comedies will probably be staged at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn, where the V. B. K. Film Corporation, another Van Beuren film organization is producing Paramount-Drew comedies under the personal direction of Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Coldewey Returns to Universal.

Anthony W. Coldewey, who broke into the motion picture industry as a writer on one of Universal's staffs, has returned to Universal after an extended absence. He is the latest addition to Universal's continuity staff. Coldewey has written and directed for Mack Sennett and L-Ko productions. He will do scenario work for the Big U Western dramas.

CHICAGO OPTIMISTIC OVER BUCK BILL

Film Men Believe Censorship Measure Will Be Defeated in Spite of Indignation Over Slides

SINCE wiring the story Wednesday, May 21, a healthy optimism has been growing daily in Chicago that the Buck bill will yet be defeated, notwithstanding the harsh treatment received by the opponents of the bill at the hearing before the judiciary committee of the House, Tuesday, May 20.

The officials of the Motion Picture Association of Illinois, though somewhat crestfallen, immediately set to work as soon as they got back to Chicago to turn the tide by all legitimate means possible. A circular letter to every representative in the House was printed and mailed Wednesday night, May 21, from the office of Lewis F. Jacobson, counsel for the association. The letter contained fifteen numbered paragraphs.

The first reads as follows: "That the slides and trailers offensive to some members were directed purely to experiences with some censors, and in view of their being misinterpreted have been stopped throughout the State of Illinois."

Legislators Indignant Over Slides.

The slides and trailers referred to were sent out from New York and roused great indignation among members of the House, because of the threats made against the future of those who might vote for the Buck bill. It is known that a number of members who were strongly opposed to the bill became so incensed that they decided to change their attitude when the bill came up for passage.

Paragraph No. 5 reads: "That the great body politic is against censorship, and this has been proved by individual petitions and written statements, which were presented in thousands at the hearing, without examination by anyone, and which are still on hand for inspection, most of them signed by mothers and heads of families."

Newspapers Against Buck Bill.

No. 6 reads: "That 1,200 exhibitors throughout Illinois and their 5,000,000 weekly patrons located in every district in the state oppose censorship, and their votes have so proved it, wherever taken."

No. 7 reads: "That censorship on its merits has been presented to every newspaper in this state, and there is not a single newspaper in Illinois that favors the Buck bill, although heretofore some of them had taken snap judgment on the question."

No. 12 reads: "That the greatest assurance for good pictures lies in the fact that no exhibitors whose patronage depends on the good will of the family, constantly attending, can risk financial suicide by exhibiting an offensive picture, and that the millions of dollars invested by these exhibitors in this state is security therefor."

No. 15, the last paragraph, reads: "That the pledge of 98 per cent. of the producers of the United States, effective June 1, 1919, will quickly and surely forever stop improper exhibitions."

On Friday morning a printed notice was mailed to every exhibitor in Illinois by the Association, urging him, among other duties, to visit the three members of the House of Representatives in his district and take with him prominent business men, bankers, newspaper editors, and petitions from patrons to prove that the public does not want censorship. A wire was also sent to the district leader of the Association, in each of the fifty-one senatorial districts, enjoining him to tell exhibitors in his district either to wire or see each of the three representatives in the district concerning the Buck bill, and why it should be defeated.

Bring Full Strength to Bear.

The foregoing will show that the officials of the Motion Picture Association of Illinois have left nothing undone to bring the full strength of exhibitors and their patrons in all parts of the state to bear against the passage of the State Censorship bill.

The judiciary committee of the House met Wednesday, May 21, after the regular session, and reported the Buck bill out of committee by a vote of 18 to 2. There are 42 members on this committee. The bill was then placed on the calendar for second reading Friday, May 23. Amendments will likely then be proposed, after which the bill will be placed on the calendar for the third reading.

No vote will be taken on the bill until the week of June 1.

Picture Men Expect to Kill Bill.

Lewis F. Jacobson, counsel for the Motion Picture Association for Illinois, said to the writer concerning the chances of defeating the bill: "We are renewing our efforts and expect to kill the Buck bill. We feel that great harm has been done by the trailers sent out from New York, which were widely used in Springfield. They gave great offense to legislators, many of whom had been friendly to the exhibitors up to that time, and who had given good reason for the belief that they would vote against the measure.

"Trailers" Created Bitterness.

"If legislators get over the bitterness created by the trailers, there will be no question that the bill will be defeated."

In a dispatch to the Evening American, from Springfield, May 23, a correspondent states that "some prophets go to the extent of predicting that Governor Lowden will veto the 'search-and-seizure' bill, and pass the word to his friends in the Legislature to stop the State Censorship bill before it reaches his office."

In a brief conversation with Miss Rose Tapley, special representative for Famous Players-Lasky, for better pictures, she made known that she had been received by Governor Lowden, while in Springfield, and that he had assured her that the State Censorship bill was not an administrative measure.

National Film Association Sprung at Chicago Meeting

AN important meeting of the F. I. L. M. Association of Chicago was held at the Hotel Morrison, Thursday evening, May 22, the proceedings lasting until midnight. Secretary Frederick Elliott, of the National Association, C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and F. C. Quimby, director of Pathe exchanges, who stopped over specially for the occasion, participated in the deliberations.

For some time past the members of the Chicago Association have been aware that their rules governing film service have been infringed in overlapping territory, which the film trade boards of Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and St. Louis also cover. To remedy the evil the Chicago meeting was called and representatives from the trade boards of the cities mentioned were invited to attend, in order to exchange views and form plans for working in co-operation henceforth. Two members of the film trade board, in each of the cities mentioned, were present at the meeting.

Film Board Members Present.

C. W. Eckhardt, district manager of the Fox Film Corporation and president of the Chicago F. I. L. M. Association, presided at the meeting. When film service matters were disposed of a general discussion was engaged in, during which Secretary Elliott was consulted as to the advisability of forming a national F. I. L. M. organization, to be affiliated with the national association. Mr. Elliott was favorably impressed by the plan and stated that he would report to the association for further action.

National Association Suggested.

It was then suggested that a national convention of all the F. I. L. M. associations in the country be held in the near future, in some city centrally located, to be named later. Of course Chicago is the only city that can fill the bill, the writer thinks.

Harry T. Nolan, manager of the Denver office of First National, who was in Chicago at the time, was an interested witness of the proceedings at the meeting.

Messrs. Balaban and Katz Will Build a New Theatre

SAM KATZ and Abe J. Balaban, owners of the Riviera and the Central Park theatres, in Chicago, and reputedly and deservedly known as the foremost exponents of the most up-to-date methods of moving picture presentations in this city, have launched a new venture in theatre building. They have secured a site of 125 by 225 feet in Cottage Grove avenue, between Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth streets. Here they will build a thoroughly modern picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 3,200 persons, at a cost of $350,000, which sum also includes the cost of the building in which the new theatre will be located.

Work will begin in about four weeks, and it is expected that the house will be in readiness for opening about April, 1920. Architects Rapp and Copmary have charge of the construction.

Owner of Ideal, Dayton, Visits Chicago.

John Seifert, owner of the Ideal Theatre, Dayton, was a visitor in the city last week. He was seen for a moment and explained that he was here in the interests of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League, in connection with the music tax question. He said that no suits as yet had been filed against exhibitors in Dayton, but if any be brought they will be taken through to the very highest court.

Mr. Seifert reported good business in his territory and said the Ideal is getting its share. He is a strong believer in the right kind of newspaper advertising, and uses only the best paper for that purpose, in his case, as the size of the Ideal will not permit advertising in all. It seats 365 persons.

Harry Cohen Goes to Hospital.

Harry Cohen, one of the directors of Metro, who came on last week from New York to assist in the determination of the site for the new exchange building in Chicago, was suddenly taken ill soon after his arrival, and was at once taken to the Michael Reese hospital, where he remained until Sunday, May 25, when Dr. Emanuel Friend advised him he could return to his home in New York.

News Weekly for Manila.

The Bass Camera Company has advised the writer that Gregorio Nieva, of Manila, P. I., owner and proprietor of the Philippine Review, purchased a complete motion picture laboratory last week from that company. President Bass, of the company, states that Mr. Nieva will produce a news weekly in Manila showing the activities in that capital.

Mr. Nieva is a member of the Philippine Commission and is now touring this country under the auspices of the U. S. Government.

New Site for Exchanges in Chicago Finally Decided

HARRY COHEN, director of Metro; Lewis Innerarity, secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc.; H. M. Burman, general manager of Universal exchanges, and F. C. Quimby, director of Pathe exchanges, arrived in the city Tuesday, May 20, from New York, to confer with the members of the F. I. L. M. Association of Chicago on the site for the proposed new building that will house all the important exchanges in Chicago after April, 1919.

At a meeting held in the Hotel Morrison Wednesday, May 21, it was unanimously agreed that the site on Ninth street and Wabash avenue, which had been selected by the F. I. L. M. Association some time ago, will meet all needs. All arrangements were completed in the matter of signing leases by the various exchanges for office space in the new building, before the close of the week ending Saturday, May 24, and the preliminary work in clearing the site of old buildings will start at once.

"Taxi" Big Success at Castle Theatre.

Taylor Holmes, in "Taxi," pleased crowds at the Castle Theatre, State street, near Madison, at its opening run in the city, during the last half of the week of May 11. This rattling good comedy, with its fine photography, also made hits at the Linden, Victory and Hamlin during the week beginning May 18. It also scored heavily at the Orpheum, Rockford, Ill.; the La Salle, South Bend, Ind., and in several other houses.

F. E. Williams, in charge of bookings of Triangle's Chicago office, informed me that he is highly pleased with the demand for this feature.

He also stated that "Peggy" is booked up solid to July 1, in Chicago and adjoining territory.

R. E. Bradford, manager of the Chicago office, was in New York, on a business trip, last week.

"Shepherd of the Hills" at Randolph.

"Shepherd of the Hills," adapted from Harold Bell Wright's novel of that title, is a popular successor to the previous successes shown at the busy Randolph Theatre. The scenes are laid in the Ozark mountains, and the story has a heart grip that makes a second viewing almost imperative.

Owner of Tulane Pleased with Business.

F. Z. Lewis, owner of the Tulane Theatre, this city, was a visitor at our office last week. He reported very fair business and always to capacity for features. His house seats 300 people and admissions for average programs are 10 and 15 cents on Saturdays and Sundays, and 6 and 11 cents on the remaining days of the week. For big features, on the corresponding days of the week, he charges 17 and 22 cents, and 11 and 17 cents.

Mr. Lewis books makes of Mutual, Universal, Select, Fox, Celebrated, World, etc. He has owned and managed the house since April 15, and is well satisfied with his successes thus far. The chief object of his call was to pay his annual subscription for the Moving Picture World, which he deems indispensable to his business.

People's Bans Vaudeville for Pictures.

Al Lyon, a well known and successful manager of Chicago picture theatres, was recently appointed manager of the People's Theatre, Forty-seventh street and South Ashland, which was formerly a vaudeville house. The house is practically new and seats 2,500 persons. It has one of the most imposing interiors of any theatre devoted to pictures in the city. Mr. Lyon will book only pictures of the best class, and will offer the first picture program ever seen in the house in about a week. His top admission will be 22 cents. An excellent orchestra has been secured to play the accompanying music.

Big Business at Orchestra Hall.

Charles Ray in "The Busher," a Famous Players-Lasky production, pleased large gatherings at Orchestra Hall, during the week beginning May 18. It was quite a contrast to the "Knickerbocker Buckaroo," which packed the hall daily, the preceding week.

Dorothy Gish, in "I'll Get Him Yet," is the attraction for the week of May 25.

Moore and Crandall Become Keener Washington Rivals

IMMEDIATELY following the brief statement made in the local press to the effect that the York Amusement Company had broken ground on Georgia Avenue, Washington, D. C., comes the announcement by Tom Moore that the Moore Theatres Company will erect a neighborhood photoplay theatre, the first of its kind, to show first-run pictures. The new playhouse will cover an area of more than 46,000 square feet, and will be erected at Fourteenth street, between Kenyon street and Park road.

It will cover what was formerly the Mt. Pleasant playgrounds and adjoining property. Architects are at work on the plans. Electricians are planning unique electrical lighting effects for the new house. The Fourteenth street theatre is the first of at least three neighborhood theatres to be established by Mr. Moore in a widespread expansion program which he has adopted.

The announcement has, of course, started a great deal of discussion among exhibitors and exchangemen in this city. Harry Crandall heads the York Amusement Company and incidentally has the Savoy Theatre, located across the street from where Mr. Moore says he is going to build.

The moving picture men say that it looks as though Mr. Moore is "going after Mr. Crandall." The latter has declined to comment on the situation, preferring, he says, to go ahead with his own efforts without thought of what some one else might or might not be planning to do.

Fox Films in Dutch East Indies.

Special Representative Darling, of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been visiting the Dutch East Indies, has practically completed his trip, designed to establish Fox films firmly in that section of the globe.

This trip is the final link in the chain of territories which Mr. Darling has visited in his tour of the world, and means Fox films in all parts of the globe outside of the Teutonic Countries.

ABRAMS REAFFIRMS COMPANY'S POLICY

United Artists' General Manager Declares That Single Pictures Rule Was Dictated by Managers

FOR several weeks past the ninth floor of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, has been a busy place. The announcement of United Artists' Corporation opening its campaign for the release of its first production, a Douglas Fairbanks picture, on September 1, has brought a constant stream of the foremost picture theatre men of the country to its offices.

While a considerable department is busy with telegram and correspondence that keep flowing in, the executive heads of the company have been engaged for days with representative showmen from practically every state in the Union who have come to New York especially to secure for their houses the product of the United Artists.

During the last week, for example, Eugene H. Roth, of the California and Portola theatres in San Francisco, who came East solely to arrange in person for the Fairbanks picture, wired his board of directors that he had successfully completed negotiations with United Artists and that he had secured the Fairbanks production for an extended run beginning early in September for the California.

Among the many other visitors of note was Tom Ealand, managing director of the beautiful Majestic Theatre of Detroit. The Majestic stands as one of the country's monuments to genuine showmanship. Mr. Ealand has secured United Artists first release for his house.

Abrams Affirms Sales Policy.

Hiram Abrams, general manager of United Artists, personally has negotiated with almost all of the exhibitors who have came to the company's offices, and he has expressed himself as more firmly convinced than ever of the equity and sound business foundation of the sales policy on which the pictures of the United Artists are to be released.

"Our single picture policy," said Mr. Abrams, "was inaugurated by exhibitor demand. In my investigations all over the country I found that picture theatre men had come to the point of exasperation with program and star series methods. They wanted to have the best in productions, but they wanted these pictures on a basis of freedom that would allow them to make as much profit out of each big release as was possible.

"I got this demand direct from exhibitors themselves, face to face, man to man. And that this demand was not idle talk, that it was sincere, is proved by the unanimity with which these selfsame exhibitors are signing up for our first release on exactly this basis. To have theories about methods of release is one thing; we can argue without end and get nowhere. The proof of what exhibitors want is in what they buy, and not a single exhibitor who has come to our office—and we have been in touch with hundreds—has suggested the slightest change in our open booking, single picture plan. That's the answer, isn't it?

Says Attractions Already Are Sold.

"The pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith stand alone as box-office attractions. They are thoroughly sold to the public; an exhibitor's campaign in their behalf amounts almost entirely to calling the attention of the public to the fact that he has these pictures at his house. Add to this hundred per cent. pulling power the quality that the United Artists will be able to put into release, and you will understand what exhibitors will be able to do with each and every production when they get it free and clear of any tie-up of any sort with any other picture.

First Picture in September.

"I don't want to be premature in announcements regarding our first release which is scheduled for September, but I will say that the lengths of the runs for which exhibitors are taking the picture is the most satisfying demonstration of their new sense of freedom under our sales policy. These men are taking the picture for runs that will be absolutely revolutionary. They are going to play the picture for every penny of profit that they can get out of it. They are going to cash in on their ability as showmen. They are taking this one individual picture as a property rich in possibilities for big money, and without having to figure or worry about any other picture, they are going to make it work for them as no picture was ever worked before.

"In other words, they are going to get for themselves not 25 or 50 per cent. of the box-office value of a hundred per cent picture; they are going to get 100 per cent. of the picture's value to themselves, and that is possible only by taking each picture, standing it on its own feet, so to speak, measuring its possibilities without regard to any other picture, and then making the most of those possibilities."

Connecticut Progresses

From the Philadelphia Record.

In Connecticut, "the land of steady habits," the Legislature has just passed over the Governor's veto a bill permitting moving picture shows on Sunday. Some progress there from the days when a man was fined if proven guilty of the heinous offense of kissing his wife on Sunday! New England is keeping abreast of the times. Here in boss-ridden Pennsylvania it is still a crime for a man to go fishing on Sunday.

Ruth Roland in New York.

February. The couple went to Santa Ana, the Gretna Green of Los Angeles, to be married, and decided that they would keep their marriage a secret from their friends as long as possible.

She lost the wager, because it was only four months afterwards that personal friends of the couple made the discovery. Clary was with the William Farnum company at Palm Springs when the secret leaked out. Mrs. Clary is not of the profession.

Film Players Dance in Grocery.

C. C. Hall, popular grocer of Hollywood, and special friend of the picture players, gave a dance in his store one evening last week for the entertainment of his friends of the studios. For refreshments only such "eats" as could be found in a grocery store, such as bottles of pickles and jam, canned fruit and package goods, were served.

Hall's kindness and generosity to film players is well known in Filmland. The walls of his grocery store, an up-to-date and prosperous looking place, are covered with autographed photographs from his personal friends among players of the west coast.

Following his work on this picture, in which he will be associated with Mr. De Mille and Jeanie MacPherson, Major Beith may devote his time to original scenario work.

Major Beith served the first year of the war with the British forces, and later devoted his time to writing for the Allied cause. His work at Lasky's is his first venture in motion picture work, and his first civilian work in the past five years.

Villain Receives Real Stab.

While going through a scene for "The Spitfire of Seville," at Universal City last week, Hedda Nova, the star, under the direction of George Seigman, made a lunge at Leo Maloney with a dagger with which she was supposed to stab him in the play, and inflicted a gash nearly five inches long on Maloney's face. Miss Nova, carried away with her part, did not realize the strength and force she was putting into her action, and she was deeply distressed at the result. Maloney's wound was not dangerous, but it took several days to heal up enough to permit him to return to work in the picture.

Illness Delays Production.

Production on Katherine MacDonald's new photoplay, "The Bleeders," which has been delayed on account of the illness of Colin Campbell, the director, is again under way. WILL HANDLE FILMS INTERNATIONALLY

Adolphe Osso Forms Connection Whereby He Will Deal in Both Films and Stage Plays for France

ADOLPHE OSSO returned to New York last week after an extended stay in France, where he effected arrangements with a chain of exchanges in the principal European cities to distribute American-made motion pictures. Mr. Osso will maintain his headquarters in New York, but plans to arrange his time in carrying out the work of his new organization between his London and Paris offices.

Mr. Osso, whose organization is international in scope and who, as the exclusive American representation for the Charles Delac Vandal & Company, has already negotiated the acquisition of the Goldwyn output for distribution in France and is now arranging with several large producers for the foreign distributing rights to independent productions made in this country. Inasmuch as Mr. Osso is still affiliated with the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., his organization will also handle the foreign distribution of this concern's output.

The activities of Mr. Osso's organization will not be confined to motion pictures, but will also encompass other forms of amusement, principally the spoken drama. In view of the fact that lack of proper facilities has greatly hampered the efforts of American managers to stage legitimate attractions in foreign countries (with the possible exception of England) and learning from personal observation that foreign countries such as France, Spain and Italy are eager to see American stage productions, Mr. Osso will install in each of his branch offices a special department for the purpose of handling American attractions.

Will Also Handle Stage Shows.

These departments will place at the disposition of American producers. every facility to enable them to profitably accomplish this purpose. Mr. Osso can place at the disposal of his clients the works of the French Society of Authors and Composers, which he represents.

Mr. Osso also contemplates undertaking the distribution in the United States and Canada of motion pictures produced in France. His decision to bring to this country these productions was reached after extensive inquiry among American exchangemen, and theatre owners had revealed the fact that the memory of "Quo Vadis," "Cabiria," and other European films still lingered in the minds of the American picture-going public.

WARNER FILM GETS NEW YORK PREMIERE

"The Man Who Turned White" Will Open June 1 at the Broadway Theatre for an Indefinite Run

H. B. WARNER, who created the stage role of "Jimmy Valentine," and who more recently scored in "Sleeping Partners," is returning to Broadway, this time as star of a big motion picture production.

"The Man Who Turned White," which Robertson-Cole is releasing through Exhibitors Mutual, as the initial offering of its Superior Pictures series, has been booked for an indefinite run at the Broadway Theatre, by B. S. Moss. The Jesse D. Hampton drama of the sands of the Soudan will have its premiere New York showing at that playhouse on Sunday night, June 1.

To Be Shown in All Big Theatres.

The Broadway showing will inaugurate the nationwide appearance of the production in leading motion picture theatres.

After his first view of the picture, B. S. Moss selected it to succeed "The Unpardonable Sin," the big Blanche Sweet offering, which has held the Broadway for more than a month. Mr. Moss proclaimed the Warner picture one of the most entertaining photoplays he had ever seen.

The Broadway management is planning an elaborate showing of "The Man Who Turned White." The picture, in addition to the valued name of the star, offers many exploitation angles.

A Spectacle as Well as Drama.

The production is both spectacle and high class drama combined. Jesse D. Hampton, who produced the feature, spared no expense on any detail. He surrounded H. B. Warner with the most appropriate types he could obtain, and by strict attention to detail obtained one of the most magnificent desert pictures.

In the supporting cast are Barbara Castleton, Jay Dwiggins, Carmen Phillips, Wedgewood Nowell, Walter Perry, Eugenie Ford and Manuel Oieda.

The story was writen by F. Willis McGrew. Mr. Warner will be seen in a dual role, first as Ali Zaman, the renegade white man leader of an Arabian Band, and then as Captain Rand, an officer who was cashiered from the army for assuming the responsibility for a bitter charge, which should have rested upon another's shoulders.

CARL LAEMMLE CREDITS THE SHOWMEN

Says Exhibitors in Dealing with and Satisfying the Public Have Made Photoplay Success Possible

NO one producer, or even one group of producers, can claim to have made the motion picture industry what it is today," said Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company, in a recent statement. "In my opinion," Mr. Laemmle said, "the producer has of course done a great deal to advance the industry, but the man who has contributed more to it than any other, is the exhibitor.

"To the industry as a whole, the exhibitor is the backbone, he is the one to count upon for new ideas, and to whom the producer looks for suggestions. The exhibitor has been the mainstay of the industry for years, and beyond a doubt, the credit for the success of Universal or any other company is due to the exhibitors of the country.

Exhibitors Must Please Public.

"The exhibitor has been the man to deal with the hardest group of all—the public—and he who somehow manages to please the public all the time is the best man. And the successful exhibitor of today is that man. He has worked hard for his success and has earned it through the patience of years and trials which have been many.

The picture-showman, in order to be successful, must always keep his program up to a high standard, and, naturally, at times his pictures have been below the standard he has set. It has then been up to the showman to exploit his program in such a novel manner that the public has not noticed the below-standard picture. And the exhibitor has done this, and thereby not only saved himself, but the honor of the industry."

Producer Must Do His Share.

"The producer," Mr. Laemmle continued, "of course has had his knocks and trials also. But the producer in many cases, has held the whip hand over the exhibitor.

"Some producers in the past have taken advantage of this. But the successful producer has not done this, he will not do it in the future. If he does, he will eventually fail.

"As president of one of the oldest companies, I can truthfully say that Universal never took advantage of the exhibitor, and in my opinion, that is why Universal is among the oldest companies. Universal has always been the friend and helper to the exhibitor.

"The showman looks to the producer for aid as well as good products, the same as the grocer does to the farmer, or the automobile dealer to the factory that makes the car he sells. He must have confidence in the producer's products, and above all, he must have confidence in the business policy of the producer.

Confidence and Co-operation.

"Without that confidence from the exhibitor, the producer cannot hope to be successful long. Universal has cooperated with the exhibitor in every possible way.

"As a result, Universal today stands as an example to other producers. Its fair-minded and 'square deal' policy has been recognized by the successful producers all over this country, as well as in the foreign countries. And today Universal counts its exhibitor-customers among the tens of thousands."

This is Universal's first week of celebration in its anniversary month, and immediately after Universal's anniversary month was announced, telegrams were received from the exhibitors congratulating Mr. Laemmle.

Smoots Add Third Theatre to Chain in Parkersburg

THE SMOOT AMUSEMENT COMPANY, now controlling the Camden and Auditorium Theatres in Parkersburg, West Virginia, will add another house to its string in the same city. The addition is the Lincoln, a new house which will go up on the corner of Market and Eighth streets on the site of the Sycamore Place.

The owners of the Smoot Amusement Company are Fayette C. Smoot, Charles S. Smoot and Frank J. Hassett. The concern is one of the livest organizations not only in the city but also in the surrounding district. The Parkersburg News, in its story on the new theatre, says: "The News wishes to take this occasion to commend the promoters of this new enterprise for their go-ahead policy and their confidence in Parkersburg's future. It takes nerve and resource to take such steps, and fortunately for Parkersburg these men are equipped with these qualities. They do things."

The new Lincoln will seat 1,000 and will cost $90,000. It will embrace every modern item in construction, decoration and equipment and will provide an artistic asset to the city. Fred W. Elliott of Columbus, Ohio, is the architect, while the contract for the structure has been awarded to R. L. Brown, a local builder.

Richmond Says Its Movie Ball Surpasses All Others

NOT to be at all outdone by the recent "Movie Balls" of Providence and Baltimore, Richmond staged a similar affair on Saturday evening, May 24, for the entertainment fund of the returning soldiers of the city. More than 3,000 persons packed Gray's Armory and it was estimated that 1,500 remained outside, unable to get a view of the screen notables who helped make the evening a brilliant one.

The grand march was led by the Lee children and Creighton Hale, followed by Smiling Bill Parsons and his wife, Billie Rhodes; Florence Billings and Jack Alicoate; Anne Luther and Allen Rock; Mrs. Lee and Leon Rodgers.

Many members of the 116th Infantry were present and divided honors with the screen stars. The sale of tickets for the purpose of raising a fund to provide entertainment for the returned overseas veterans brought in over $3,000, while the various activities of the moving picture folk raised the total to something like $7,000. Autographed pictures of the stars were sold, while Anne Luther and Florence Billings auctioned off kisses. Creighton Hale acted as master of ceremonies and Bill Parsons and Billie Rhodes gave a number of clever imitations.

INTRIGUE NOT ROMANCE, SAYS HAYNES

President of Brentwood Film Corporation Also Believes Shakespeare Was Wrong on "Name" Idea

L. L. HAYNES, president of the Brentwood Film Corporation, is of the firm, frank and final opinion that Shakespeare must have been dreaming when he wrote the well-known and oft-mentioned line, "What's in a name?" Mr. Haynes' corporation recently put forth "The Turn in the Road," which was widely hailed as an excellent and unique production and which received considerable comment as being a picture without a star.

"The Turn in the Road," according to the president of the company which made it, thus marked a turn in the road of motion picture production, and the name of the picture proved that Shakespeare was off the right road himself on the name idea.

Mr. Haynes was in New York for the past two weeks negotiating the sale of his second photoplay. This production not only passes the turn in the road and the photoplay of that name, but continues along the road of better pictures. It's name, "Better Times," signifying in a sense "Better Pictures," puts another spike in the Shakespearean theory.

Contract with Robertson-Cole.

An interview with Mr. Haynes disclosed the fact that not only had he disposed of "Better Times" to Robertson-Cole, which company handled his first picture, but that he had signed a contract with that concern for the entire product of the year.

"We did not stipulate any specific number of pictures," said Mr. Haynes. "I feel that absolute freedom from haste and from the jamming through of production is essential to good photoplays.

"The productions of the Brentwood company are built around the idea of the story and its direction and not around the star. 'The Turn in the Road' exemplified this principle, and in our Los Angeles office today we have over 800 letters from all over the country congratulating us on the picture.

"We appreciate talent in acting, certainly, and we engage talent for our productions. But we select the story and not the star first.

"My ambition is to make the Brentwood company a clean company," Mr. Haynes went on. "There was a niche waiting for us in the producing end of the industry, and I believe we have filled it. Our aim is to make clean pictures that will appeal to the vast majority of people.

"You know, a great many of the producers have the idea that an intrigue is a romance. There are various kinds of romance, but according to my idea, intrigue is not romance at all. Intrigue is one element we leave out of our productions altogether."

Vidor Interested Him in Pictures.

Mr. Haynes expressed himself as being particularly pleased with the contract he had signed with Robertson-Cole for the distribution of his productions through Exhibitors Mutual. "I have been a business man all my life," he said, "and after a study of the business methods of several motion picture companies, I came to the conclusion that Robertson-Cole has the cleanest-cut business organization of any. And my relations with them have been the most cordial possible."

King W. Vidor, who directs the productions of the Brentwood company, was responsible for the entry of Mr. Haynes into the moving picture industry. Mr. Haynes was much attracted by the personality and accomplishments of Mr. Vidor and backed him to direct "The Turn in the Road." Mr. Haynes expressed himself as having all confidence in his director's power to turn out a line of masterly productions.

FLEISCHER ADVANCES TECHNICAL ART

Puts Life Action Into His Wonderful Series of Animated Pen Drawings, "Out of the Inkwell"

THERE is no surer proof of the fact that genius does not grow on trees than a close examination of cause and effect in technical art. Max Fleischer, inventor of the mystery process of lifelike action in the animated cartoon, is a living example of what can be accomplished by hard work and concentration. Most of us marveled when Max's clown of the inkwell made his appearance on the screen at the Strand Theatre a couple of months ago. We laughed at the grotesque star of the "Out of the Inkwell" as he confided to the public his likes and dislikes or yowled with rage when his creator's pen point showed too strong an affection for his trouser leg.

Who puts smoothness into his animated cartoons.

We saw him display athletic propensities such as might shame the star performers of the city's "gyms," and manly attributes not the least of which is the personal directing of the coloring and fashioning of his clothes. And while enjoying the novelty of these animated pen drawings, how many of us stopped to consider the hours of thought and concentration that made possible the lifelike action of the Max Fleischer animated cartoon, or the possible commercial value which it adds to this line of effort?

A visit to the Bray studios brings one easily face to face with the creator of "Out of the Inkwell," but not with his dark secret, the shaping of which covered one and a half years. He tells you, if you have the nerve to ask him, that it takes 1,800 drawings to make 300 feet of film, and then shuts up like a clam. So we have to be satisfied to let the thing remain an illusion for the present.

Mr. Fleischer is now devoting considerable time to applying his method to the technical field, where the possibilities are large. These lifelike animated drawings, including technical drawings from the Fleischer pen, will appear from time to time in the Bray Pictograph.

MacManus Promises a Big Dramatic-Historical Play

THE MacManus Corporation, of which E. A. MacManus is president, announces that it will soon release a super-film.

It is declared of this picture that the greatest characters in the actual history of the past five years have been gathered to form its all-star cast. Mr. MacManus asserts the names of the players will create a furore.

"When we say all-star cast in speaking of the players in this picture," declared Mr. MacManus, "we mean that our players are the actual, supreme stars of dramatic history. They are the real characters that have appeared in the greatest, most vital episodes that have gripped the imagination of all people.

Will Carry Authentic Cast.

"The story in which our world characters find expression is the supreme epic of history. It is fresh in the minds of all.

"Our company has been at work for months. The picture now is virtually completed. It will be ready for the market within about three weeks."

The story is said to carry a strong, throbbing, human touch, and to deal audaciously with big events. The play of the simple, homely folk and of historical figures is effected in smashing contrast. And it is declared, secrets of recent happenings, hitherto merely grazed and hinted at in the news are here smashingly revealed.

Power's Cameragraph at Convention.

The convention of the National Electric Light Association was held at Atlantic City during the week of May 19. It was held on Young's million dollar pier, and was largely attended. Moving pictures of a commercial nature were shown three times a day, and the excellent projection furnished by Power's 6B incandescent lamp equipment met with favorable comment.

IMPROVEMENT IN PICTURES IS MARKED

So Declares Frank Woods, Production Director at Lasky Studio—Two-Year Comparison Proves It

MAY has been an open season in New York for supervising directors and director generals from the West Coast. Frank E. Woods, of the Lasky studios, appeared first on Broadway. Then came Maxwell Karger, of Metro. A little later D. W. Griffith arrived with "Broken Blossoms."

There was a time when Mr. Woods was on the staff of the New York Dramatic Mirror, and it was one of his duties to sit in judgment on the one and two reelers which were then the pride and glory of the infant industry. Some persons are of the opinion that no man should start at that end of the screen activities, if he intends to be connected with actual production—a contention that will find no supporters among reviewers of either sex, and which Mr. Woods' success in his present field of endeavor proves to be an error—at times.

After all, it depends largely on the man.

"Growing Up with the Business."

Director of Production is now Frank E. Woods' official title with the Famous Players-Lasky forces. His visit to New York with Mrs. Woods was made in an exceedingly pleasant frame of mind. The list of releases turned out by the organization under his supervision during the last few months, is substantial evidence of the growth of Paramount pictures, and this may have had considerable to do with his enjoyment of his vacation. The day the interview took place was one of the few New York has seen this spring, when the sun was shining and there was no chill in the air, and that was another cheerful thing to contemplate and to enjoy. Mrs. Woods must have shared in the general rejoicing, for, after a short consultation with her husband, she left the hotel on a shopping tour, also in a happy frame of mind, and the interview got down to brass tacks:

"When were you in New York last, Mr. Woods?"

"Two years ago. I'm agreeably surprised to find that Times Square is no longer a reproduction of a studio set representing a mining scene of some sort."

"Are you as well satisfied with the progress the moving picture has made during that time?"

"More than satisfied. I grew up with the business, you know. It is only necessary to compare the pictures of two years ago with those of the present to see the improvement. Going back to the old Majestic and Reliance days and contrasting the masterpieces of that period with the feature picture of today tells the story still more forcibly."

"Speaking of the story, Mr. Woods, do you believe this present craze for stage successes and famous novels is a wise one?"

All Good Material Is Welcome.

"Why not? The screen must get material from every possible source; there are no new stories to be obtained. The work of the experienced dramatist and also that of the well known novelist is bound to be of vital interest. If it were not, the public would not have accepted it. There are, of course, many fine story-tellers who have been developed solely by their screen writing, but no producer is going to turn down material, no matter where it comes from, if he finds it suitable to his purpose. Given a drama with the right spark in it, a well equipped scenario department will put it into correct form for the screen. Stage plays are always in need of careful revision."

"How would it do to have stage dramatists in your scenario departments?"

"They would be very useful—after they had learned the technic of the screen. We make drama, of course, but our rules of construction differ in many essentials from the stage play. The photoplay is distinct, and has its own art form."

"You do not recognize two classes of screen fiction, then?"

The Lasky Manager of Production did not reply directly to the question, but smiled and went the interviewer one better:

"William C. De Mille claims that there are three forms; drama, narrative and lyric. He is a thinker and has made a close study of the matter, so it's quite likely he's right."

Why Pictures Must Keep on Improving.

A reference to the amount of work necessary to complete a picture and the uncertainty of its fate after it reaches the public brought out the need for the closest scrutiny by every one interested in its making.

"The task of overlooking the making of a picture means that we must prevent, if possible, any of the different departments from going wrong. The screen," continued Mr. Woods, "has certain advantages over the stage in the way its product is rehearsed and made ready for showing, but once a picture is released there is no chance to get a "tank town" verdict on it and then keep reshaping it until it is ready for the metropolitan market. Stage plays that look like failures the opening night are turned into successes by one or more changes in the cast and radical alterations in the plot. Beyond a limited amount of cutting and altering of scenes, the photoplay must stand as it leaves the studio. Long practice and a constant improvement in artistic skill and mechanical means have enabled the film companies to hit the demands of the public with encouraging frequency and to hide the fact that the shortage of original story material is being overcome by the only method possible—finer results in every branch of production."

A phone call conveyed the information that another interviewer was waiting in the office to see the head of the Lasky studio.

A last question was put to that gentleman:

"You started as a reviewer and ended as a maker of photoplays, Mr. Woods. How do you think it would work if conditions were reversed and a maker of pictures should become a reviewer?"

"The standard of reviews would go up fifty degrees," laughed Mr. Woods.

Tax Goes to Hospitals.

The Montreal City Council has placed itself on record as being in favor of using the revenue from the Amusement Tax exclusively for local hospital and charitable institutions, this decision being reached at a meeting of the council on May 22. The council decided that the existing realty tax is sufficient for the needs of the city without the necessity of using the revenue from the tax on admission tickets to local theatres. The council presented a solid vote in the matter.

The government of the Province of Quebec recently gave up the collection of the amusement tax and gave the various municipalities the privilege of taking this source of revenue.

FILMS TO SUPPORT SOLDIERS' THEATRE

Universal to Release Stage Women's Pictures—Money Raised to Maintain Playhouse for Wounded

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, announces the release of the first two-reel production of the Stage Women's War Relief Series pictures. The first of the series to be released is the one in which David Belasco is starred. The picture is now ready for distribution through the Universal exchanges and has been given the title of "A Star Over Night."

The money raised through the distribution of the dozen photoplays is to be used by the Stage Women's organization for the maintenance of a theatre in the Grand Central Palace Debarkation Hospital No. 5, New York City. It was for this purpose that the pictures were produced and it was for that reason only perhaps that many of the stars who appear in the various casts offered their services to the Stage Women's War Relief organization. The writers of the plays also volunteered their services.

Picture Made in New York.

All of the series of pictures were made in New York City, the majority of the scenes being made at the Estee studios under the supervision of Eugene Spitz. George Terwilliger was the director and Louis Dunmyre was the official photographer of the entire series.

David Belasco, who heads the cast of "A Star Over Night," is assisted by Bruce McRae, the Indian-English-American actor who has been in the stage limelight since 1891; Hamilton Revelle, who was on the stage at fifteen years; Elizabeth Risdon, a well known Broadway star; Mrs. Nate Rothschild, Hilda Spong, Edward Martindel, Gladys Martindel, Gladys Morris, and Kathleen Nesbitt.

The production was written by Ann Irish, and depicts the efforts of a young actress to become successful on the stage and also the efforts of an author and dramatist to secure the staging of his plays. Bruce McRae is cast as the young dramatist, having the name of Bryant Seymour, Mr. Belasco is himself the producer, and Elizabeth Risdon is the young actress who is also in love with the author and dramatist. Hamilton Revelle is the leading man in the play, which Belasco is to produce for the dramatist; Gladys Morris is the leading woman. Hilda Spong is cast as the aunt of the young actress and is herself in the play a retired actress. Edward Mertindel is cast as a rich clubman and backer of Miss Bright, the leading woman. Kathleen Nesbit and Mrs. Nate Rothschild are also cast in important parts.

Notable Stars in the Series.

In the series of twelve pictures to be released many notable stars are to be seen. Among them are Maclyn Arbuckle, Percy Haswell, Cyril Maude and Violet Heming, David Bispham, Nance O'Neill, Alfred Hickman, Yvette Gilbert, Edmund Breese, Shelley Hull, Robert Edeson, Lucia Moore, Ralph Morgan, Mabel Taliaferro, William Courteney, Jane Grey, Gail Kane, Conrad Nagel, Ethel Stanard, Enid Markey, Montagu Love, Adele Rowland, Galli-Curci, Holbrook Blinn, Jeanne Eagels, Helen MacKellar, Ethel Intropidi, Constance Binney, Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, Blanche Bates, William Jefferson, Daniel Frohman, Henry Hull, Lucia Moore, Florenz Ziegfeld, Julia Arthur, Little Ben Grauer, and DeWitt Jennings.

The authors of the series are Ann Irish, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Katherine Kavanaugh, Howard E. Miller, Frederick A. Kummer, Rachel Crothers, Wallace Clifton, Calder Johnstone, Jack Larric, Jessie Bonstelle, Mrs. Otis Skinner and Ethellyn Brewer DeFoe.

Among the most prominent members of the Stage Women's War Relief organization who were instrumental in the successful arranging of the pictures were Rachel Crothers, president of the national board of directors, Louis Closser Hale, Margaret Mayo, Minnie DuPree, Esther Lyons Eagle, Mrs. William Farnum and Daisy Humphreys.

Association to Continue Fight on Film Thefts

THE question of the theft of motion picture films had caused practically every producer, distributor and exchange manager in the business no end of trouble.

Through the efforts of the film theft committee of the National Association, of which Harold Pitman is chairman, thousands of reels have been restored to their owners during the past years, but the Association is not yet satisfied. The fight will be continued until the stealing of film is recognized by the light-fingered gentry as one of the most unhealthy of their habits.

A special meeting of the executive committee of the National Association was called recently to discuss ways and means to end this thievery. Too much leniency has been shown the guilty parties in the past, but a little surprise awaits the next ones who are apprehended, as the association is determined to make an example of them and give them the fullest punishment that the law provides.

The following committee was appointed to assist Mr. Pitman in perfecting the details of the fight: B. Adler, George Meeker, Alfred Wise, L. E. Franconi and William Wright.

Association to Standardize Film Exchange Buildings

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is taking another progressive step. This time it is the question of properly housing film exchanges throughout the country which is receiving the co-ordinated attention of the association.

For many months Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott has been communicating with the association's representatives in the leading exchange centers with the idea of gathering detailed information, including plans and specifications of any new buildings either contemplated or now in the course of construction. The results are filed in the real estate department of the association.

Mr. Elliott is now in Chicago attending a meeting of the exchange managers of that city, the purpose of which is to provide a suitable, centrally located building which will conform with all the safety and fire regulations and provide for the peculiar needs of the industry.

Chairman Walter W. Irwin of the executive committee has appointed a special sub-committee composed of Al Lichtman, W. E. Atkinson and Lewis Innerarity to classify the data which has been gathered, investigate the plans of proposed buildings, pass on leases, etc. In this work the committee will receive the assistance of John F. Ancona, the Eastman Kodak Company's fire prevention expert.

The individual members of the association are enthusiastic about the project of standardizing film exchange buildings and are co-operating to the fullest extent with the new committee.

Association Plans Big Show Film Exchange Buildings

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has just consummated arrangements by which motion pictures will be shown on a scale never before attempted at the Centenary Celebration of the American Methodist Missions at Columbus, Ohio, June 20 to July 13, 1919.

The main feature of the National Association's offer of co-operation is the exploiting of the commercial picture—features, comedies, weeklies, serials, etc. The officers of the association firmly believe that thousands of new fans will be recruited to the swelling ranks of movie lovers as a result of the Columbus exhibition.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott has sent an urgent appeal to every producing member to submit to Dr. C. C. Marshall, Joint Centenary Commission, 111 Fifth avenue, New York City, a list of all films suitable for this purpose, As many of the pictures have to be screened prior to their final acceptance by Dr. Marshall's co-workers, it is imperative that these lists be in Dr. Marshall's hands at the earliest possible moment.

"CAT" IS OUT OF BAG AT LAST

Seems to Be Something of a "Bear," Too—Not a Town, But a Character in Buck Novel of Kentucky

HERALDED by a blind campaign, stretching over a period of eight weeks, the second production made under the auspices of the Macauley Photoplays, Inc., "When Bearcat Went Dry," is nearing completion, and is promised for trade exhibition the latter part of June.

"When Bearcat Went Dry" is from the book of the same name, by Charles Neville Buck, author of "The Call of the Cumberlands," "The Battle Cry," and other well known works on the primitive people of the Cumberland mountains. The story is said to be more characteristic than any of his preceding books, at least, to have attained a greater sale than any of his earlier works.

The Macauley Company has been working on the film for five months. A company of sixty players has been up in the Cumberland mountains for the past nine weeks, in the exact locale of the story. Mr. Buck has given no little aid in the making of the film.

In the cast of principals are Bernard Durning, Evangeline Valentine, Lon Chaney, Winter Hall, Walt Whitman, Ad Brady, N. K. Wilson, Gordon Russell and John Lynch.

On March 14, Henry Butterfield, Ollie Sellers, Mason Hopper and the foregoing players journeyed from Hollywood to Marlin, located in the heart of the Cumberland mountains, many miles from Louisville.

Natives of the mountain district, some of whom had never seen a motion picture, were induced to participate in small character parts, and local color was secured through the knowledge that Mr. Buck was personally interested in the film

Bearcat a Cumberland Figure.

Edward Stacy, grandson of the original Bearcat, who is the foremost character in the book, was found and verified many of the incidents mentioned in the story.

Bearcat, contrary to belief, is not a town, but the appellation of a man. Long prominent in mountain life, he was one of the big, virile figures of the Cumberlands which have prompted volumes of fiction and fact, and one of the most astonishing personalities ever portrayed.

Bernard Durning was chosen to play the part of Bearcat Stacy, and Vangie Valentine, formerly appearing with Ziegfeld in his Amsterdam Roof show, is playing the role of Blossom. The picture is to be about six reels in length and ostentatious as to production, sets, and faithfulness to detail.

A campaign of nation wide importance has been instituted by the Macauley Company, and the publishers. Thousands of book, stationery and drug stores are to be decorated with poster announcements of the coming of the book, while numerous sensational publicity enterprises are being entered into under the direction of Harry Reichenbach, of the Macauley Company.

TO INCREASE CAPACITY OF ITS STUDIO

Hollywood Plant of Famous Players-Lasky Will Be Able to Handle Nearly 1,000,000 Feet of Film a Week

IN order to care for the increasing business of the company, particularly in the foreign field, the capacity of the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood will be increased to double the present output, with the result that it will be in a position to handle approximately 1,000,000 feet of film a week. This will make the laboratory the largest on the Pacific Coast. Milton E. Hoffman, studio general manager, states that it will not be necessary to erect a new building to care for the increasing business, but that by rearranging the interior of the present laboratory, the work can be satisfactorily handled.

In addition to the Lasky Ranch of 1,200 acres, where a wide variety of outdoor locations is available, the studio lots cover an area of ten acres, and the stages total 47,000 square feet of floor space.

The total number employed at the big plant, exclusive of the executive and office staff and directors and actors, is approximately four hundred.

In the stock rooms, exclusive of the chemical, wardrobe and drapery rooms and lumber storage, there are kept over 2,000 separate items, while catalogued in the property room are 12,000 items with a total inventory of nearly 200,000 articles. In one year there are used $60,000 worth of lumber, ten tons of iron, sixty tons of plaster and 12,000 feet of rope.

Lavner with Hodkinson Company.

Announcement is made from the sales organization of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that Harry S. Lavner has been appointed exploitation and publicity manager for the company's productions.

Mr. McCarthy, for more than a year, has been doing publicity and advertising work for Fox, having been in charge of the trade paper publicity and the Fox house organ.

WHAT THE EDUCATIONAL SCREEN SHOWS

Summer Camps, Southern Islands, Mountain Lakes Rival Topical Subjects for the Theatre Program

THE following brief summary of current educationals includes subjects of strong entertainment values, which reflect progress in the art of the camera and laboratory, and attract attention to the fact that good literature and effective subtitles are synonomous.

"Out-Columbusing Columbus."

One of the Outing-Chester group of pictures which is being released through the First National, takes us on a trip to the islands of Guadaloupe and Dominica, to look over the "findings" of Columbus. The picture presents a beautiful quality of photography and a set of witty subtitles. The old town of Basseterre is full of interesting sights, with buildings and places of historic significance, as well as streets on which modern stores can be found. At Point a Pitre the growing of cassava, and its conversion into meal for cakes which are sold in the market is shown. The lime industry of Dominica is also glimpsed, showing the gathering of the limes, and the hosing of the juice into casks for shipment. The Boiling Lake, showing Twin Falls on the way, is one of the features of the film. The trip through the Valley of Desolation to the scene where the Boiling Lake frets its life away in the crater of an old volcano, is one of rising temperature and increased interest. The Carib Indian is also encountered in the trip through Dominica. A couple of handsome types chosen as samples of the race reflect the good taste of the cameraman.

"Getting Gay With Neptune."

An Outing-Chester picture of activities at a girls' camp in Maine, where water nymphing is the favorite pastime. Some seventy to a hundred young girls give an exhibition of diving, swimming and canoeing that could scarcely be outdone. Closeups of the most expert swimmers of the camp, displaying the technical correctness with which they pursue the art of swimming, are unusually fascinating. Daring stunts with a canoe go to prove that the spirit of adventure is not entirely confined to the male of the species. The prettiest bit of work in the entire exhibition is an impersonation of the "Spirit of the Lake," when a young woman in gauzy garments gives a demonstration of swimming under water. The clearness of the water allows the spectator to watch the movements of the sprite as she slides under ledges of rock, or once in a while rises to the surface for air. This exhibition is unusual, and is photographed in splendid fashion.

Gaumont Has Reopening of the Zeebrugge.

One of the news reel features for the week of May 18 appears in the Gaumont Graphic, and it reveals more than has yet been vouchsafed regarding the blocking of the Zeebrugge canal. Pictures of the British vessel "Vindictive," which was sunk across the mouth of the canal have been shown from time to time; but in these scenes the other four boats which were sunk in forming the blockade have been omitted. Now that the canal is again being opened to commerce, we are allowed to view the unmistakable evidence of this skillful British feat, in the Gaumont Graphic. These scenes were included in the magazine sections of the Rivoli and Rialto theatre programs.

"Itasca Makes Her Bow."

The Strand Theatre included in its program for the week of May 18, a beautifully photographed series of views in the vicinity of the Minnesota Lake that put the Mississippi River on the map. Lake Itasca, as presented in Outing-Chester's best style, is a thing of beauty; and in her vicinity she includes more than rocks and rivers, forests and mountains—the cameraman caught some snaps of deer in flight over a domestic looking fence. These closeups of leaping deer are the most extraordinary pictures of the kind that have been seen. The picture in its entirety is unusually attractive.

Panama Canal Photographed From Air.

The photographing of the Panama Canal from an aeroplane, by a Pathe cameraman, was one of the features of the Strand Topical Review for the week of May 18. It covers the canal from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, specifying the points of interest, such as the Gatun locks, the Milaflores locks, the Culebra Cut, and the town of Colon. An excellent idea can be gained from the film of the relation the present canal system bears to that of De Lesseps, showing how the course of the present system cross-cuts that laid out by De Lesseps.

The Sources of Motion Picture Stories.

The extent to which literature and the drama have been drawn upon to furnish the themes of picture plays is strikingly brought out in the new "Garden of American Motion Pictures," compiled by the National Board of Review. This catalog lists 970 films selected because of their suitability for the family program or especially fine adult entertainment. Excluding educationals and short comedies there remain 585 films composed of feature pictures and a few shorter dramatic subjects. The sources of these 585 films are indicated wherever known, and a little reckoning yields the following figures:

Total number of pictures based upon (as below)	190
Stage plays or operas (standard or otherwise)	59
Poems	4
Other literature, classic or unquestionably standard (Novels, short stories, classic themes like "Cleoapatra").	17
Modern novels not included in previous classification, and magazine stories	121
	201

The discrepancy between the totals is due to the fact that in all cases the motion picture is indebted for its story to both a stage play or opera and to work of fiction or some other department of literature.

Assuming that these figures afford a

Metro Presents Some Matrimonial Extremes with "Almost Married" and "Some Bride."
May Allison in the one and Viola Dana in the other seem to be extremely well fitted for their parts.

fair index for all photoplays produced in the same period (approximately the year 1918), then it will be seen that nearly one third of the pictures are founded upon stories represented in the classifications given above. It will also be observed that classic and standard literature supply only a small percentage of themes—8 per cent.—as against 60 per cent, for modern or current fiction whose literary status cannot yet be agreed upon. This is to be expected—we are more interested in the world to-day and what is being written to-day—than in what is past. But it prompts the question: Are motion picture producers really so hard up for good plots as is often claimed? Or rather for scenarists capable of adequately translating the great works of literature to the screen?

Methodist Centenary to Use Films.

The Rev. C. C. Marshall, of St. James' Methodist Church, New York City, in charge of the motion program for the Centenary Movement of the Methodist Church, which will hold its convention in Columbus, Ohio, from June 20 to July 13, is conferring with the Social Service Department of the National Board of Review, with a view to working out a selection of films suitable for use in the demonstration programs to be given every day during the convention. These will necessitate the use of 600 reels of film which are satisfactory for church use, both dramatic and comic, and has involved an immense amount of work in reviewing the productions of all the different companies during the past two years.

Dazey and Hampton Get Big Posts in Selznick Company

MYRON SELZNICK announces two important appointments in the Selznick organization. Frank M. Dazey, well-known photoplaywright, has been placed in charge of the scenario department for Selznick, and Frank J. Hampton, who joined the organization a few months ago, has been made business manager of the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Dazey has written for several of the foremost film companies. He has written plays for Mary Miles Minter, William Russell, Emily Stevens, Herbert Rawlinson, Zoe Ray, and many others.

Mr. Dazey has only recently returned from the European battle front, where he saw action as first lieutenant, with the Field Artillery, 26th Division.

Frank J. Hampton joined the Selznick organization on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Hampton is a general efficiency man. He handled the affairs of the company in the West so satisfactorily that Mr. Selznick, when he left for the East, brought Mr. Hampton with him. Mr. Hampton is now located in the Selznick studios in the Bronx.

Gerard to See "Beware" in Detroit.

Former Ambassador James W. Gerard is expected to visit Detroit during the week of June 1 to see the public presentation of "Beware," his latest photoplay, of which he is the author. The picture was made by Warner Brothers and will have its first showing at the Broadway-Strand. Ambassador Gerard gives his share of the profits on the picture to the Salvation Army.

DUNCAN "GETS THE JACK" WITH "MICKEY"

How Manager of Colonial, Lincoln, Neb., Boosted Feature for Record Run for Full Week "Clean Up"

By EDGAR E. DUNCAN

Manager of the Colonial Theatre, Lincoln, Neb.

THERE is so much being said lately about the Big Four that one wonders what the picture-showman who doesn't hold a contract for these stars will do for something to run in his theatre that will make him money.

I am one who has ceased to worry. They used to call me a plain printer and editor at one time, but now they seem to think that I'm a live up-to-date theatre manager because I have carried out an idea to financial success. I erected the Colonial (seating 700) and opened under strong competition and have played nearly every star in the business and have tried service from practically every distributor in the country.

The news of what "Mickey" was doing elsewhere came to me, but I had played Mabel Normand and learned that my public had grown "cold" toward her since her comedy days, when she was immensely popular. So I decided that no matter what "Mickey" was doing elsewhere I was unwilling to risk the picture in the Colonial.

Gave "Mickey" the "Once Over."

Not satisfied with sight-unseen judgment, I slipped over to Omaha and saw the picture first-hand. I saw it played to an afternoon audience, accompanied by a piano, and decided that if properly exploited it might be made to pay even with as critical people as I have to please in Lincoln.

To make a long story short, I contracted for the picture for May 12 for a six-day run, three days longer than any picture had ever been known to stand up and draw business in Lincoln with a continuous performance. Competitors laughed at my greenness and predicted my downfall.

I at once organized and put into motion a campaign for publicity such as had never before been known in Lincoln. The first gun was a narrow strip reading "Cheer Up, Mickey is Coming," printed on both sides of the cardboard so that no matter how they fell they were right side up.

For two weeks "Mickey" slides announcing the picture and slides with the chorus of the song were run on the screen while the organist played the music to accompany it. The air was "catching" and almost immediately a demand that could not be met was made at the music stores for the song. This made it easy to secure full window displays in both dime stores; and the stores selling Columbia records fell in line with window cards.

Two Advance Matinees for Kiddies.

Twenty-four sheets were posted with eights and cards scattered all over the city and out into the outskirts. Everywhere possible the name of Mabel Normand was kept in the background and "Mickey" alone was featured.

At the two special Saturday morning matinees for the kiddies, preceding the engagement, the children sang "Mickey" and were given small souvenirs to take home and show the folks. The idea proved to be a great "booster."

The whole city was talking, singing, boosting and waiting for "Mickey" long before the date was announced. I then announced the date and with it the fact that for the week I would advance prices to more than double the regular rates.

All this was done in spite of the fact that "Heart of Humanity" was to open next door in a larger house at their reguar price of 20 cents, including war tax. It looked like strong opposition.

Lines Held for Four Hours.

On the morning of the opening there appeared on the front of every street car large cards worded "Cheer Up, See Mickey at the Colonial Today." The entrance to the theatre contained large cut-outs, a few photos of scenes and an arrangement of flower boxes and oak leaves.

One o'clock was the time set for opening on Monday and by 12.15 the waiting line extended fully three-fourths of a block double-breast. This line was never broken until 4.30 and at 6.30 formed again and held until 9.30 at night. The people were "Mickey" mad and the opposition house with the war picture was glad to be near enough to get the overflow.

Tuesday it was the same story except that 1,500 people were turned away. The third day a brawny policeman handled the crowd in the lobby and again hundreds were turned away. Thursday was just a trifle lighter, and Friday was still lighter in the afternoon, but coming back strong in the evening. On Saturday, the sixth day, a line formed at 9 o'clock in the morning and was never broken until 9.30 at night.

All "Boosts" and No Complaints.

A young lady, made up in a "Mickey" riding habit, sang the song at each performance; not from the stage, but up and down the aisles, right where she could reach out and grip the hearts of the audience. Every patron was a "booster" and not a single complaint was heard about advanced prices.

The war picture finished the week after threats to pull it off on Wednesday and Thursday nights—but feverish attempts availed nothing. The people had been fed on "Mickey" until everything else was forgotten. Retired exhibitors and even competitors agree that it was the most successful engagement of any picture they have ever seen pulled in Lincoln.

There may be other pictures that will do the same, anyway Manager Duncan has no fears for the future, regardless of the rumors of combinations of stars and other big plans of producers. "Let them bring on the good ones," says I.

Canvas Topped Movies for Mississippi.

The big top in Mississippi is having strong competition in Shields Wonderland Electric Shows. The Shields company operates a circuit of canvas tops for motion pictures only in the towns of Morton, Pelahatchie, Brandon, Florence, Clinton and Ewards, all in Mississippi.

SHALLENBERGER BOOSTS STATE RIGHTS

Predicts Increased Prosperity with Advent of Better Features and Widening of Open Market

AN interview with Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, regarding the state rights business and its future, brought forth recently an interesting prophecy for the future. Dr. Shallenberger is in position to judge the tendency of the independent market. He has had his finger on the pulse of the state rights buyers for years. He has watched the market and has kept pace with the advancement of the business.

This is what he says: "There never has been such a strong demand for high class features among the independent buyers as there is at present—and this demand is growing fast. It is not a question to-day of 'How much must I pay for a feature?' but rather 'How big is the feature?'

Not "How Much?" But "How Big?"

"The independent buyer realizes that the more he pays for a feature, the more he will have to push it and the more he will have to pay for exploitation. That means that it must be a big feature, worthy of the time and money spent on it.

"Independent buyers realize that mere money will not put over a feature that lacks interest. It must have 'the goods.' The more merit it possesses the more the buyer will pay for it. It is not a question of money.

"Not so long ago the independent buyer was considered 'small fry.' Only the poorest of features were offered him. He competed with the established program exchanges but was compelled to accept a low rental price for anything he handled, regardless of its value.

How Conditions Have Changed.

"To-day the independent buyer is coming into his own. His exchange is one of the leading film centers in any town. In many cases the independent exchange is the big one, handling exclusive features and big money-getting attractions. This is the natural result of the growth of the independent market. The independent exchanges have come into their own, are handling a better class of product, on the whole, than formerly, and there never before has existed such an opportunity for the independent producer.

"There is a dearth of good features. There is a ready market for really big attractions. With the growth of the independent exchanges there opens up a newer, bigger market for good pictures.

"Open Bookings" Open the Market.

"Practically all of the program concerns have adopted what they term the 'open booking' system. This means that the independent exchange will have a much larger field in which to work. They will not be hampered by distributors who 'tie up' the exhibitors. The independent will have not only a larger field but with the advent of new capital into the business will have more goods to offer exhibitors."

Cullen Landis Signs with Goldwyn.

Cullen Landis, one of the most gifted juveniles in motion pictures, has signed a five-year contract with Goldwyn, and is to play opposite Mabel Normand in her coming production. He has just finished an important role in the Rex Beach play, "Star of the North," which was directed by Reginald Barker, and a part is being written especially for him into the coming Will Rogers production.

Goldwyn Resident Managers Discuss Next Season's Plans

GOLDWYN resident managers—eighteen in number—were assembled in New York for the most of a week for the purpose of discussing Goldwyn production and sales plans for next season, with the result that Felix F. Feist, vice president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, made this announcement:

"Such variance of opinion was expressed concerning what the exhibitor wants for next season that the probabilities are that the Goldwyn policy, when finally announced, will be one that will suit every exhibitor.

"Resident managers evinced much satisfaction over the announcement by Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn of the formation of Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., to produce the works of Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott.

"It was the unanimous opinion of the managers that the number of pictures produced in a year is not nearly so important as the quality of the pictures produced.

"It was the consensus of the convention that exhibitors had arrived at the point where they appreciated the importance of compensating the producer for properly made and properly exploited pictures."

EXHIBITORS WILL CONVENE FOUR DAYS

Add Two Days to St. Louis National Conclave for City Entertainment and Discussion of Problems

A TELEGRAM from the officials of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America brings the information that two days have been added to the two already set for the annual convention in St. Louis. The dates for the big national gathering at the Hotel Statler, are now June 25, 26, 27 and 28. As the Moving Picture World announced in its issue of last week, the opening of the conclave has been switched from June 11.

The city of St. Louis plans to give its moving picture visitors a splendid welcome. In fact, it was at the request of the city officials that the convention schedule was lengthened in order to permit them to give a better demonstration of their hospitality. Not only the exhibitors, but every branch of the industry will be represented at the convention.

W. E. Shallenberger
President of Arrow Film Corporation.

To Discuss Music Tax and Deposits.

The extension of time will also allow more problems to be handled by the exhibitors. Moving picture showmen have local troubles in plenty, but there are many evils common, according to indications, all over the country. The deposit system, for instance, is a thorn in the side of practically every exhibitor, and this problem will be given thorough overhauling on the floor of the convention. The situation most likely will be combated by a national platform of the Exhibitors League on the whole deposit system.

The question of the music tax imposed by music publishing companies on picture showmen using their productions, will also be thrashed out. These two questions are of every day concern to the exhibitor and serve to illustrate the importance of the coming convention.

The entertainment committee of the Exhibitors League promises that the 1919 session will surpass all previous sessions in the matter of making the exhibitors fell they are on a vacation. In fact, the committee strongly recommends that the showmen take these four days as a part of the vacation outing. The proximity of the convention to the oft-mentioned July 1 is remarked upon in the dispatches from the League headquarters as having a possible significance.

The National Committee, through its secretary, Frank Rembusch, urges that exhibitors secure hotel reservations as early in advance as possible. Mr. Rembusch, at 1109 I. O. O. F. Building, Indianapolis, or Hector Pasmezoglu, chairman of the convention committee, 302 Chestnut street, St. Louis, will gladly supply any needed information.

BREGSTEIN PICKS UP JERSEY GRAVEL

Traveling Representative of World Finds Newark, Paterson and Elizabeth Box Offices Busy Places

NAT BREGSTEIN, traveling representative and official hotel patronizer of the Moving Picture World, had scarcely shaken the psychophysical dust of the Back Bay Boston district from his spring tweeds, when his duties required him to trade the dust for some choice New Jersey gravel. Paterson, Elizabeth and Newark fell under the observing eye of Mr. Bregstein, to whom the sight of a lobby and the little box office is as the art salon to the patron of painting.

Paterson presented a prosperous aspect. Fabian's Regent and Garden; Max Gold's Strand and Lyric; Manager Johnson's Washington; Fox's American; Anderson's New Grand, and Ginsberg's Movies were all doing a healthy lot of business.

Fox's American Theatre, a remodeled edition of the Empire, is the newest on the moving picture Rialto. The seating capacity is now 1,400. A nine-piece orchestra is one of the new features.

Newark Good Movie City.

Mr. Bregstein renewed old acquaintances in Newark. He found that circus day in Newark, while a big top day for the juveniles and grown-ups, isn't a big top day for the exhibitors' admission receipts. However, barring circus days, the representatives of the industry in Newark have a heavy time transporting the day's profits to the bank.

Bob Sumner, manager of the Carlton in Newark, confided to Mr. Bregstein that he prefers to be "where he is than where he was," the "was" place being France, where Mr. Sumner was gassed. The Carlton advertising is well-known in Newark, since it publicizes itself as the house with the comfortable chairs.

Elias A. Wolf, manager of Fox's Newark American, is the owner of the Palace Theatre in Rochester. Otto Marbach, owner of the Apollo Film Exchange, is responsible for the statement that business was never so good for the Newark theatres as it is now. Several years ago a number of open air shows and movies on the second floor of store buildings were in full bloom, but the law doing away with the open air performances and the exhibition of pictures in buildings not specially constructed for the purpose improved the situation considerably. Newark is getting bigger and better shows, according to Mr. Marbach. The smallest house in the city seats 300, and the largest 3,500. The Lincoln, managed by D. Mate, is an 850-seat theatre doing finely on a 10-cent admission basis.

Elizabeth is an excellent supporter of the picture theatres, Mr. Bregstein discovered. W. D. Schafer, manager of Fox's Liberty Theatre, which is situated a little off the main thoroughfare, by using some clever lobby and advertising displays, gradually "vamped" the people off the main highway down his street to the theatre. He directed his advertising particularly to the curiosity of the women, and built up the patronage of the house considerably.

Harry Leonhardt's Vacation Includes Trip to Broadway

"I AM taking my annual vacation," said Harry Leonhardt, managing director of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, when seen at the Hotel Astor Monday of this week. "Mrs. Leonhardt is with me, but will visit her folks in New Hampshire before she returns to Los Angeles. I will go back alone in a few days—after I have visited the theatres and looked up the friends I made while here in New York as a vaudeville manager."

Mr. Leonhardt declared that the California Theatre was a thing of great beauty—one of the show places of Los Angeles. He was hailed with a hearty welcome at the Lambs and Friars Clubs where he holds membership, and may be found some of the time around the handsome clubhouse of New York Lodge No. 1, B. P. O. Elks, of which he is also a member.

"It would give me keen pleasure," said Mr. Leonhardt, "to have my friends here see the manner in which we present pictures at the California in Los Angeles. We consider nothing too elaborate in the way of stage settings when exhibiting the photodrama.

Features "The Red Lantern."

"Just before leaving home, I was immensely gratified at the manner in which the public received our presentation of Nazimova in 'The Red Lantern.' With our proscenium opening of 35 by 55 feet, we are enabled to give massive atmospheric setting with the picture flashed on the screen, thus satisfying a steadily increasing demand for the unusual on the part of the theatregoers.

"I am happy to renew old acquaintances here, and cannot too highly praise the manner in which your wonderful theatres are pleasing their audiences."

Bill Would Protect Trademarks.

Protection for the owners of trademarks, labels and similar property from the unauthorized use thereof is provided in a bill which has been introduced into Congress by Representative Mott of New York. Mr. Mott would make it unlawful for any person to copy, have copies, purchase or possess, for exhibition, issuance, distribution or sale "any business card, trademark, label, firm name, design, picture wrapper, paper, advertisement, or any device whatsoever * * * except under authority of a written and signed order duly and legally executed by the individual, firm, copartnership, corporation, association or body legally owning or possessing" the property.

Violation of this act is to be punishable by a fine of from $100 to $500 for the first offense, $500 to $1,000 for the second offense, or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both.

FILM BOLSHEVISTS ALARM NORWEGIANS

Prosperity of Film Renting and Exhibiting Menaced by Municipal Ownership and Government Socialists

IF somebody hands you a business card and parts his whiskers to hiss in your face—that's him! He's the film Bolshevist, all the way from Scandinavia. The card may not read: "Lenin, Trotzky & Co."—but it will mean as much. And this is how we know.

From Christiania, Norway, under date of April 24, comes a communication on the letter-head of Filmbureauernes Landsforening (the Norwegian Film Renters' Association), containing some of the details; telling how the Bolshevists have taken possession of cinemas and are running them with a view to monopolizing the film interest of Scandinavia. C. A. A. Olsen signs the letter, which runs something after this manner:

Socializing the Cinemas.

"Norway is at present the only country in the world which has cinemas run by the municipal authorities. Four or five years ago the small village of Notodden started a cinema which was owned and controlled by the village council. There was, at that time, not sufficient co-operation between the film renters and theatre owners in Norway to kill this dangerous movement at its birth.

"Notodden's example has, therefore, been followed by a majority of Norwegian villages and towns, the result of which is, that there is at present in Norway thirty-four towns and villages where the cinemas are controlled by the municipal authorities. At the capital of Norway, Christiania, which has a population of 250,000 inhabitants, and about twenty cinema halls, the owners have been forced to pay a tax of 22 per cent. of their gross takings, and in addition, 50 per cent. of their net profits.

"The result is that Norway today has the most unsightly and ill-kept cinemas in Europe—the owners have Damocles' sword hanging over them, held in the ever grasping hand of the socialist councils.

"No wonder, therefore, that they will not risk their money in building large and sanitary theatres, where there is always the possibility, that at the end of their efforts the socialist steps in and tears it away from them which they can, according to Norwegian law.

Would Socialize Film Renting.

"In spite of these conditions, the film renters in Norway have always been up to date with regard to quality of film. This has been made possible on account of their close relations with the other Scandinavian countries. The municipal cinemas have inadvertently profited by this, but they are not satisfied—they now also want to monopolize the film renting business.

"As they are conversant with the fact that film never is sold for Norway alone, but for all the Scandinavian countries in unison, the municipal authorities have also decided to monopolize film in the whole of Scandinavia. What this means for the film producers and sellers is unnecessary to point out to the trade in the United States. They will, if the plan should succeed, have to accept any price for their films which the Norsemen Bolshevists decide to pay—there will be no competition.

Film Renters Combine.

"The private film renters in Norway, twelve in all, have now declared war against the municipal authorities and boycotted all their cinemas for programs until they are ready to give up their fantastic plans. This has had a wonderful effect, but it is feared that the opposition party will request assistance of the Government, which is very democratic in its views.

"The Norwegian film renters have now sent out an appeal to the film trade the world over that they do not encourage the Norwegian Bolshevists, whose ideas may eventually be a menace to the whole trade."

Quits Black and White for More Dashing Color Scheme

C. LANG COBB, until recently special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has given up black and white to identify himself with natural color. C. Lang isn't going to film the natives of Africa or Hawaii, but he has arranged with the Artcolor Pictures Company to market and exploit its product in the capacity of general sales manager.

The Artcolor Company, of which Louis J. Dittmar is president, manufactures motion pictures in color. The color is in the film itself and the celluloid may be run through any projection machine without any specially constructed apparatus.

C. Lang Cobb
General sales manager for Artcolor.

C. Lang claims that the product of his company does not fringe or flicker, and that the color cannot be rubbed out. The Artcolor Company, which has its headquarters at 1109 in the Leavitt Building, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, will inaugurate its sales campaign shortly.

Vekroff to Direct "Dust of Desire."

Perry N. Vekroff has been engaged by World Pictures to direct the production of "The Dust of Desire," a photoplay in which Rubye De Remer will have the stellar honors. The story was written by Forrest Halsey in collaboration with Clara S. Beranger. Mr. Vekroff is at the World Studio at Fort Lee in conference with Mr. McIntyre, casting director of the company, selecting the best material from the thousands of actors who are registered on the books of the company, in order that nothing be left undone to make Miss De Remer's new association profitable to all parties concerned.

Universal Has Novel Idea to Boost Company's Sales

A NOVEL idea for the selling of pictures has been originated by Universal's sales department. This is the new "stunt" or "silent salesman" reel which is now ready for distribution to some twenty-four of Universal's exchanges throughout the United States.

The reel has been at least six months in preparation. The silent salesman reel will be sent to the exchanges, and the exhibitors near the exchange will be invited to review it at special showings. In case the exhibitor is a great distance from the exchange the salesman will take the reel with him and it will be shown to the exhibitor in his own theatre.

Shows All Types of Pictures.

The reel is designed so that views of Universal City are first shown, or the actual making of the pictures. Following the opening views are scenes from pictures in which each of Universal's stars have won success.

Throughout the reel the titles explain the purpose of the showing, calling attention to the commendable points of the pictures and the stars. Many criticisms from the best known trade magazines and papers are reproduced, giving the exhibitor a fair-minded idea of what the critics think of Universal pictures.

Every style and kind of picture produced by Universal is shown in the reel, including the comedies, the serials, and the Westerns.

Blackton Buys Rights to "Phantoms."

J. Stuart Blackton has purchased the screen rights for the world to "Phantoms," the serial magazine story by Wallace Irwin.

"Phantoms" is the third of the collection of stories scheduled for filming by Blackton Productions, Inc., under the expanded plans of the producer. The first is an original and yet unnamed story written by himself. This is now in production. The second is "Dawn," the latest best-seller by Eleanor H. Porter. Commodore Blackton now plans to record "Dawn" on celluloid as soon as he finishes his current production, and follow it with "Phantoms."

Famous to Screen "The Sea Wolf."

"The Sea Wolf," a popular Jack London novel, will be given sumptuous production at the hands of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Hollywood. George Melford will direct.

That a strong cast will be selected to fit the various striking types in the novel is assured, though no names have as yet been announced. The settings will be among the most effective and realistic.

The novel has gone through many editions and is still one of the most widely read sea tales of the century.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Speeding.

ABOUT the worst advertisement a house can have is a reputation for speeding films. Even some of the larger houses are guilty of this practise, particularly when they have a big show, and the fans are coming to avoid the houses where this is habitually practised. It would be better to offer a smaller program and show it at normal speed than to race the films and try to run off five and six reels an hour. It is unfair to the public, which pays its money to see proper projection. It is unfair to the producers, who have spent time and money to get adequate production, and it is unjust to the management itself, for the practise will surely react against the house where it is regularly practised. The other night a man from Chicago, who is a frequent visitor to New York, suggested a visit to a theatre, for he is an ardent fan. He was told that about the best offering was at a certain house. "I won't go there," he said flatly, "both times I have been there they have run the film too fast and have spoiled my enjoyment." He is a layman—a lawyer, but he knows what spoils the picture for him, and he will have nothing to do with a house which runs film too fast. There are hundreds of others and their number steadily grows. Run your own show at a proper tempo and then explain to your patrons why it is that they can see the films to the best advantage at your house. It will pay you.

Bleiching.

Leo A. Landau, of the Butterfly, Milwaukee, seems to have taken a leaf out of George A. Bleich's book, only he goes even further than Mr. Bleich, who merely tells his patrons when he has to run a poor picture. Mr. Landau takes about eight inches full and then gives a part of the space in each advertisement to telling what there is about the picture he does not like. In the example shown, the space ringed in the lower right hand corner, Mr. Landau tells what there is about the play he does not like. In this instance it reads:

A Full Eights in Which the Management Tells Its Adverse Opinion of the Show It Offers.

> As the wife, Norma does things that a good woman should not do—justifying her actions on the theory that she is teaching her husband a lesson. Being ourselves married, we disapprove of this method.

We do not believe that this "objection" is going to keep a few hundred persons away from the theatre, but it enabled Mr. Landau to get a half column of pure reading matter on his departure, and he has the public watching his space, and that is what Mr. Landau is after. It is a scheme that can be made to work for a long time instead of the usual "just once," and if carefully done it will make for good business, and be of real help to the theatre.

Footprints.

The Allen Theatre, Toronto, sends in a novel advertisiment which shows up well even in a reverse cut. It is a four eight and a halfs, which gives plenty of size to the letters, though the clock face in the lower left hand corner, which gives the times of showing, should have been made half as large again. This is an adaptation of the old sidewalk idea to the newspaper page, and it is nicely done. The myriad of dots catch the eye and excites curiosity, which leads to the reading of the brief message. Even if they only read that seal, the "Allen this week" has advertising value in itself and most readers will catch that even in glancing over the sheet. A majority still stop to read the rest.

Another "Heart" Display.

This display for "The Heart of Humanity" is from the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. We like it all except the huge heart in front of the box office. It is never a good plan to shut the box office from view. Let the possible patron see it, for it gives the silent suggestion that seats can be bought. It is never well to make it necessary for a prospective patron to look around for the box office. Keep it where he cannot help but see it. Cutting out the regular posters here gives an odd and pleasing effect worth copying.

A Brooklyn Program.

We show the front and backpages of the program of the Brevoort Theatre, Brooklyn. It is a 5 by 7 inch sheet printed in brown with the three change program on the three pages. The Brevoort does not offer the heaviest program in town, but we know of a number of persons who go to the house regularly, not so much with the idea of seeing any especial play, as because they know the program will be generally pleasing, and the musical numbers share the honors with the films. The house is in the fashionable section and draws from the best people, and these seek amusement rather than the work of some pariticular star.

Wall Frames.

The cut shows one of the wall frames used at the State-Lake Theatre, Chicago. These seem to be used in place of the usual easels and give a rich effect, being planned to work in with the mural decorations. The diamond shaped panel in the upper group of stills reads "this week," or "next week," according to the attraction. The glass front is hinged, and the stills are put in by unlocking the door. At the top of the frame is a shield for the electric lights, which throws their illumination downward upon the stills. The effect is rich and far in advance of the usual display method.

Display.

Here is a five fourteens from the Belasco, Quincy, Ill., which is good in most points, but loses some effect through the dating. Had the three lines just below the signature been set in twelve or even a light 18 point, the name of the star would have come up much better, but as it stands, these three heavy lines detract from the name of the star. An additional 12 point reglet between the given and surname would have helped, and a light line letter above would have doubled the value of the display. As it is, the cut has to do all of the attracting, since it hides the name and title, and nothing is done to help out. Apart from this the advertisement is unusually well set and it is readable and attractive.

Two in One.

This half page from the Liberty, Youngstown, Ohio, is well laid for "Common Clay," getting a clear display and not trying to tell everything just because a half page has been purchased, but the runner on the left does not hook up well. Because of the difference in the frames there is not the suggestion of unity. We do not believe that anyone is going to suppose that the two column bit belongs to any other house, but we think that by extending the frame to include all of the space a better looking advertisement would have resulted. It would have been better still had the stuff been split, with the "All new productions" going over to the extreme right hand, both sections being run single instead of double column. It is a small matter, but it would have helped.

Press Work.

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal, Providence, R. I., sends along some advertising clippings and adds a half column news story of how on a certain evening the electric lights went out in the entire Olneyville district in which his house is located. The story relates the happening from a news point of view and then goes on to hang the story on the Royal where Mr. Lovett hustled a couple of autos for an impromptu lighting plant. One was run up to the opened lobby doors and the other to the side entrance and the headlights illuminated the interior sufficiently to permit a community sing until the trouble was remedied and current was again available. Mr. Lovett adds:

> We take advantage of every little point here and try and get some advertising or publicity out of every move that we make. When this particular incident happened that was the first thing that entered my mind after I saw that my patrons were well taken care of.

That's the big idea of press work. Keep on the job. Make advertising capital out of everything available, and rush off to the telephone the moment anything happens. It is the finest sort of advertising because it does not look like advertising. In this particular instance Mr. Lovett not only hooked up with a community happening, but he hogged the story. Five lines are given to the general happening and 41 were given to the Royal. It is a news item in the most rigid acceptance of that term, yet the entire happening is used to demonstrate that the patrons of the Royal are always looked after and that an alert management will always be on the job. It gives people a sense of security. Turn everything that happens at your house into a press item and rush it off to the papers. You can get a surprisingly large string of stuff if you keep your eyes opened, but learn to look for the items. It is more or less of a trick. We know from sad experience that few persons can see the news aspect of the average happening. It must be a fight or a fire to gain their attention, and yet the most interesting stuff is the smaller items. Mr. Lovett sends some samples which show improvement, but only one of the advertisements get a good display. You are probably familiar with Mr. Lovett's stuff, which is always a three fives for the week. The problem is to get the four changes into one showing and get a good display. The first cut shows what he gets on an average. In this case his frame design very clearly hooks up with the chief feature. You know it alludes to "The Fighting Roosevelts." But the best tne feature gets in the regular display is a twelve point. Of main titles two are in twelve and three in ten point with 37½ square inches of space. This is about the best that can be had, for the space is only 372 points high and 54 points are taken for the titles alone. Setting two to the width gives a better effect and in the second example the chief lines are twenty four point. They look more than twice as large as the twelve point lines, and give more than double the display. Something might have been gained in this space by cutting down the day lines to a six point. Here ten point is used for the days, where a six point was used in the previous advertisement and a ten for the main title. Here the six would have done as well, if not better. Just because there is more space available is no reason why all portions of the advertisement should have been increased proportionately. Keeping the dates still in a six would have given more room for display. In the same way a gain could be made by dispensing with the "In" or "Presents" or by setting this to the side of the star or director as the case might be, using, for example, a twenty-four point Charles Ray and an eight point "in" on the same line. It is a simple matter to cut in two sizes of two type in the same line and it looks better and gives some white space with which to build up the display. In the third example another and less successful form of display is tried. Here the days are the proper size, but the use of dashes between the smaller features eats up space. Four eight point lines are taken where three would do the work, but the chief fault is that the narrow column prevents the proper display of the names and titles, and the underline gets far and away the best of it—which is not fair to the current bill. Mr. Lovett has made many experiments, but he gets the best results from the quarter sections and we think it would pay him to use that general arrangement for all bills. His drawings are seldom worth the space they take. One of them shows a man in bed with a woman standing beside the bed and looking down. The only thing we are certain of is that it does not belong to "A Night in a Show," but it might belong to any one of the three main titles or might not belong to any one of the trio. We think it is a waste to put in a scene sketch which does not clearly show its connection to some feature of the bill.

Steve Stunts.

Steve Farrar, of the Orpheum, Harrisburg, Ill., has been getting busy again, after giving the compositors a little rest. For one thing he had "Hearts of the World" and of course he had to play that up, though he did not get above a quarter page for any issue. He was persistent rather than spectacular and four sevens or eights were employed for a week before the showing. He ran this at 25 to 75 cents, all seats reserved, two shows daily for two days. For the second day's advertisements he lifted S. Barret McCormick's big splash, taking three five and a halfs and using the McCormick copy verbatim save for changing the name of the town. He could not well find better copy, for this was good even for McCormick and it worked just as strongly in Harrisburg as in Indianapolis. The second example shows sevens and eights in fours. That on the left is for the opening day and the other ran a couple of days in advance. Steve had a good supply of cuts for this and apart from the cut of D. W. he offered new pictorial copy for each advertisement. He did not try to fill his spaces with a lot of selling talk. He knows that all of the fans and most others have read much of the play. What he had to do was to tell them that it is to be seen in the home town, so he gets large type for the name and lets it go at that, knowing that he has as good as sold the play through telling that he is to show it. But he knows that he must advertise widely that no one may overlook the fact that it is to be seen in town, so he holds his space up. Even his last showing carries a three eights, as shown in the next cut, with the opposition taking sixes. This repeats the McCormick copy. Probably Steve has been holding that ever since it was first run in the department. Steve does not merely read the department. He cuts out the stuff he knows he is going to need and pastes up the rest for study and finds it a source of inspiration. He is one of our oldest readers and he has made the department work for him. Steve seems to have been in luck in the matter of cuts lately, for he changes cuts with each showing. Here are two displays for "Heart of the Wilds." One is four sevens for the opening day and the other three six and a halfs for the second day of the run. He does not trust to the same copy to carry on but changes copy as well as cuts for each display. In those small towns they have time to read the paper all the way through, including the advertisements, and it pays to change the copy for each reading in order to keep interest up. In each case the main argument is the same, but he takes it from a different angle and gives it a new twist. That is the way to handle any story. Don't get one piece of copy and hold to that. Present the same idea if you must, if the play has but one big point, but approach that idea from as many different angles as possible in order that you may broaden your appeal to your readers. The last example shows Steve's isolated underline. The current show gets three sixes and an additional two fours is taken for the coming attraction. That Saturday show carries no long feature, but winds up one serial and shows an episode of another, with a comedy thrown in. Those serials certainly hold business in the small towns even better than in the cities. Steve seems to overlap his, and to start one before the last one is fully completed, so that he has his patrons interested in the newcomer before the old one plays out. This is a good idea, for it holds the interest over, just as magazines run two or more serials to ensure continuity of reading.

A Giant Cut Out.

This novel lobby display from the Washington, Fort Worth, Texas, seems to have been made from a twenty-four sheet. The entrance is rather low, so that the cut out extends above the top and completely dominates the space. Apparently there are electric lights in the bouquet in the left hand. Certainly lights could have been used to advantage there and there is a seeming reflection in the photograph, though the bulbs do not show clearly. This gives an unusual effect and will probably be suggestive to others, though most twenty-four sheets do not give large heads as a rule and few offer better height than a three sheet. Here the paper seems to have worked unusually well. By painting over it can be stored and used for any Bara production.

A Cut-Out Made from a 24-Sheet, Which Dominates a Lobby Display.

Doing It Right.

The Parkway, Baltimore, is doing a lot of special stuff. Lately it gave a Sunday matinee musicale for the Russian Red Cross and on several occasions it has opened the house Sundays for various charities and patriotic movements. It costs money for lights, attendance and other incidentals, but there is no more certain way of getting recognized as a leader, and the Parkway is getting back more than it gives because it gives so willingly and efficiently. It pays to become associated in the minds of the theatregoers with welfare work. It makes them turn to that house as a leader.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important Notice.

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Lens Charts for Framing.

The December 28 issue containing the lens charts was exhausted very quickly. The demand for lens charts was so great that we have had a limited number printed on heavy paper, size 11x17, for framing. Covers amperage 25 to 60 A. C. or D. C., and Plano-convex om meniscus biconvex; also gives necessary projection lens diameter to avoid waste and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Every progressive, up-to-date projectionist should have one. Price, 50 cents, postpaid to any part of the world. Send U. S. 3-cent stamps or money order.

Minusa Screens.

The Minusa Screen Company, St. Louis, Missouri, sends in the following. The instruction booklet for installing screens should be of much value. The Minusa letter reads as follows:

"Since the motion picture is leading us more and more into the field of drama, where facial expression, the twitching of a muscle, the twinkle of an eye or the high light of a single hair means everything, the 'perfect' projection surface, which is as yet unknown, is nevertheless the one ambition and dream of every discriminating exhibitor.

"The Minusa Ciné Screen Co., of St. Louis, Mo., have for years been giving the baffling question of projection, scientific study. Their advancement toward the goal of perfection has been so rapid that it is generally conceded that their present method of constructing screens with color background and according to specifications or dimensions of the theatre, that they have solved the problem to the greatest extent thus far.

"Recently the Minusa Ciné Screen Co. were confronted with an exceptional problem in supplynig the United States Hospital, at West Baden, Indiana, with a screen surface 18'x24' where conditions were most distressing. This installation was made over the entrance to the Rotunda, which is 200'x200', necessitating a throw of 200', and as the extreme width of the Rotunda is 200', the observer who views the picture from the extreme angle therefore views it from an angle of 100' from the center. This is where the Minusa secret color background comes to the rescue in overcoming the 'fade-away' effect which is so characteristic of other metalized surfaces, and the report that has been received from West Baden states: 'Results are wonderful in the extreme and satisfactory in every respect.' In gaining the above results, much credit is due to the ingenious stretching device known as the Minusa Patent Adjustable Stretching Frame, which makes possible a satisfactory installation under difficult conditions.

"For some time exhibitors had the misfortune of not receiving proper projection through faulty installation of their screens though the surface was perfect, therefore the Minusa Ciné Screen Co. has compiled an exclusive booklet for Minusa installations, wherein the exhibitor can see from illustrations, together with printed description, every move that must be made to secure perfect results.

"The illustrations therein, together with the detailed descriptive matter makes it impossible to secure other than a perfect installation. Two copies of this booklet are sent when an order is received at the factory. One is mailed immediately to the exhibitor, and the other packed in the hardware box of the frame. In this manner the company safeguards the exhibitor against faulty installation."

Our Cartoonist.

Accompanying is picture of the cartoonist whose drawings have from time to time amused and instructed us. Mr. Walker is himself a practical projectionist, though at present his facile pen is made to supply the necessary daily pork, beans, ice cream, etc. We all owe Brother Walker something for the laughs he has supplied, as well as for the punch found in his cartoons, each one of which carries with it a valuable lesson, in excellent form.

G. W. Walker.

Non-Progressive Men.

A good brother who has recently spent some time visiting relatives in a certain Bay State city writes. almost demanding that I visit that city, investigate projection conditions and then "rip 'em up the back."

We would not give the matter mention in print except to point a moral. The projectionists in the city in question have never been recognized as of the progressive class. The union scale is the height of their ambition. Beyond that nothing exists, except quitting time and pay day.

This department and its editor have pretty much stopped bothering with such propositions. For the present they are utterly hopeless. They will only awaken when everyone else has passed them so far that they are lost in the dust of the procession. There are more than plenty of progressive cities, locals, towns and individuals to more than give us all we can do in helping them, and it is always better and more satisfactory to help those who try to help themselves than to try to pry non-progressives loose from their bed of inactivity.

And, anyhow, the non-progressive is becoming steadily and increasingly in the minority. I can right now call the names of less than half a dozen cities in all these United States which I would cite the projectionists as non-progressive, in the sense that advancement in technical knowledge of projection is opposed. True, there are many cities where there is little activity in progressive lines, but in nearly all these one finds a sprinkling of wide-awake, progressives who gradually are leavening the mass with progressive ideas. Memphis, Tenn.; Cincinnati, O.; Kansas City, Mo., and Springfield, Mass., were all in the back number class the last I knew, but just what the situation is in these cities today I cannot say. Improved, let us hope. They were the four cities which did not even care to listen to a lecture on projection, though provided to them without a cent of cost. They took the position that there was nothing worth while learning as regards their profession, and let it be remarked that in at least two of these cities projection room conditions and projection itself is, or at that time was, about as punk as one could well imagine. The unions in these cities are, or were, in distinct contrast to dozens of unions in other cities which evinced eagerness to hear and consider what we might have to say with regard to the profession, thus proving themselves in the progressive class.

All this is not said in any spirit of "get-back-at-'em." Why should we care, except that non-progressiveness must inevitably react on the profession and on the industry. But the profession is entitled to know where the non-progressive spots lie. That bit of information is public property because of the injury these spots do to the profession as a whole. When the non-progressive spirit is downed and replaced with progressiveness this department will be delighted to herald that fact from the housetop, provided it be informed of the change. But we don't care to "rip-'em-up-the-back" because it really isn't worth while. The non-progressive hurts every one in the profession, but himself most of all.

Is Proud of His Work.

Daniel Constanteino, Easton, Pa., writes interestingly, as follows:

"Am glad to know the sawbones made a good job of it. Congratulations! When you visited Easton I was assistant projectionist at the Third Street Theatre, but soon thereafter took charge of projection in the Strand, from which theatre I wrote twice to our department. While there I secured a handbook and studied very hard, receiving many compliments on the screen result. I then had, and that house still has, the clearest, sharpest picture in the city, but I'm going to beat it before long.

"Well, I enlisted in the army of Uncle Sam, of which act I am very proud. Have seven months' service at home and five months abroad to my credit. Have now returned to my profession and propose to fully merit the new title, 'projectionist.' Got back from overseas December 11 last and was honorably discharged December 23 of same month. While in the army I sadly missed the Moving Picture World, the more so that there were no other men in my squadron who were interested in motion picture projection. Have been back at work since February third and intend to stick until the bottom drops out, if it ever does. Am working at some improvements, concerning which you will be fully advised when they are finished. Would like your opinion of the one illustrated in attached sketch. I, like other projectionists, have to contend with the street car conductor imitation projectionist. It is no uncommon thing to have to amputate two punched-up feet from each of five reels of a six-reel feature, and what with that and amputating poorly made splies it is some job to get the average show ready to project. I have put in two full hours on many shows. Without this work first-class projection would be impossible; also the films would be unsafe to run. We are running nothing in the feature line but Artcraft and Famous Players. Their Philadelphia exchange certainly does need a raking over. Its inspection is purely imaginary. And unless the projectionist does their inspecting and repairs (free of charge) it is impossible to get a decent screen result, to say nothing of the danger. I have secured a license since my return, but the State examination is rather simple, though what there is of it deals with technical projection. Where I am now working the projection room is twenty-two feet high, seven feet eight inches deep and eighteen feet long. There is an eighteen-inch vent flue, but no fan in it, as the house fan is right over the room. The room was intended for three projectors, but only two have been installed. It is built of reinforced concrete, the walls very thick. Observation ports are twelve inches wide by six high. Have simplex projectors, Type S lamphouses. Project a picture a little over sixteen feet wide one hundred feet."

I was unable to understand your drawing, Brother Constantieno. Apparently you have two rheostats wired in multiple for each lamp, and they are connected to the center of a D. P. D. T. switch, probably so you can use either one of two current supplies. Probably there is something more to the matter, but you have not shown it in the drawing. If you have stated the height of your room correctly (twenty-two feet), I think there is no need for a fan in the vent, because the great amount of space above supplies a reservoir for smoke and gases in case of fire. One of the chief reasons for demanding a fan in vent pipes, no matter how large they may be, is to pump out the smoke and gases in case of fire. An 18-inch vent flue direct to open air from ceiling will serve every need of ventilation, no matter whether the draft be up or down.

I have already taken up the matter of exchange inspection with the president of the Famous Players and Artcraft Company and have hopes something will be done to correct the undoubted laxity of inspection in their exchanges. Glad you are back safe and have returned to the profession. We have need of all our good men.

James L. MacGinnis, Brooklyn, New York, says:

"Have a very long distance of projection, and while the boss is well pleased with everything else, he kicks a lot about picture not being as sharp as it should be. I tell him the trouble is in the films, but he is not satisfied. I think a few words from you would convince him."

Possibly, brother MacGinnis, but inasmuch as the trouble most likely is not in the film, but in your own eyes, I cannot say them. Try this: borrow a pair of good opera glasses, and next time the boss kicks about lack of definition, look at your screen through those glasses. I think you will find friend boss is right. The trouble is in the long distance of projection. Few, if any, men can decide with the naked eye as to sharpness of definition in a picture 100 or more feet away. But the trouble lies with friend boss, just the same. He should provide a pair of high grade opera glasses and the projectionist should mount them on the front projection room wall, as shown. The glasses should be focused sharply on the screen and then the focusing arrangement should be locked fast. These glasses are properly a part and parcel of the projection room equipment, and should be installed in all projection rooms where the distance lens to screen is 75 feet or more.

Room for Improvement in London.

Harry T. Dobson, one of the department's former correspondents, writes from Toronto:

"Have no doubt but that you will be surprised to hear from me after a lapse of four years. Was touring Urup and for three years projecting shells in the general direction of Fritz and his Me und Gott boss. Am back home now, giving the one-time-over to motion picture end of things, mainly with view of again taking a shot at friend screen. There is a great deal of room for improvement in projection in the city of London, and I imagine that a live projectionists from the States could clean up on the odd good job. Will contribute price of a new handbook very soon, as am behind the times on the latest dope. Am enclosing souvenir. Don't think you will find many like it."

Souvenir consists of an original army order issued on the front line and an official barrage map. Verily it is some souvenir allrighty right. Thanks.

Well, well. And I'd heard that British projection was a pretty classy affair. Guess we'll have to slip over there before long and give them the look-see. Betcha we could bring back some interesting dope. Glad you're back, old topper; also that you're still wide awake and coming. Wish you'd drop in on Dentlebeck some time and tell him I'm going to send him a lead pencil and sheet of paper.

The "I Am Satisfied" Type.

John W. Creamer, Local Union 433, Moline, Ill., writing from Atchison, Kan., says:

"Dear Brother Richardson: Mighty glad to hear of your recovery. Cannot afford to lose such men as you. If more 'operators' would heed your teachings there would be more real projectionists in the country. I see improvement in projection as time passes, but there are still too many of the 'I am satisfied' type of men with us. For instance: Recently it fell to my lot to project 'Hearts of the World.' After several screenings, in conversation with a local projectionist, I told him how nerve-racking the work was and how it was necessary to constantly change tempo of projection on different scenes; also how close I kept the production in synchronism with the music score of the orchestra. His reply was: 'Huh, you wouldn't catch me doing anything like that. I just let the machine run and that's all there is to it.' And some men wonder why they don't advance beyond the union scale. Regarding enclosed clippings, which is the worst, for the projectionists to punch holes in the last few feet of the film or the exchange to punch a number covering as many as five or six frames in both the beginning and end of all their reels? I punch no hole in any reel, and always cut out the offending exchange numbers, since, by no stretch of imagination, can their projection to the screen be termed high-class work. These ten clippings are out of a Paramount feature from K. C. exchange. All their reels are numbered this way at the beginning! also, again, about five feet from the ending. Cannot you use your influence with the home office to get this outrage stopped?

"When I took charge here I found the revolving shutters to be of different diameters and different type. Calling the projectors A and B, the shutter on A had a main blade 6.75 inches wide and two flicker blades, respectively 4.75 and 4⅞ inches wide, the light openings being 4 15/16, 4 9/16 and 4⅞. Shutter B had blades as follows: First named being the cutting blade, 6-inch, 5-inch and 5-inch. Light openings, 4 3/16, 4 3/16 and 3 11/16 inches. I replaced them with shutter blades, 6, 5 and 5-inch, with opening 52 wide on either side of main blade and a 3 9/-16-inch opening opposite main blade. I figure this gives me 4% more light, and most certainly the screen shows an improvement. Can you give the different light-cutting percentages of the three? As to Simplex footage recorders, I agree with Griffith that they should be on the front wall. How is a projectionist standing between the machines to see the recorder at his back? Utterly impossible! Then when he is standing ready to start, say the right-hand machine, can he see the numbers on the left-hand projector, at least three feet away? Have had trouble applying lens tables for 60 amperes A. C. Next time will send in some 'shop notes,' provided you would care to print them."

Certainly, presuming they are of interest, as they doubtless will be. Send 'em along. As to the lens table matter, I am sending same to Griffith. The projectionist who takes no interest and lets the motor pound out the show is of the type who is always howling about the boss abusing him and not paying him enough wages. As a matter of fact, the industry could well afford to pay him a reasonable sum to get out and stay out. He is a distinct detriment, no matter how one looks at it. The exchange punch-marks have been sent to the Paramount, with the following letter:

"President, Paramount Film Corporation,
New York City.

"Dear Sir: Your attention is directed to attached clippings, all cut from one Paramount feature received by a projectionist from your Kansas City exchange. We have done every possible thing to prevent projectionists punching holes in your film as a change-over signal, a practice your company pronounces reprehensible, and one which every exchange condemns, and rightly so too. But by what process of reasoning can we condemn the projectionist for punching holes near the end of films when the exchange punches them both near the end and at the beginning?

"Such work is unfair to the projectionist, who has the perfect right to refuse to project the mass of holes, covering five to six frames, to the screen. He must, of course, cut them out, since their projection is distinctly low-class work. Might we suggest that you look into this matter and cause the stoppage of so objectionable a practice."

The Paramount is not the only one offending in this respect, but it might fairly be supposed that so high class a producer would not tolerate such crude work. As to the percentages, one method for computing it is as follows: Taking the first shutter, for example: Blades 6¾ plus 6¾ plus 4⅞ equals 16⅜ inches total blade width. Openings, 4 15/16 plus 4 1/6 plus 4⅞ equals 14⅛ inches total opening width. 16⅜ plus 30.5 inches total width of both blades and openings, and 16.375 divided by 30.5 equals .53 plus, or about 53½% of the light which shutter A is cutting.

Amperage, Etc.

Hogan Brothers, Utica, New York, ask as follows:

"We are about to open a house for which we have already purchased projectors. The available current is 500 volts D. C. Will you advise as to what amperage should be delivered to each machine in order to secure the best results on a fourteen by sixteen foot screen; distance of projection, one hundred and twenty-five feet. What generator would you recommend to give the best results under the above conditions?"

What amperage would give the desired screen brilliancy would depend upon the knowledge and skill of your projectionist in handling his light and in causing the optical system of his projector, including the revolving shutter, to make use of the maximum of available illumination. It would also depend to a considerable extent upon your auditorium lighting, on the kind of screen surface and on your own individual idea as to what constitutes satisfactory screen brilliancy.

Under proper conditions of auditorium lighting, and with a good screen surface, the skilled projectionist who thoroughly understands the problems involved in the optical system of his projector may and probably will be able to get the results you desire with very much less current than would be required by a projectionist who is not in possession of the technical knowledge necessary to handle his projector optical system intelligently, or get the desired result with much less current than would be required with unintelligent auditorium lighting and a poor screen surface. You see, gentlemen, there are too many equations entering into this matter of amperage necessary to produce a given result to allow of my giving intelligent advice without knowing them all. With a sixteen-foot picture at one hundred and twenty-five feet you will have pretty close to a 7.5 E. F. projection lens, which means a very long back focus, or working distance, as the optician calls it. Since you will probably want a brilliant screen, which means heavy amperage, this in turn means heavy loss of light between the aperture and projection lens due to divergence of the light ray at that point. Nor is there at this time any practical method of eliminating this loss. But I nevertheless think that with the rest of the optical system right and the revolving shutter reduced as much as possible you can get the necessary brilliancy with 60 amperes, using a projection lens about 2¼ inches in diameter.

As to generators, I would suggest that Mr. Hallberg did, and I believe still does, make a D. C. to D. C. motor generator which gave very good results. It is also possible that the Transverter, Hertner Electric Company, Cleveland, or the Ft. Wayne Electric Company, Ft. Wayne, Ind., can fix you up a special machine with a 500-volt motor to work on the constant current plan, which places the arcs in series for change-over and gives excellent results. It is also possible that the Western Electric will do the same thing, though I doubt it. Anyhow, any of the three first named will give good results.

Wants a Little Help.

Herman H. Hunt, North Little Rock, Arkansas, propounds the following:

"Have been a reader and student of the department for five years. Now I want a little help. Have been using lens chart published December 28, and am highly pleased with results. Have reduced shutter blade width on both shutters, thereby eliminating lots of former flicker and getting increased screen brilliancy. After doing this three of our prominent projectionists told me and persistently argued that if, after finding the aerial image, one placed the shutter there without reducing blade width—shutter remaining exactly as it was before, except as to distance from lens—the screen will be more brilliant. They do not claim placing shutter at aerial image will reduce flicker, but that it will increase screen brilliancy. They say they base their argument on what you said when you were here two years ago. Now, Brother Richardson, who is right and who is wrong, and why?"

You are right, Friend Hunt. I cannot imagine how the men thus misunderstood my words when I laid the matter before them at the time of my visit. Here is the whole matter in a nutshell: The aerial image is at the narrowest point of the light beam, because, although in some cases the beam may seem to be the same width for a considerable distance, at the aerial image there is a dissolving effect, as you will see by passing your hand through the beam at the exact position of the aerial image. Now suppose you have a shutter cutting 54 per cent. of the total light, and that it is at a position where the spread of the beam prevents cutting anything off the main or cutting blade without bringing travel ghost on the screen. This means a badly balanced shutter; also it means considerable loss of light over and above what would be had could an ideal 50-50 shutter be used. Now suppose by moving the shutter to the aerial image we find that the light beam is sufficiently narrowed, especially when taken in conjunction with the dissolving effect, to allow of reducing the main blade by ⅛ inch on each side. We will then have a better balanced shutter, passing a greater percentage of the light with less flicker tendancy; also we may now be able to trim a little off each of the flicker blades, thus bringing about a still better condition. But if we merely place the shutter at the aerial image, without trimming down its blades, it still cuts 54 per cent. of the light, and, beyond some possible gain (which I doubt) through the dissolving effect, there will be absolutely no change at all. There could not possibly be. The shutter still cuts the same percentage of light and cuts it in the same identical way. In a few words, the advantage in placing the revolving shutter at the aerial image comes wholly and solely from the ability to narrow its main or cutting blade, which also sometimes allows of the narrowing of the other blades as well, thus giving more light and less flicker tendency at any given speed. Those who have placed their revolving shutter at the aerial image without changing width of any of its blades and have found improvement in the screen by so doing have, I am afraid, worked their imagination just a wee bit overtime.

Measuring Meniscus Lenses.

Phillip C. Stillwell, Erie Pa., writes:

"Kindly send me sample of Prizma, as per offer in department some time ago. Glad you are well again, as the business needs you. Will you tell me how to measure meniscus lenses? Also Bi Convex. Am using Simplex projectors and cannot get my condenser lenses very close together. Am having a great deal of trouble lately, with condenser breakage. Simplex new style lamp, separate holders. Hope you will be able to get up here, if you tour Pennsylvania, as you recently spoke of doing. Have your handbooks and Hawkins Guides. They are great—both of them. In closing I want to thank you for the many benefits received through the department."

As to measuring meniscus condenser lenses, don't believe I know any method which could be successfully applied by the projectionist. Can Solar, Griffith or any one else suggest one? To measure a bi-convex stand near wall opposite an open window, preferably in a room with one window, or with all other windows closely shaded. Pin a white sheet of paper to the wall and focus some distant object outside the window as sharply as you can. Measure from wall to center of lens at its edge, and that measurement will be its focal length. This is, of course, more or less rough, because the image cannot, due to spherical aberration, be focused sharply. As to the condenser breakage, it may be due to the overloading of carbons, with consequent flaming, to having crater too close to lens by reason of wrong lenses, or to wrong adjustment of lenses, to unusual drafts striking lamphouse, or to condenser holder metal not making good contact with glass clear around. Adjust your optical system as per optical charts, copy of which you have. This should stop the trouble, but condenser breakage is a queer proposition, and sometimes it is very difficult to locate its cause.

Conducted by LIEUT. CARL LOUIS GREGORY

Dyestuffs for Photographic Purposes.

THE modern artificial coloring matters, the use of which is of importance to a large number of industries, in particular those of dyeing and printing on textile fabrics, have a considerable variety of applications in photography, and the progress of photography in monochrome as well as in color owes a good deal during the past few years to this branch of purely chemical manufacture, says A. Seyewetz, a celebrated photo-chemist, in the French journal, Chemie et Industria. The several purposes for which dyes are employed in photography may be stated as follows: In orthochromatic photography, in the preparation of non-halation plates, in color photography by the triple superposition method, in the making of color-screen plates, in processes depending upon the production of colors from colorless substances by the action of light, and in those based upon the bleach-out action of light and dyes, tinting of cinematograph films and safelight papers.

As is well known, the negative obtained on an ordinary photographic plate is a false rendering of the action of rays of light of different colors. In the absence of special means, yellow, orange and red are reproduced as exceedingly dark tones in the photographic print, whilst blue and violet are represented by very light tones. A white drawing on a blue ground or black on red might thus yield a photographic copy consisting of one uniform tone in which none of the details of the design would be visible. Inasmuch as the relative sensitiveness of photographic plates can be modified in order to yield photographic renderings comparable with those perceived by the eye, the disabilities of the ordinary plate may be avoided by such orthochromatic or isochromatic preparations. The addition to the photographic emulsion of certain coloring matters effects a displacement of the actinic action of light, and imports to these preparations very considerable sensitiveness to rays of the greater wave lengths. At the present time, certain dyes are used which effect such a preponderating sensitizing action for yellow and green rays in comparsion with violet that the sensitive plates can be employed without a compensating light-filter such as is ordinarily used to cut down a certain proportion of violet rays. The sensitizing action does not, however, correspond exactly with the absorption spectrum of the dye.

Only a small number of coloring matters possess these sensitizing properties, these dyes exerting their sensitizing action when present in very small quantities. Some of them act in so small a proportion that the sensitized plate possesses no visible coloration, appearing colorless to the eye. The dyes cannot be chosen as can those for the purpose of making colored screens, that is to say, by the examination only of their absorption spectrum, although the optical sensitizing takes place in consequence of the plate with which dye has been incorporated, absorbing the rays for which the plate is sensitized. There are, in fact, dyes which sensitize for rays different from those which their solutions absorb; for it must be assumed that the dye possesses sensitizing properties only when it is able to form a compound with the silver salt analogously to the formation of a "lake." In this case, it is the absorption spectrum of this compound, which is the effective agent, and not that of the solution of the dye.

The examination of the absorption spectrum will thus give only very approximate indications of the color-sensitizing properties of the dye. Very dilute solutions of the dyes, so dilute as to exhibit no perceptible absorption to the eye, nevertheless are capable of exercising a pronounced sensitizing action. The feature which distinguishes a true color-sensitizing dye from one which acts simply as a screen is that the former exerts its action in these minute quantities and, therefore, without coloring the emulsion; also, it gives rise to no reduction of the sensitiveness, and, consequently, does not call for an increased time of exposure. The sensitizing power of a dye can only be determined experimentally by photographing a spectrum on a sensitive plate impregnated with the dye to be tested.

The principal classes of dyes, among which are to be found color-sensitizers, are the derivatives of diphenylmethane, triphenylmethane, acridine and phenylacridine and quinoline. There are, moveover, dyes belonging to other classes which exert a sensitizing action only when reducing at the same time the general sensitiveness. These dyes possess a very limited practical interest. The various dyes, according to their chemical constitution, produce sensitizing action in the different parts of the spectrum, but none of them, whether employed alone or in admixture in variable proportions, permits of reproducing the spectrum with the relative value of colors perceived by the eye. Exceedingly effective sensitizing can, however, be obtained for limited parts of the spectrum, such as the yellow and the green of one part, or for the red of another. By utilizing these partial results, the employment of several dyes thus yields a sensitizing effect greater for the red and yellow than for the blue and violet, still without attaining the respective color values perceived by the eye.

The dyes of the phthalein class are the most important sensitizers for yellow and green. Eosine, erythrosine and rose bengal are employed for the preparation of orthochromatic plates sensitive to yellow and green. Sensitizers for yellow and orange are the blue, violet or red dyes. Quinoline red, rosaniline violets, more particularly ethyl violet, and the cyanines are employed for the sensitizing of plates to red and orange. Lastly, certain syanines permit of sensitizing at one and the same time to orange and red.

The manufacture of orthochromatic plates has made important progress during the past few years, owing to the discovery of a large number of new syanine dyes, the original type of which is ordinary syanine obtained by condensation with caustic alkali of equimolecular compounds of quinoline iodo-ethylate and quinaldine in alcoholic solution. By employing the sensitizing properties of quinaldine quinoline ethyl-cyanine, Dr. Miethe provided the starting point of work undertaken by various dye factories for the preparation of new syanine sensitizers.

The lepidine-cyanine blues exert their sensitizing action beyond C in the red of the spectrum, while the violet-red quinaldine cyanines sensitize only beyond D ½ C in the orange. The quinaldine cyanines possess several advantages over the lepidine-cyanines, and as the sensitizing into the red is a very desirable feature, attempts have been made to produce quinaldine-cyanines of blue color in order to increase the red sensitiveness. Dr. Konig has employed a whole series of substituted quinolines in order to obtain new cyanines, and has found that the iodomethylates of quinoline and of substituted quinaldine (meta and para) yield bluer cyanines. Orthochrome T (para-tolu-quinaldine para-tolu-quinoline, ethyl-cyanine) exerts its sensitizing action not only in the orange, yellow and green, but in the red. Pinachrome, pinaverdol and homocol are cyanines analogous to orthochrome. Ethyl-cyanine, pina-cyanol and dicyanine, discovered by Konig, possess notable sensitizing properties. The two first sensitize into the red near the line B with a notable predominance of the orange and red relatively to the blue. Lastly, dicyanine produces sensitizing into the extreme red, but without predominance over the blue.

The manufacture of dyes employed as color or sensitizers has hitherto been the monopoly of a few German factories, but it can be readily undertaken, and at small cost, by French dye manufacturers, among the chemists of whom are undoubtedly those capable of discovering new dyes possessing sensitizing properties superior to the substances at present in use.

Among the various means for the prevention of halation the most effective is the incorporation between the glass and the emulsion coating of a transparent red-orange or green film, or one of suitable non-actinic color, which obsorbs all the rays after their reflection from the back surface of the glass. The dye employed for the coloration of this film requires not only to possess a suitable absorption spectrum, but should not diffuse into the emulsion and so reduce the sensitiveness of the latter. Moreover, it requires to be readily decolorized in order not to obstruct the operation of printing from the finished negative. Only a few dyes fulfil these requirements, among them Rosolic and Congo red.

The dyeing of cinematograph films for the purpose of producing various artistic effects is a development which consumes very considerable quantities of the coloring materials, either for uniformly tinting the whole film or for coloring only the image portion of it. In the case of the first process the bands of film stretched on frames and previously soaked in water are immersed in dilute solutions of the dyes, which generally are those of the basic type, moved about in these baths until the requisite depth has been secured, then rinsed and dried. The local coloring of films by means of a brush which follows the outlines of the image is a process which from its nature is one which can receive little industrial application.

Lastly, a use of dyes which cannot be passed over without mention is in the preparation of the transparent papers of red, green or yellow color employed as safelights. These papers will in time replace the colored glasses of dark-room lamps, inasmuch as they possess distinct advantages over the latter. Apart from

INDIANAPOLIS' OHIO WILL COST $75,000

The New House Will Seat 1,300 Patrons and Is Expected To Be Completed in Ninety Days

PLANS for a handsome new motion picture theatre, to be erected at 42 and 44 West Ohio street, Indianapolis, have been announced this week by David A. Coulter, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Building Company, of Indianapolis. The new structure, which Mr. Coulter estimates will cost in the neighborhood of $75,000, will be known as the Ohio.

John R. Welch Is President.

The Ohio Building Company, recently oraganized, has been incorporated under the laws of Indiana with a capital stock of $100,000. The officers of the company are John R. Welch, of Indianapolis, president; Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., vice-president, and David A. Coulter, secretary and treasurer. The company has just obtained a forty-nine year lease on the buildings now standing on the proposed site.

The theatre will have a frontage of 44 feet 3 inches and will have a depth of 202 feet 6 inches. It will be constructed of reinforced concrete and steel and under the terms of the contract is to be completed in ninety days. It will seat between 1,200 and 1,300 people, 800 of whom can be accommodated in the orchestra.

Lobby Will Be Distinctive Feature.

The distinctive feature of the theatre will be a large lobby which is to have a depth from the theatre entrance to the auditorium of forty-three feet, and is to be thirty feet wide. The purpose in providing this much room is to overcome congestion.

The plans for the first floor reveal an attractively decorated interior. There will be one center aisle with seats flanking on each side, and a mezzanine floor with lounge and ladies' rest rooms. The mezzanine floor will have an opening that will afford a view of the main auditorium. Stairs will lead to a third floor, which will be used as a balcony.

Rembusch Prominent in Management.

The interior of the theatre will be finished in large, plain panel walls with marble tile wainscotings and two decorative boxes will be built on each side of the stage. These boxes, when not used for seating purposes, can be used for the staging of small vaudeville entertainments.

Frank Rembusch, vice president of the Ohio Company, is one of Indiana's leading picture showmen. He has gained a national reputation for enterprise.

South Bend Will Get a Big House.

Work will soon be started on the construction of a new motion picture theatre at South Bend, which, when completed, will be one of the finest theatres in that section of the state. The new structure, which will be built at 212-214-216-218 South Michigan street, will be erected for the Blackstone Theatre Corporation, which was recently organized.

Who the Officers Are.

Charles E. Potts, superintendent of the Inland Steel Company, of Indiana Harbor, is president of the corporation; T. H. Egelton, credit manager for Rothschild and Company, of Chicago, is secretary, and J. Handelsman, a department manager for the firm of W. W. Kimball and Company, of Chicago, is treasurer. Frank T. Milner is to be the manager of the theatre.

The new theatre will have a 100-foot frontage on Michigan street, and a depth of 165 feet. It will be three stories in height and will have a seating capacity of approximately 2,500 people. The front will be of a highly artistic design, and multi-colored terra cotta will be used in the construction. The interior will be in French renaissance.

If occasion should arise for putting on a musical festival or some like entertainment, a temporary stage may be quickly constructed by removing the first three rows of seats, after which the floor may be mechanically elevated to stage level.

The front of the building will be arranged so as to provide floor space for four stores and there will be an unusually large entrance to the theatre. Members of the company hope to have the project completed by October 1.

Kokomo Will Reopen Sunday Question.

Representatives of some of the business and manufacturing interests at Kokomo have begun an inquiry on the question of Sunday motion picture shows for that city, and the outcome of the movement is being awaited with interest.

Sunday shows have not been operated at Kokomo for several years, the influence against them having been strong enough apparently to prevent much agitation in favor of the question from being started. Whether there has been enough change of public sentiment to permit the exhibitors to open on the Sabbath now will be determined by the inquiry.

The movement on behalf of the Sunday shows is said to have been started by persons who believe that unless something more in the way of Sunday diversion is afforded them is now offered, it will be a difficult problem for business and manufacturing firms to induce their employes to remain in Kokomo.

THE TIMES HAVE CHANGED IN ROCHESTER

And the World's Correspondent Attributes It to a "Coffee Shoppe" Replacing the Hayward Bar

TIMES are changing in the Rochester film game. Sadly it has become apparent that the old, old days will never return. Before the war, the Hotel Hayward, in that city, was the headquarters for the film man in central and western New York. If you wanted to meet somebody in the film game you was sure to have your wish fulfilled if you stuck around the Hayward long enough. Then the war came along. There are a lot of film men who blow into the Hayward now—perfectly good fellows, too—but it isn't the same as it used to be. Somebody or something has left some handwriting on the wall and even the ornate bar is gone. In its place has been opened a "Coffee Shoppe." Perhaps, in due course, ice cream and coffee will come into their own, but the Hayward does not seem much like home. Gee, ain't it tough!

"Vitagraph Bill" Is Back on the Job.

Movie managers in western New York are being joyously surprised these days by visits from "Vitagraph Bill" Allen, perhaps one of the best known film men who ever traveled across the state. Vitagraph Bill was for years the friend of every man in the show business. When the country went to war, Bill packed up and went too. He saw real service driving a tank in France, and there was no one whose absence was mourned more deeply. But now Bill is back, plump and smiling—the same old Bill. Everywhere he goes he is the subject of impromptu receptions. He is again peddling for Vitagraph.

George Simpson Returns.

George A. Simpson, son of George E. Simpson, president of the Regorson Company, has returned from France and has been discharged from the service. Before the war he was associated with his father in the management of the Regent, Gordon and Piccadilly theatres. Young George used to do most of the screening for these three big houses, and that he did it well was easily seen by the box office returns.

"Daddy Long Legs" Has a Long Run.

The longest run for which a picture has ever been booked in this city is that of Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs," at the Regent. The picture is now showing on an eleven-day run. Pictures have been shown longer, but in those cases the bookings have been renewals on options. It is possible that if business holds up to top notch, the present run will be extended. It is understood that the Regent paid the highest price for this picture that has ever been paid for a film here. Night prices are being charged for the matinees.

The Lantern Lighted Up the Fog.

Nazimova is being boomed at the Piccadilly this week in "The Red Lantern." Around the corner, the Rialto opened the week with Nazimova in "Out of the Fog," stealing some of the thunder that the Piccadilly flashed on Nazimova.

Hazel Beamish Is Married.

Hazel M. Beamish, adjudged at the San Francisco Exposition one of the eight most beautiful girls in the country, was married last Saturday to Sergeant Elson I. Wright, of Base Hospital No. 19. Both are local people. Miss Bemish was the movie girl for the Movette Camera Company, of this city.

J. L. Clark has announced plans for the enlargement of the Rex Theatre at Ontonagon, Mich. The improvement will increase the seating capacity by 250.

A new $25,000 picture theatre will be constructed at Bismarck, North Dakota.

Ericksonville, a small Minnesota town which cannot even boast of a postoffice, will have a moving picture theatre. G. C. Paulsen, proprietor of the general store at Ericksonville, will be the enterprising exhibitor of the village.

A. J. Swanson has purchased the Grand Theatre at Worthington, Minn., the consideration being $6,000.

J. C. Stuller has announced that he will soon open a moving picture house at Froid, Mont.

The construction of a new theatre at Harvey, N. D., to replace the old Bijou which recently burned to the ground, is now under way. Manager Arnold is supervising the work.

Oliver Haugland has opened a picture theatre at Milan, Minnesota.

Lieutenant Sever Texley has purchased the Opera House at Kadoka, South Dakota, from George Porch. He is making extensive improvements.

Hilliard Will Erect a Modern House.

O. K. Hilliard, of Lake Andes, S. D., a visitor in Minneapolis recently announced his plans for a modern theatre to be built at Lake Andes. Mr. Hilliard, who has been operating an up-stairs theatre in the South Dakota town, stated that business had grown to such proportions that the erection of a new house was necessitated. He is now showing only one day a week, but plans to show seven days a week when the new house is completed next August.

Peter Kartzmann has purchased the Grand Theatre at Lewiston, Minn., from Jake Pfalzgraf.

The Hardwick Opera House Company, of Hardwick, Minn., has been dissolved. The value of the property is estimated at $5,000.

Sam Cornish, exhibitor of Grand Forks, N. D., has taken over the Strand Theatre at Fargo, N. D., formerly operated by W. J. Dean.

The Princess Theatre Company has been incorporated at Elkhorn, Wis., with a capital of $20,000.

Cleveland News Letter

Cleveland League Favors Advertising Slides.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Cleveland has adopted a new paragraph in its constitution, which reads: "The annual membership dues shall be Fifty dollars in cash, payable in advance for each theatre, which must accompany each application for membership, or in lieu of the above cash payment of dues, each theatre obligates itself by contract to exhibit one association slide, or one advertising film, for not less than fifteen seconds, at every complete program, during each day of the year for a period of one year."

In other words, the members don't have to pay any dues if they will run one slide at every performance. Such slides are from an advertising company, which contracts to pay the dues of each theatre that runs its slide. Those members not wishing to run the slide will pay $50 in cash.

The League moved its headquarters, May 15, to Room 130, Colonial Hotel Arcade, which is one block nearer the film district—in fact, right in the district.

A housewarming was given in the new quarters, at which a light lunch was served and several addresses made. Sam Brodsky entertained the boys with impersonations.

First National Increases Capital Stock.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Exhibitors Company for the state of Ohio, held in Cleveland, the capital stock was increased by unanimous vote, to $200,000.

The past year saw the First National's business ten times in excess of their capital stock. In order to accomodate the vastly increased business this year, it became necessary to increase the capital stock. This was accomplished by the voluntary increase in holdings of the various stockholders of the company.

Those present at the meeting were: E.

Believes in Separating Film.

Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, was the chief speaker at the annual meeting of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs, held May 18.

"I believe the wholesome plays we have had here for the millions to see have done much to keep bolshevism and anarchy at bay.

"Much of what our children see is too exciting and sensational, and we'll never do the thing right by censoring," he continued. "We must separate films as books are separated in children's libraries. Some day the producers will realize this."

Des Moines News Letter

Blank Will Handle "Auction in Souls."

THE A. H. Blank Enterprises will handle "Auction in Souls," the Aurora Mardiganian picture, as a road show special. J. Jolly Jones, for years connected with the show business in this territory, and recently manager of A. H. Blank's theatre at Marshalltown, will exploit the picture in the state. He will handle the picture front and back, going into the larger towns at once, in order to put on a preliminary showing for the Armenian Relief Society and other philanthropies.

"Daddy Long-Legs" a Hit.

All records at the Garden Theatre were broken by Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long-Legs." From the opening Sunday noon through the entire week, the theatre was jammed and the final day Mr. Blank utilized the Palace and Garden simultaneously for the picture, in order to take care of the final throngs. This is the first time in local picture history that two houses have shown a feature side by side and jammed both houses from early morning until late at night, a midnight show being held in each house.

Abe Frankle has returned from Boston and New York, where he went in the interests of "The Eyes of the World," which he controls for the New England States. The picture opened well in Boston, and Mr. Frankle reports big bookings throughout the territory in the larger towns.

Stolte Goes on Road.

A. G. Stolte, engaged by A. H. Blank as manager of the new Des Moines Theatre, is doing road work out of the Omaha office of the Blank Enterprises for a few weeks, pending the settlement of the local building strike. Indications are that this will be over soon, as both sides have arbitrated. As soon as the work resumes, Stolte will return to superintend the finishing touches on the new Des Moines. The new Blank and Hiersteiner theatres will also immediately be started.

Sheridan Is Doing Good Business.

L. A. Sheridan, of the L. A. Sheridan Exchange, reports that business is splendid on the several subjects that he is handling in the smaller towns in Iowa. Sheridan has a large acquaintance in the territory, gained through his several years with Pathe as branch manager here.

News Weekly Dope.

Pathe and Universal had a battery of camera men in Des Moines recently "shooting" the homecoming of the 168th regiment. Several hundred feet of excellent film was obtained, and the Rialto, through arrangement with manager Paul Tessier, of the Pathe office, showed the pictures the next day after the parade. It was a scoop for Pathe and a feature that went over big with Rialto patrons.

No Word as to Iowa Exhibitors' Convention

Nothing has been heard as yet about an Iowa exhibitors convention this year. It was skipped last year on account of the war, and nothing has been done to revive interest in such a meeting. Iowa has a strong league of exhibitors who banded together to fight proposed adverse legislation last winter, and it may be that they will hold a gathering, probably in Des Moines or Cedar Rapids in July, although nothing definite has been done along that line as yet.

Short News Items.

Powd McLuen, of Guthrie Center, was a recent Des Moines visitor. He reported business as excellent in his town.

All local picture theatres admitted Rainbow veterans free of charge on the day the 168th returned. The soldier boys accepted the invitation generally.

PORTLAND HOUSES TO BOOST BUILDING

Managers Are Giving Publicity to Bond Issues Which Will Soon Be Voted Upon by Oregonians

THE theatre managers of Portland were recently called before Mayor George L. Baker, who sought their co-operation in the reconstruction program now planned for Oregon. At a well-attended meeting of exhibitors and legitimate theatre men the Mayor explained that the publicity for the program would be in their hands, and appointed E. J. Myrick, Liberty Theatre, chairman, and Frank McGettigan, manager of the Orpheum, and W. W. Ely, manager of the Hippodrome, committeemen.

With the contemplated cessation of shipbuilding in Portland, there may be thousands of men out of work this winter and to provide against this and to give employment to returning soldiers, the theatre men are asked to promote the publicity for several bond issues which will soon be voted upon.

May Its Treasury Never Be Empty.

Portland has a new film distributing concern. The M. and T. Film Company, located at 390 Burnside street at the old stand of the General Film Company. The owners are L. E. Tillman, former manager of the General, and H. G. Mapes, who has been connected with Northwest exchanges and theatres for the past ten years.

The new company began business with about two hundred reels and expects to add a number of big features within a short time. The M. and T. projection room will be in charge of Mr. Mapes, who plans to refurnish it completely. Portland has long needed a first class projection room.

Jackson Goes with World.

George E. Jackson has been appointed representative for the World Film Corporation for Oregon and expects to open an office in Portland in the very near future. Mr. Jackson was employed by Universal soon after leaving the military service and resigned his position to go with World. Before entering the army he was manager for Mutual.

Hamrick Puts One Over.

It takes a gentle stranger to come down to Portland and knock 'em dead with publicity. John Hamrick came down from Seattle the other day with "The Spreading Evil," put the show in the Star Theatre, and if the first day's business is any indication of what he will do, he is going to take a bag of money back to Seattle with him.

Although advertising rates in Portland are none too low, Hamrick stepped out with a few good sized ads, had a morning show free to the first 800 women when several times that many were turned away and used a lot of other novelties to put the attraction over.

A Few Oregon Briefs.

Mr. Boyd has reopened the Standard Theatre at Athena.

J. G. Lynch, who is in the territory for Hodkinson, recently completed a trip to Astoria, says there are all the indications for a big summer's business in that locality.

Meta Cayo, contract clerk for Universal, will be a June bride, the lucky man being William Brennen, until recently an officer in the army.

J. LOUIS ROME IS ON M. P. E. A. COMMITTEE

Baltimore Manager Is Elected to Represent Maryland in Association's Executive Body

J. LOUIS ROME, formerly second vice-president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and manager of the Broadway, Arcadia, Baltimore and Park theatres in Baltimore, has been elected a member of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America. Each state in the union will have a representative on the executive committee of the new association, and Mr. Rome has been chosen to represent Maryland on this committee. A meeting of the new organization has been called to be held at the Hotel Statler, St. Louis, on June 25, which Mr. Rome will attend.

New Screen is Installed.

After three months of incessant labor in order to perfect the wierd and subtle lighting effects which illuminate it, the new screen set which has been built on the stage of the New Theatre, 210 Lexington street, was completed on Monday, May 19, in time for the opening of that playhouse on that day. The approximate cost for the new set was $6,800. The artist who designed it is O. A. VanZandt, of New York, who for the past fifteen years has been actively engaged in painting stage sets and who did the exacting work required for Richard Mansfield, when that actor was at the height of his carrer.

Wheeling Theatre to Increase Capacity.

The seating capacity of the Victoria Theatre, 1228-30 Market street, is to be increased from 800 to 1,300, according to the plans which have been drawn up by architect F. F. Faris. The cost will be about $30,000. A new front is to be built and the house is to be extended into an adjoining room, making the dimensions of the building 60 by 160 feet. There will be a balcony which will be supported by a 15 ton iron girder, and a new sprinkling and ventilating system is to be installed. George Shaffer is the manager.

Cupero is Entertained.

Professor E. V. Cupero, leader of the New Theatre symphony orchestra and also leader of the Baltimore City Park Band, was given an ovation upon his first appearance in his new capacity at Patterson Park, Baltimore, on Tuesday night, May 20. He was presented a basket of flowers by the members of the Second Ward Democratic Organization Club, and later the club entertained him at dinner, at the summer gardens of Adam Smith. Former City Councilman and Liquor License Commissioner Dr. George Heller made the preentation address.

Fairyland Theatre Changes Hands.

The Fairyland Theatre, 624 North Chester street, which has been operated for the past several weeks by W. D. Lusby, has been sold by him. The Fairyland will continue to be open to the public, however, under the management of Charles Rhine. Mr. Rhine managed the old Casino on North avenue, near Charles street, several years ago.

The Palace Will Be Enlarged.

A building permit has been issued to the Northeastern Amusement Company, of which Frank H. Durkee is president, to make large alterations in the Palace Theatre, at Gay and Hoffman streets. The seating capacity is to be enlarged and the approximate cost of the improvements will be $10,000.

Benefit Given at Walbrook.

A benefit performance for the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Regiment was given under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of this regiment on Sunday night, May 25, at the Walbrook Theatre, 3100 West North avenue. A program of music and motion pictures was arranged for the event by Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the theatre.

Jean Crandall, who has succeeded George F. Lenihan as manager of the Washington office of Goldwyn, visited Baltimore last week and was introduced to the exhibitors by W. F. Hayner, Goldwyn representative in Baltimore.

Edmond with Exhibitors Mutual.

Herndon Edmond, who before going into the army was associated with General, as manager of their exchange in Baltimore, and who after being released from the army traveled through the State of Maryland with "The Price of Peace," the Victory Loan film, has become associated with Exhibitors Mutual, and will handle the Baltimore territory for that company. He succeeds Frank Price, Jr., who has now gone to the Philadelphia office of the same company.

W. F. Ballinger, who was formerly connected with various film companies has now been released from the army and has returned to film row.

Pittsburgh News Letter.

Favorable Action on "New Moon."

GEO F. LEVINSON, manager of the Pittsburgh Select branch, journeyed to Philadelphia, May 16, to have a heart-to-heart talk with the censors, who exhibited an inclination to take liberties with Norma Talmadge's newest starring vehicle, "The New Moon." Mr. Levinson was successful in his mission and had the picture passed with practically no eliminations whatsoever. While in the East, Leo took advantage of the opportunity to visit Mrs. Levinson, who is spending the summer at Atlantic City.

Prince Will Have a Model House.

O. W. Prince, of Ambridge, Pennsylvania, is remodeling several buildings on Merchant street, Ambridge, into a model picture house with a seating capacity of 550. It is the intention to have the house completed in time to have the formal opening on the Fourth.

The whole theatre arrangement and equipment is a counterpart of the Regent Theatre, in the East End, Pittsburgh.

Some Speed When George Does It.

Tuesday, May 20, the Lowrie Theatre, Troy Hill, Pittsburgh, had the Globe Film Service's parade pictures, showing Pittsburgh's soldier heroes, booked for showing. The print booked to this house had not arrived in the city, owing to the fact that another exhibitor had held it over for a second day's showing. Things looked bad for the Lowrie until the Globe folks got in touch with George Bates, the cameraman, who promised to have another print ready in time for the evening show. George made good his promise. He took the order at 4:30 and at 7:30 the film was being shown at the Lowrie. Some speed and some service.

Will Transform Church into Theatre.

Dr. F. E. DeLong and Fred Hall, of Boyer, Pennsylvania, have bought the old M. E. church in that town and have remodeled the same into an up-to-date small moving picture theatre. The work thereon is about completed. The capacity of the new theatre will be 250. Dr. DeLong was in Pittsburgh recently and ordered projection equipment consisting of Power's 6-B machines and a Gold Fibre Screen, as well as other equipment and supplies. Mr. Hall will have charge of the theatre.

Moore Joins Exhibitors Mutual.

George Moore, for some time past, booker and chief clerk at the Pittsburgh Vitagraph exchange, has joined the Exhibitors Mutual here, in the capacity of sales representative, and will handle the city trade and that of the nearby towns.

Cajiafas Manages Family.

James Cajiafas, former president of the Bell Film Service, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, who was called to the colors last summer, is again back in Pittsburgh, and is now in charge of the Family Theatre at 2139 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh. This house was formerly owned by the American Amusement Company. Some changes are contemplated in the house which will add materially to its appearance.

And Now It's the Simplex.

St. Petersburg, Pennsylvania, can now boast of its first moving picture theatre. Mr. Conover, of that town, has opened a 350-seat house there and named it the Simplex. Miss Davies has been cast for the role of "April," the young girl who goes forth in search of adventure and finds it in unexpected ways.

BIG DRIVE PROVED ASSOCIATION'S VALUE

The Detroit Exchange Managers Distributed Official Film With Promptness and Accuracy

THE best examples of the benefits to be derived from organization was proven in the Victory Loan drive. Nearly every exchange manager had received a series of prints with instructions to see that they were sent to exhibitors and shown on the screen. President J. E. Flynn, of the Detroit Board of Exchange Managers' Association, immediately called a special meeting, and appointed a committee consisting of J. O. Kent, Select, and H. A. Ross, Paramount, to work out some plan whereby the work could be concentrated. The result was that arrangements were made for Select to do the booking and shipping, and a booker and shipping clerk were engaged at an expense of nearly $60 per week to the Exchange Managers' Association. The work of booking and shipping the Liberty Loan prints was all handled from the Select office, although each member of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers paid a portion of the expense, the entire cost to the organization for the six weeks being nearly $400.

This method of distribution was costly, but the exchange managers felt that the money was well spent as it saved the exhibitors considerable annoyance by arranging for the return of all prints to the one exchange instead of to the various ones.

Some of the exchanges, members of the organization, had no prints, yet they paid their proportionate expense of the work gladly and willingly from the standpoint of patriotism.

Atlanta News Letter

Criterion Is an Up-to-Date House.

ANNOUNCEMENT that the Criterion Theatre, the newest and one of the most progressive houses of the city, had booked the coming "Big Four" productions, the independently produced releases of Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, and that the theatre's present ten-piece orchestra would be increased to twenty pieces immediately, was issued Monday upon the return from New York of William C. Patterson, managing director of the Criterion for the Sig Samuels interests.

Music a Feature.

Since Mr. Patterson took charge of the house shortly after its erection, about three years ago, he has followed a policy of independent booking, and has established a precedent locally for continued and growing success in presenting high-class special attractions, featured by effective musical accompaniments and aggressive exploitation. He was a pioneer in increasing admission prices, and has now inaugurated a twenty-five cent scale.

Mr. Patterson was a leading spirit of the Atlanta Theatre Managers' Association, in which he holds the office of secretary and treasurer, and it was at his instance that the recently organized Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association was founded here last month. He was honored with election to the presidency of this live exhibitors' co-operative body, which is to stage its first convention on June 15 in this city.

Raoul Will Attend Convention.

W. P. Raoul, vice-president of the Georgia Federation of Labor and president of the local motion picture operators' union, accompanied by Cliff Clower, representing the stage employes and operators' unions, has left Atlanta to attend the convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators of the United States and Canada, in Ottawa, Canada, on May 26.

ALL of the seven theatres in the town of Everett have been bought by C. E. McKee, C. A. Swanson, and W. J. Pilz, who have formed the Star Amusement Company and will operate four of the seven. The other three have been temporarily closed. Before this merger, Mr. McKee, together with his partner, E. L. Jenkins, operated the Orpheum and the Apollo. Mr. Swanson operated the Everett and the Princess. The theatres which were bought were the Rialto from Jack Beardsley, the Strand from Charles Strand, and the Broadway from C. P. Merwin. The Star Amusement Company has been incorporated for $75,000.

Everett is a town of about 25,000 and the business does not warrant seven theatres or even four, according to C. E. McKee. But business is expected to pick up very shortly.

House Changes.

Frank Stannard, who formerly controlled the amusement business in Wenatchee before he sold out a few weeks ago, has bought the Olympus in West Seattle from A. B. Johnson. Mr. Arthur will comb the Western Washington and Oregon territory himself.

E. Craig has been appointed assistant manager of the Seattle office, and will have charge during Mr. Arthur's absence.

Short News Notes.

Newton E. Levi, division manager for Exhibitors Mutual, is leaving Seattle this week after a month's stay for Portland, where he will help Ted Johnson, the new manager to get a right start in his managerial course.

J. W. Houck, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, was a recent visitor on film row and signed up for three big Mutual specials, "The Turn in the Road," "What Every Woman Wants," and new sensational picture, "Mints of Hell."

The Photoplaywright

NOTICE!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

It Has Paid.

SEVERAL years ago we said that even if a novice never sold a script he would profit by the mental discipline received. This seemed to be pretty poor comfort to many, and some, indeed many, have written in that they have "wasted" from one to three years over their plays. Some of them have wasted their time, but merely because they did not give their best to the work. Against these may be cited many who have made real progress.

Just the other day a man wrote:

My time wasn't wasted. When I discharged pictures from my mind and took hold of newspaper work earnestly, I found that I had developed wonderfully under your training. I could write a great deal better and I could feel that I had broadened out. I felt more confident of my ability, and after a while I got more or less chesty and possibly disagreeable about it. I felt that a lot of other people I came in contact with didn't know anything at all. Silly to feel that way, and I ought to be ashamed to confess it, but I think you know what I mean and have experienced the same sensation. It is my honest opinion that the benefit I got from your three years' training gave me a 25 per cent. boost as a writer, and had I not advanced to that degree I should not now be holding down this comfortable job.

The comfortable job referred to is a position as advertising manager of a large real estate company paying $5,000 a year.

Another man studied for two years, fitted himself for a position as studio manager, gave that up and went into a steamship office as freight handler. Inside of a year he was assistant manager of an important branch office in a foreign country at $300 a month, club dues and entertainment expenses, with an excellent chance of being advanced to a full managership in a year or two. He never could have done it without the mental training he received, for script writing broadens the mind as no commercial work possibly can. It gives a wide outlook, for a script writer must know many things. He does not revolve in the narrow orbit of a single phase of a single business.

A third man is conducting a photoplay page on a large city daily. He said the other day that had he not taken up script writing he never should have thought of going in for newspaper work, but the facility he gained enabled him to take on correspondence work for several trade papers, and eventually brought him to a good salary and advertising commissions.

We might add to this list very considerably, for one of the real rewards of running this department has been the reports of the men who used to work with us. Practically none of the men who went at the work seriously and with an intelligent appreciation of what the work meant have failed to make progress. Some of them are still in the script line, others are in the production end of pictures, and only the other day Harry O. Hoyt told us that he was going to stick to directing. John William Kellette quit the linotype for the studio, and has made a permanent success, and we could mention others. Marc Edmunds Jones has turned to fiction, and is making good; and the last Writer's Magazine contains a story by E. M. Wickes, who tells how a casual interest in photoplay led to more than $2,000 income as a side issue to his own line of song writing.

You never lose what you put in in good, hard work. If you merely play at writing, you cannot expect to succeed, but if you put all of your mind and all of your will to your work, n matter what that work may be, you cannot but be better for the effort. Some men and women slide through life seeking always the easiest way. They never make a concentrated effort. They always sidestep hard work and trouble, and they never get anywhere, but the man who honestly seeks to do better work than his fellow, even though that be merely ditch digging, cannot keep success from him. It is bound to come.

The trouble with photoplay writers is that they seek success too early. They want to dash off plays and then dash off to the bank with the checks. They are not willing to put in from two to ten years at hard work in the hope of eventual success, and yet success quickly won is as quickly lost. Look over the records. You will find no trace of most of the quick successes of three years ago. Three years from now you will find some of the present shooting stars in the discard. They will fall as rapidly as they rise, for the reason that there is no foundation to their success. It has not been built up stone by stone, and the only permanent accomplishment is that backed by years of preparatory effort. There is not a fiction writer who will not tell of the long years of preparation that preceded his recognition. Don't kick if you seem to fail. Keep on going, and in the end you will find that the effort has been worth while.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

Schiller Building, Chicago.

Wright & Callender Bldg., Los Angeles.

It Has Been Done.

The next twist to the war story will probably be the unemployment problem. It has been done. Don't do that, either.

The Receipt.

One man who is practically a staff man with a free lance's salary gives this receipt for a script. "I don't really write a synopsis," he explains, "because I cannot tell in that space what I want. I cannot write a continuity, but I do write what is substantially a continuity with the scene numbers, minor action and unimportant leaders left out. That fools them into the idea that they are getting a synopsis only, but the continuity man has only to cut back stuff to have a practical script." It may not always work, but it works if it is handled properly.

How to Do It.

Suppose you want to write a war story. Bill goes to France and comes back minus a leg. He keeps away from Bess because he will not saddle her with a cripple. He sticks in the city and hides out. But she goes to town, locates him, almost starving, tells him a story of how her father has lost all his money and will Bill please marry and support her. She shows him how he can work without the lost leg, and by her support and sympathy leads him to better money and a more important position that he ever held before. He has had it in him all the time, but he lacked the heart to bring it out. Her plea put him on his feet and they live happy ever after. Now take out the war. He didn't go to France. So far as the story is concerned, there was no war. He had his leg cut off in a railroad wreck and slipped away from the hospital, leaving no trace. The war story might be too much like others. The denatured story will stand a better chance. Lots of war stories were bought before the Kaiser went crazy and were remade merely by throwing in a couple of German spies. Work it the other way and just take the war out.

A Recruit.

Add Houdini to the list of authors. He dropped in the other day for a copy of Technique of the Photoplay and a chat. He is writing the first five-reeler for use under his new Famous Players-Lasky contract, and he says that he wants to learn the mechanism so that he may get his ideas over. He is one of the best showmen the world has ever produced, and he should be able to put on plays with the same skill he plans his spectacular acts once he has learned the ropes, and Houdini is too good a workman not to realize the need of technique.

Gags.

Someone wants to know what gags are. They are bits of business to be worked into plays. Most comedies are made up of gags bearing upon the same subject. If you offer half a dozen gags bearing on the same topic they may be purchased and worked into a play, with other gags supplied by the staff writers. Only a few of the comedy producers are in the market for gags, but we think the demand will grow.

Standards.

A magazine which did not offer a better average of stories than we see on the screen would not live a year. The stars carry the picture stories, but why not have stories to carry the stars?

Cheer 'Em.

It is a wonderful accomplishment to be able to make people cry, but to be able to make them laugh is a gift of God.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

First Texas Guinan Picture to Be a Five-Reeler

AT the time of the purchase by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of the stories for the first five Texas Guinan productions, President William L. Sherrill secured stories originally written for five or six reel-attractions, in order to make assurance doubly sure that the two reel pictures would contain a superabundance of meat and action.

Among these stories was one written by John F. Colton, entitled "The She Wolf." Director Cliff Smith was instructed to proceed without regard to length. However, when the final cutting took place, it was found that when the 6,700 feet originally "shot" had been cut down more than 4,000 feet, without a single title remained, which is said to form such a powerful dramatic production that it was found to be impracticable to cut the picture down to the two reel length.

It was tentatively considered to release this five reel production as a Texas Guinan Special, and not as a part of the thirteen two reel productions contracted for by State Rights Exchanges. However, although the production is said to have cost approximately twice what the Frohman Amusement Corporation is receiving for the rights to each individual two reel production, Mr. Sherrill has determined to release "The She Wolf" in five reels to the exchanges contracting for the thirteen two reel productions, at no greater cost to such exchange than what they pay for the two reel attractions.

Mr. Sherrill is of the opinion that "The She Wolf" is the most novel Western production ever made. The story contains so many twists as to keep one in suspense from the beginning to the end.

The Frohman Company announces that numerous letters are being received commending the policy of Mr. Sherrill in releasing "The She Wolf" at no greater charge than for the two reel attractions. I. E. Chadwick, of the Merit Film Company, controlling the New York rights, states: "Your letter, advising you propose to release a five reel Texas Guinan production, "The She Wolf," under the financial terms of your regular two reel Guinan contract, is received.

"Your plan is characteristic of the generously fair terms your firm accords to its clients, and we trust that it will be as thoroughly appreciated by all your customers as it is by us."

Rapid Sales by Exclusive on Tom Mix Single Reelers

THE series of fourteen single reel Tom Mix subjects that are being reissued by Exclusive Features, Inc., on a state rights basis, are being very rapidly disposed of, according to an announcement from Messrs. Weinberg and Goldstein, the executives of this company.

Among the territories that have already been contracted for, are the following: Ohio and Kentucky to the Standard Film Service, Cleveland; Illinois to Doll-Van Company, Chicago; South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida to R. M. Savini Films, Atlanta; Eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey to Masterpiece Film Attraction, Philadelphia; Kansas and western Missouri to First National Exchange, Kansas City; West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania to Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia to Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Michigan to Standard Film Corporation, Detroit; northern New Jersey to F. Gersten, Inc., New York; and Indiana to Doll-Van Film Corporation, Indianapolis.

Brockliss to Hold Showings of "Virtuous Men" Abroad

SYDNEY GARRETT, President of J. Frank Brockliss, purchasers of foreign rights of "Virtuous Men," has completed plans for the exploitation of the S-L production starring E. K. Lincoln, outside of the United States and Canada in the near future. Many sales to various foreign buyers have been made, the latest embracing Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Mr. Brockliss sailed for Europe recently, and upon his arrival in London will make arrangements for a trade showing of "Virtuous Men." He is negotiating for a prominent London theatre for this presentation. The showing will be given in conjunction with a large symphony orchestra and considerable advance advertising. Mr. Brockliss plans to have simultaneous presentations of "Virtuous Men" in London and Paris.

The inaugural showing of the S-L production in France will be held under the auspices of the Mundus Film Company, of Paris. It is expected that the production will be given its European premiere within the next fortnight, and Mr. Garrett announces the exploitation and advertising which has featured the picture on this side of the water will be carried out in detail in Great Britain and on the Continent. "Virtuous Men" is expected to prove a big summer attraction in London and Paris and will probably be given a run at prominent theatres in both of these European cities.

Sales on Ham and Buds Announced by H. F. Jans

AMONG the first group of state rights exchanges to secure the Kalem single-reel comedies featuring Ham and Bud were R. M. Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, and A. A. Weyland's Standard Film Corporation, Pittsburgh. The former secured these comedies for North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida, while the latter obtained them for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

It was only a few weeks ago that Jans Productions, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, announced that it had bought the ninety-two Kalem subjects starring Ham and Bud and would select fifty-two of the best to re-issue one a week for a year.

F. E. Backer, general sales manger for the Jans Company, declared that not only did state rights buyers communicate with him, but that he was amazed at the inquiries from exhibitors.

R. M. Savini has issued a unique folder to exhibitors in his territory. The return post cards enclosed were addressed to "Ham and Bud," personally, in care of a post office box in Atlanta which Mr. Savini had engaged in their name.

Two mornings after mailing the cards he reports that the box was barely able to hold the replies from exhibitors desirous of booking the comedies.

Here They Are—Celebrating the Completion of "The Masked Rider."

Bellman Makes Tour of Territory.

J. J. Bellman, exchange manager of the New York district of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has just returned to New York from a two weeks' tour. Mr. Bellman, during his trip got in touch with the principal exhibitors in New York territory, and reports that he met with great success in booking the latest Pioneer offerings. "Virtuous Sinners" is booked to play in a large number of the prominent houses, and advance dates signed on the "Boomerang" are said to indicate this picture will break the Pioneer Exchange records for New York.

Noted Author Collaborates in Editing His Own Film

COSMO HAMILTON, the well known author of a large number of stage and screen successes, has collaborated with the editorial staff of Pioneer Film Corporation, in editing and preparing his latest photoplay, "The Sins of the Children," for its first showing.

In line with the policy of Pioneer to carefully edit all pictures which it purchases, in handling "The Sins of the Children," Mr. Hamilton was asked if he would co-operate with the staff in this work, and he gladly consented to do so. As a result, it is said that the story, as told in the film, is identical with the novel in its dramatic development.

Pioneer announces that this picture will probably be put on for a summer run at a prominent Broadway theatre. Alma Hanlon and Stuart Holmes are the featured players.

Oliver Enlarges Offices

AS a result of plans to begin production on a larger scale, Oliver Films, Inc., has equipped several additional rooms in its offices in East Forty-eighth street, to be occupied by the director, assistant director and technical director. Also a new projection room has been installed. All of the offices will now be on the ground floor and the entire second floor will be given over to dressing rooms.

During the past week five new dressing rooms have been installed, indicating that the forthcoming serial will have even a larger cast than "The Carter Case," the production recently completed. The improvements in the studio have been made by E. D. Bingham, who will remain technical director of the company.

Pioneer to State Right "The Girl from Nowhere"

THE next offering which Pioneer Film Corporation will place before state rights buyers will be "The Girl from Nowhere," with Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas as the featured players.

It is stated that the one outstanding feature of this picture is an abundance of thrills. The scenes are laid in the Northwest gold country, and the story deals with the experiences of a young woman found wandering in the woods, exhausted and bereft of her memory. Her beauty is the cause of the exciting drama of which she is the main figure.

In the end she is saved from being forced into a marriage with the man who has been her tormentor, through the timely intervention of her rightful husband. The story is from the pen of Wilfred Lucas and Bess Meredyth, and was directed by Mr. Lucas.

The Pioneer is planning to give the new production an effective exploitation campaign. There will be one 24 sheet stand, two sixes, three, and two ones in the layout. A press book on new and original lines is being prepared, and a special selection of advertising material for lobby use will also be at the service of the exhibitors booking "The Girl from Nowhere."

Gaumont Showing Flight of N-C Planes to Europe

THE Gaumont Company had cameramen stationed at various points in Newfoundland, the Azores, Portugal, England, etc., to make a complete record of the first attempt of American flyers to cross the Atlantic. Pictures of the start from Long Island and their arrival in Trepassey Bay have already been shown in the Gaumont News and Graphic, and this week's issues show the departure of the three N-Cs from Newfoundland, including views of the N-C 4 and her commander just before starting on the successful flight to the Azores, the warming up of the plane from the steam pipes of the U. S. S. "Prairie," and a view of Ponte Delgada, Azores, from which point the "hop" to the European continent on the last leg of the journey was made. Gaumont cameramen are also on hand to photograph the arrival of the N-C 4 in Lisbon and Plymouth.

Other flying pictures in the News and Graphic show the trip of King Albert, of Belgium, who returned to Brussels from the Peace Conference by airplane, and the last flight of the famous French "ace," Jules Vedrines, who was killed in an attempted flight from Paris to Rome.

Other subjects show many current pictorial news items from all parts of the world; a monster U-boat which stranded on the English coast during a fog; the strike of the milkmen in Chicago; the return of the 48th Highlanders to Canada; a boat race rowed by beautiful co-eds; preparation for the big Willard-Dempsey bout; a gunboat ramming a whale; using baby "tanks" to destroy old buildings; and the wreck of a trolley car which ran wild down a steep hill, killing two and injuring twenty,

S-L Will Furnish Inserts to Theatres for Lobby Use

MESSRS. Sawyer and Lubin announce that the series of distinctive and beautiful two and four page advertising inserts which were used in the trade journals to exploit the E. K. Lincoln starring vehicle, have been converted to the use of exhibitors presenting this picture. Several thousand reprints have been made in original colors and are being furnished to exhibitors at a nominal cost. Space has been left for the imprint of the theatre and the playing date, and this provides the exhibitor with a medium for more distinctive and beautiful that usual heralds. Several hundred of these inserts were used by Poli's Palace Theatre at New Haven.

The inserts are works of art, containing original drawings by Clarence F. Underwood, R. G. Morgan and other well-known artists, depicting scenes from the play, with reading matter descriptive of the story. They have been done in various colors, printed on coated paper. This arrangement is another link of chain put into effect by S-L Pictures in connection with "Virtuous Men" to assist exhibitors in deriving full advantage from the money expended to exploit this production.

Thrills Continue to Abound in "Carter Case" Episodes

GROWING suspense and continued thrills are said to mark the eighth episode of "The Carter Case," the Craig Kennedy serial featuring Herbert Rawlinson and Margaret Marsh. This chapter of the serial is entitled "The Silent Shot." In it Kennedy again succeeds in rescuing Anita from the custody of Avion. As the girl is lowered from a window, with the intent of speeding her away, Kennedy appears on the scene and loosens her from her bonds. Avion makes his escape.

In search of valuable papers concerning the Carter trade formulae, the characters all move to Dixonia, the location of the Carter mines. Here, in a stalactite cave, Kennedy and Anita encounter Avion and the chief emissary. While Kennedy's attention is detracted, Avion drags Anita from the cave and makes away with her.

The suspense of this episode is said to be fully up to the standard of that of the other chapters, sustaining the dramatic situations in which Kennedy's clever opponents continue to baffle his best efforts to capture them and clear up the mystery.

The ninth episode is entitled "The Camera Trap," while the one following is "The Moonshiners."

Chescent Gets Serial and Christie Special.

The Crescent Film Company, Kansas City, announces it has recently purchased rights to the two reel Christie specials, also to the Oliver Films serial, "The Carter Case," for Kansas and western Missouri, both of which are being booked heavily by theatres in that territory.

The Crescent company is located in suite 315 Gloyd Building, and makes a specialty of state rights features. A. L. Kahn is the manager of this exchange.

As director of his own production he tells Pauline Stark and Lew Cody not to be disturbed by the "broken" part.

Reeve and Grey Writing a New Serial for Oliver

ARTHUR B. REEVE and John W. Grey, authors of "The Carter Case," the feature serial and first output of Oliver Films, Inc., have completed the script for a second episode picture that has been accepted for early production by the company. It is understood that the new serial does not deal with Craig Kennedy, but is a mystery serial with many promises of thrills and sustained mystery.

Elaborate sets are now being completed at the Oliver Films, Inc. studio in East Forty-eighth street, and it is stated that production will be begun as soon as Harry Grossman, vice president and general manager, returns from the Pacific Coast. The name of the serial and the cast will be announced shortly.

Mr. Oliver, president of the company, states that "The Carter Case" is now being booked in every territory in the country and is meeting with wide popularity, both with exhibitors and public. The few territories that remained open have been closed by Mr. Grossman during his present trip.

The plans of the company for increased production are progressing and interesting announcements are expected in the near future. The company has leased another studio and expects to extend its production to a type of pictures other than serials.

Offers "The Solitary Sin" as a State Rights Special

THE mystery of "Box 42" has been solved. The advertisements appearing in trade papers requesting the assistance of the exhibitors and state rights buyers in selecting a title for what was promised would be a "one of the greatest and most timely features ever offered" have culminated in announcing the production will be called "The Solitary Sin" and that it would be released as a state rights special.

The production was made in California, and the cast includes Jack Mulhall, Helene Chadwick, Pauline Curley and others.

It tells a story of the careers of three boys. One is brought up in a wholesome home environment and is taught the truths of sex. The surroundings of the other two boys, however, are not so fortunate, and they are left to gather their knowledge from uncertain sources. As a result when at college the one leads a clean life while the others embark on a career of frivolity, and because of their manner of living disaster overtakes them.

Three romances are unfolded. The women who are loved by the two who have strayed from the straight and narrow path share in their misery when the men are called upon to pay for what they had lightly regarded as "fun."

Fred Sullivan, responsible for a number of photodramatic successes, produced the picture under the supervision of George D. Watters, who is presenting it. Mr. Watters' entire career has been in the show business, and he has been a long time a successful exhibitor in Iowa.

Speaking of the production Mr. Watters said: "It has the elements which make for a successful production. The title is an exceedingly strong one; the story is dramatic and interesting.

"In addition to the entertainment value we feel that the great moral lesson which it indicates will obtain the cooperation of influences for good in every community. However, the picture is not a preachment; it is simply strong virile drama, and the moral, while obvious, is not thrust upon one.

"We decided to obtain the assistance of exhibitors and state rights buyers in the matter of selecting a title. We did this because we felt that their combined judgment was much better than ours. The results of our advertisements have been surprising. We have received many more responses than I had anticipated and the title, 'The Solitary Sin,' obtained more votes than all the other titles combined."

State rights on the picture are being handled by The Solitary Sin Corporation, which has offices in the Fitzgerald Building, New York.

W. F. Hurst Appointed Controller of Pioneer

THE Pioneer Film Corporation announces the appointment of W. F. Hurst at the head of the accounting department of the home office.

During the last few months, the growth of business handled by their concern has grown steadily and an expansion in the personnel of the organization has been necessitated.

Mr. Hurst, the new controller is a man of extensive experience in the field of motion picture accountancy. For several years he associated with the financial department of the factories and studios owned by the Pathe interests. Later, for the same concern, he held the office of traveling auditor and inspector of exchanges, and at one time was manager of the Indianapolis exchange.

His latest connection, previous to joining the Pioneer staff, was with the World Film Corporation and Lewis J. Selznick.

Mr. Hurst will reorganize the accounting department of the Pioneer and expects to install the very latest and most efficient methods in exchange accountancy.

No Let-Up in Campaign on Ham and Bud Reissues

THERE will be no let-up on the exploitation, advertising and publicity of the 'Ham and Bud' single reel comedies," declared F. E. Backer, general sales manager for Jans Productions, Inc.

"Our campaign is directed to the exhibitor instead of to state rights buyers. The theatre owner knows the value of a well produced comedy subject, and these exhibitors have long memories.

"They therefore know the exceptional entertaining value of Ham and Bud. We can depend upon the exhibitors themselves to demand these single reel comedies which proved so strong five years ago. And as every exhibitor has a new list of patrons, he knows these successes will appeal to them strongly.

E. K. Lincoln
Who portrays the star role in S-L's production, "Virtuous Men."

"The styles in dress do not change in comedies as they do in society plays, and therefore like old wine, the Ham and Bud comedies will never lose their entertaining qualities, through a mere matter of dress. Every print is new, and of the ninety-two prints we purchased from the Kalem Company, we have chosen fifty-two of the best, to be released one each week, for a year."

Not only are Ham and Bud starred in all these single reelers, but the leading woman is Ethel Teare, said to be one of the most beautiful and clever comediennes of the screen. When Jans Productions, Inc., recently purchased the Tom Mix reissues from Selig, the territory was disposed of in what is claimed to be a record-breaking manner, and the "Ham and Bud" comedies bid fair to go just as rapidly. A striking one-sheet and 11x14 sepias are furnished with the Ham and Bud comedies.

W. H. Production Offers a Series of Big Specials

THE W. H. Production Company is preparing to offer on the state rights market a number of big feature productions which are announced as being of such a nature that they will lend themselves particularly well to novel and extensive advertising and exploitation campaigns such as were conducted by this company with "Mickey."

According to a statement from an official of W. H. these productions have been selected for their punch and box office value so as to afford exhibitors the largest possible returns. Only one of these big specials will be offered at a time, the activities of the company being concentrated on the exploitation of each one and a majority of the territory disposed of before the next is announced. These will be the only specials handled by W. H., with the exception of short length specials such as "Custer's Last Fight," which will be offered from time to time.

The first picture in this series will be "Somebody's Business," which is now ready. No information has been vouchsafed as to the cast, or nature of this picture, however it is said to be a very high class production with a big punch and unusual advertising possibilities.

The W. H. Productions Company also announces that it is meeting with great success in exploiting the reissue of "Custer's Last Fight," and that bookings are being made for this production in many of the most prominent theatres throughout the country.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Theatre and Roof Gardens Features of New Metro

MAY ALLISON'S next Metro picture, "Almost Married," may be termed a "comedy with music." It is to be released on June 2.

Many of the scenes of this rollicking comedy of stage life feature the musical attractions of the theatre and the roof-garden jazz, with Miss Allison as the prima donna surrounded by a galaxy of real Broadway show girls and Midnight Follies beauties.

"Almost Married" is the title which was given to the story written by E. V. Durling, a New York newspaper man, for the Metro star under the original name of "His Father's Wife," but the evolution of the plot of the story inspired the change to the title under which it is released.

Swickard Was the Director.

The production, directed by Charles Swickard, has been staged with brilliance and splendor, and the Midnight Follies scenes have been modeled after a well-known New York theatre.

The adaptation of Mr. Durling's story was made by June Mathis and Luther A. Reed, of the Metro staff, and William E. Fildew photographed the play with Mr. Swickard.

Prominent in the supporting cast are Walter I. Percival, Frank Currier, Harry Rattenbury, Hugh Fay and James Warton James.

Pathe News Shows Air Views of Panama Canal

PATHE NEWS has added another aerial accomplishment to its interesting succession of pictures taken from speeding planes and dirigibles. "Over the Panama Canal with a Pathe Cameraman" is the title of this little show of sight-seeing from the skies, and it is released in issue No. 41.

For the first time since its construction, the big engineering feat of the age is photographed from an aeroplane, and the views give a more detailed and comprehensive idea of the achievement than all previous "still" views. These exclusive pictures begin with the start from the Atlantic end of the Canal, and the flight over the Gatun Locks and Lake. Approaching the Culebra Cut, one sees the place where great difficulties were encountered by earth-slides.

After a trip of 40 miles there comes into view the Miraflores Locks, the exit to the Pacific, and the spectator gets a view of the old French Canal, which was never completed.

Plays "Jungle Trail" to Capacity.

"The Jungle Trail," with William Farnum as the star, appears to be a genuine winner, according to a telegram received by the Fox Film Corporation from Thomas Proffitt, manager of the William Penn Theatre, at Chester, Pa. The wire reads: "Playing 'Jungle Trail' to capacity business. Real knockout." Thomas Proffitt."

The Fox Corporation ascribes this and other good showings of the picture to the realism of the thrilling man-hunt and the effort to reproduce truthfully an African village on a large scale.

Is "The Way" a Leaning Way?

It would seem so from this view of Norma Talmadge in her next Select, "The Way of a Woman."

"Way of a Woman" Next Norma Talmadge Picture

SELECT announces this week that Norma Talmadge's next picture will be "The Way of a Woman." This picture which was originally announced under the title of "Nancy Lee," is adapted from Eugene Walter's stage play of that name, which was seen for two seasons at the Hudson Theatre in New York.

In the production Miss Talmadge will have a strong supporting cast. Conway Tearle is cast in the leading male role, while Hassard Short, who is playing with Fay Bainter in "East is West," has another important part. Another well known member of the company is Jobyna Howland, who scored in the stage success, "The Little Journey." George Le Guerre has the role of the wild nephew, and Frank De Vernon will be seen as the father. Gertrude Berkley will be seen as the mother of "Nancy," the part played by Norma Talmadge. Stuart Holmes and Joe Humphrey are also in the company.

Miss Talmadge's director for this production was Z. Robert Leonard, who made a special trip from the Pacific Coast to New York, to take charge of the work.

The scenario was written by Mr. Walters himself, and under his direction the continuity retains all the vital appeal which made the original stage production of "Nancy Lee" such a great success.

Elaborate Press Book Ready on Big "U" Serial

UNIVERSAL has prepared elaborate advertising aids for its new serial, "Elmo the Mighty," which is to be released in June. A complete press book is now in the hands of the exchangemen. This press book contains all the information that could be got together, including all details in a column titled "At a Glance." Stories of the episodes are given in detail, advance stories and stories to be used during the running of the serial. Elmo Lincoln is the star of the serial, and several pages are devoted to special stories written about the life and screen work of the star. Special stories about the other leading stars of the serial are included also.

Besides the press book on this serial, Universal is preparing an attractive campaign book. This book contains all forms of advertising aids to be used prior to and during the running of the serial. Several opening ads are suggested for the use of the exhibitor, teaser ads, opening day ads, episode ads, and type ads. Several pages are devoted to the suggestions of stunts by means of which the serial may be advertised.

William Russell in Role of New York Millionaire

WILLIAM RUSSELL will be seen in what is expected to be the most surprising vehicle of his screen career, when he is presented by the American in "A Sporting Chance."

This is a lightning-like comedy drama from the pen of Stephen Fox, originally announced under the title, "The Signet of Sheba."

Unlike many of the previous Russell subjects, "A Sporting Chance" does not offer the "Flying A" star in the role of a Westerner, but features a young New York millionaire, whose exploits, however, are no less hair-raising because he wears tailored clothes and has a large bank account.

Fritzi Brunette is seen opposite Russell in the role of Gelberte Bonheur. The others in the cast are George Periolat, J. Farrell MacDonald, Lee Hill, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks. The production was directed by Henry King.

Dooley Films Has Beauty Brigade.

The Johnny Dooley Film Comedies, Inc., has completed arrangements for the employment of the twenty beauties who constitute the Johnny Dooley Beauty Brigade to appear in the series of two-reel pictures in which the acrobatic comedian is engaged to star.

Mr. Bach announces that the third of the Dooley series has been completed and the fourth will be put into work within a few days. Those who have viewed the finished pictures pronounce them humorous and interesting. The antics of Johnny Dooley are decidedly unusual to the screen. He has brought with him not only all the stunts and laugh producing methods he used in vaudeville and in such productions as "The Passing Show" and "Listen Lester," in which he scored successes. He has also invented new ways to bring laughter to patrons of the screen.

A New Idea of the Park Bench by Myron Selznick, Olive Thomas and Sid Grauman.

Sixty-seven varieties of ordinances are violated by the head of Selznick Pictures, his star, and the owner of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, on the "stoop" of the latter's playhouse.

Work Started on Five New Metro Productions

PHOTOGRAPHING of four productions was completed last week at Metro studios in Hollywood under the long-distance supervision of Maxwell Karger, who is in the East selecting new stories for Metro stars. Five new productions were launched in two days, with scarcely a lull for stars or directors. This is the first time in the history of the Metro Western studios that so many productions have been started simultaneously. One of the new stories is from the pen of the star himself, another is the original conception of the scenario writer.

Hale Hamilton finished "Full of Pep," the Robert F. Hill story of adventure, picturized by A. S. Le Vino. The star had Harry L. Franklin for his director, and Alice Lake as his leading woman. The cast included Victor Potel, Eugene Ford, R. D. MacLean, Charles Hill Mailes, and Fred Malatesta.

Hamilton's next picture under the tentative title of "In His Brother's Place," has been started. Hamilton wrote the story himself, and A. S. Le Vino is halfway through the continuity for it. Franklin will direct.

Emmy Wehlen has completed "Fools and Their Money." It is an original satire by E. Forst, scenarioized by Finis Fox. Herbert Blache directed. Jack Mulhall played the leading role, and in the cast are Emmett King, Molly McConnell, Betty Peterson, William V. Mong, Gerard Grassby, John Stepling, Bertram Grassby and Gordon Marr.

Miss Wehlen's next picture will be "A Favor For a Friend," an original story by Lieut. Adj. Luther A. Reed of the Metro scenario staff.

Viola Dana has completed "Some Bride" under the direction of Henry Otto. The picture is a compact farce from the pens of Anne and Alice Duffy, and the scenario is by June Mathis. Irving Cummings was Miss Dana's lead and in the cast are also Ruth Sinclair, "Smiling" Billy Mason, and Florence Carpenter.

Miss Dana will start her new story, "The Microbe," immediately. It is by Henry Altimus and was published in Ainslee's Magazine. Henry Otto will be the director.

Bert Lytell is expected to finish "One-Thing-At-a-Time-O'Day" this week. The scenes of William Dudley Pelley's circus story are almost entirely out of doors. George D. Baker wrote the continuity for the story, and John Ince directed. Eileen Percy was Lytell's lead. The rest of the cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Stanton Heck, William A. Carroll, Jules Hanft, and John Hack.

Bert Lytell has started on the John H. Blackwood comedy, "It's Easy to Make Money," adapted for the screen by Finis Fox and directed by his brother, Edwin Carewe.

May Allison has started on "Free," Wallace Irwin's story that has been picturized for Miss Allison by George D. Baker. Herbert Blache will direct. Kathleen Kerrigan and Pel Trenton have already been selected for Miss Allison's support.

Miss Allison's latest picture, "Almost Married," is now in the cutting and titling stage. Charles Swickard directed.

Big Cast Announced for Selznick's "Perfect Lover"

MYRON SELZNICK announces an impressive array of players to support Eugene O'Brien in his first Selznick starring production, "The Perfect Lover." The story is unique in that it calls for no less than four leading women to play opposite Mr. O'Brien, each part being a distinctly different type to whom the word love has a different meaning. They are Mary Boland, Marguerite Courtot, Lucille Lee Stewart and Martha Mansfield.

Mr. O'Brien is seen as a struggling young artist, who is besieged with the love of these various women. The human side of the story, as well as the dramatic situations, have been well taken care of by Edmund Goulding, who has adapted the story to the screen. Work has already been started on the production, with Ralph Ince as the director.

Cameragraph Demands More Space.

The walls down at 90 Gold street, the home of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., are beginning to bulge. Business in Cameragraphs is so good that they have to find room to take care of the growth. Partitions have been removed in the main office making one large office for the stenographic and clerical forces; also increased facilities have been arranged for the advertising and selling departments and new machinery has been installed in the factory to take care of the demand for Power's Cameragraphs.

Says Aid of Robertson-Cole Helps Sale of B. B. Features

IN announcing the change of the title of the next Bessie Barriscale feature for Exhibitors Mutual release from "Broken Threads" to "Tangled Threads," Robertson-Cole issued a statement which contained much significant meaning.

In this statement Robertson-Cole said:

"It is not the purpose nor the intent of the Robertson-Cole Company to claim credit for the remarkable success which has attended the productions made by its various allied producing organizations and which are so ably handled on the sales and distribution by Exhibitors Mutual.

"But a large measure of the accountability for the sensational success of Bessie Barriscale's recent attractions is granted Robertson-Cole by no other than J. L. Frothingham, general manager of B. B. Features, Miss Barriscale's own producing company.

"In a letter received from Mr. Frothingham last week, he ascribed the reason for Miss Barriscale's veritable triumph by the fact that she had been issuing pictures which struck a popular chord and which met with instantaneous response."

"It would have been impossible for us to get the trend of public desires in the way of entertainment without the co-operation of the Robertson-Cole officiels," Mr. Frothingham wrote.

"The Robertson-Cole Company has given us every assistance in selecting the type of picture which would prove the most profitable for exhibitors. The keen judgment of the officials of Robertson-Cole, their ability to sense what the public wants, has led to our selection of a series of plays that have gone over in smashing fashion.

Miss Barriscale Starts Another.

"Now, with the firm support of Robertson-Cole we are producing another domestic drama which I have every hope will surpass anything Miss Barriscale has heretofore done.

" 'Tangled Threads' is a story which affords Miss Barriscale every opportunity to appear at her talented best. She is being supported by a cast which includes some of the most popular players on the West Coast. Among these are Nigel Barrie, Ben Alexander, the six year old lad; Henry Kolker, Thomas Holding, Mary Jane Irving, four and a half years old, and Rosemary Theby.

"The production was written by M. B. Havey."

Mr. Frothingham concluded his letter with the assertion that his fondest expectations have been surpassed by the success which the Bariscale features have attained through the association with Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual.

Christie Begins Production on Third Special Release

HAVING begun the production of the third of the Christie Specials, Al E. Christie is carrying out plans for a two reel comedy on a much larger scale than he employed in either "Sally's Blighted Career" or "Rowdy Ann," the first Specials which have been released.

Having introduced Fay Tincher in two widely different types of roles in these Specials, Mr. Christie announces the third as still another variety for the comedienne. Farce in a city flat, or rather flats, in which several carloads of disappearing furniture furnish the crux of the plot. Harry Ham, Katherine Lewis, Eddie Barry and Patricia Palmer. Al E. Christie has laid the opening scenes of the piece in a huge ballroom, for the construction of which it was nesessary to widen the main Christie stage by removing the property rooms and reconstructing them on an additional lot which has been secured adjoining the original Christie property.

Other Christie players appearing in this production are George French, Al Haynes, Ward Caulfield and Edith Clark.

Sidelights and Reflections

THE week of May 25 saw a great line of attractions at the Times Square film theatres, New York. "Broken Blossoms" at the George M. Cohan, "The Unpardonable Sin" at the Broadway, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" at the Rivoli, Madge Kennedy in "Leave It to Susan" at the Strand, and Charlie Ray in "The Busher" at the Rialto, offer a high artistic standard that is making new friends for the screen among people who have long regarded the moving picture with indifference.

An indication of the size of the hit that "Broken Blossoms" has made in New York is the cheerful news that one of the largest ticket agencies in New York has taken 400 seats a night for the next eight weeks. The seats sell at $1.50 apiece and would easily bring $2.50 if the law against speculators were not in force.

From present indications the author has decided to get into the game himself and see to it that his stories are turned into photoplays that will meet his views of what he intended when he agreed to having his work put on the screen. This is good news. The complaint that the continuity writer and the director are often guilty of leaving out the best points and lowering the tone of a celebrated novel or famous play is founded on good grounds, but the most promising aspect of the matter is the coming together in a practical way of the man who writes the story and the man who directs it. Each will help the other. The author is going to have new and unexpected angles of the difficulties in the producing of pictures revealed to him and will learn to regard the director with a much greater degree of respect. He will find out why it is that actual experience is the only teacher and that the man who bosses the making of a photoplay has the control of the situation possessed by an aviator who did not learn to fly at a correspondence school.

The director will gain an equal amount of new light through his association with the writer. The combination means better pictures.

The excellence of a number of the recent pictures shown here has had practical effect on the longer run. "The Red Lantern," which was booked at the Rivoli with the understanding that it would fill a return date if the business went above a specified figure, far outran the amount and is coming back June 1. Douglas Fairbanks's last Artcraft picture, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," is booked with the same clause in the contract.

"The Lady of Red Butte"

Paramount Presents Dorothy Dalton in a Frontier Story of Religious Fanaticism.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE main line of action in "The Lady of Red Butte" centers around an evangelist, who goes mad from overstudy at a theological seminary while attempting to make an address, and runs amuck, finally turning up in an exhausted condition in what is known as "Suicide Paradise," a forlorn prairie group of shacks inhabited almost entirely by rough characters. The role of the evangelist is interpreted with energy by Thomas Holding, especially after his failure of mind, during a subsequent gloomy delusion that he is to redeem the world by haranguing all he meets with wild imprecations, invoking the curse of calamity upon those who refuse to become sanctified under his guidance. Subtitles are profuse with his biblical quotations prophesying that the days of visitation are come upon "Suicide Paradise."

Following his wild predictions come fire, pestilence and death, and his prayer that the gambling joint may be destroyed is almost answered when a prayer by a very sweet girl, who owns the joint, having inherited it from her father, a gambler, brings rain, and her property is saved. The proprietor of the establishment, Faro Fan, is impersonated by Miss Dalton. Her role is that of a very good girl, who stakes a poor old rummy and is kind to children. She is not only a good girl, but a brave one during the fire, which burns several of the shacks, the pestilence brought by a diseased Mexican, the drunkenness of low characters and the scenes of death and attempted killing, which follow the evangelist's appearance at "Suicide Paradise." Compensation for six reels of dark mood is found in the recovery of the evangelist's senses from a blow on the head the heroine gives him, and in a fondness she develops for him immediately thereafter.

The Story.

Living among a lot of rough characters in forlorn "Suicide Paradise," Faro Fan, proprietor of the gambling house, is known as "The Lady of Red Butte," her kindness to children and forlorn men winning respect. Then comes out of the desert a self announced "Man of God," an evangelist crazed by over study, Webster Smith by name. He invoked the wrath of the Almighty upon the town, and particularly upon Faro Fan. He exhorts all to repent and bids the lame and halt come to him and be cured.

Faro Fan decides he is an impostor when he fails to cure a little lame girl. He pronounces a curse upon her and her saloon. He prays that the wretched place shall be purged by fire, and fire starts when a saloon-keeper attempts to fumigate his place after it has been visited by a diseased Mexican. The fire destroys a church the evangelist has attempted to build, but Fan prays for rain, and it comes in time to save her gambling house.

The fanatic becomes enraged, and invades her place to destroy her. She hits him on the head in self-defence and restores his reason by the blow. He then redeems himself by starting across the desert for supplies for the children. Fan is attacked during his absence by the Mexican, who is half crazed for water. She repels him. In a second attack he is accidentally killed by a fall. Fan and Smith eventually learn to love each other.

Famous Players Buy Tourneur's "White Heather"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased Maurice Tourneur's spectacular production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The White Heather," and will release it the latter part of June as a Paramount Artcraft Special.

The melodrama from which the Tourneur production was adapted was written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, who have collaborated in many of the greatest Drury Lane successes, and was first presented at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, in 1897. It is said the title comes from the good luck flower of the Scotch highlands, the white heather. Yet Scotland serves as the background for only a small part of the melodrama.

The plot centers around the recovery of a marriage record from the hulk of a sunken yacht called "The White Heather." The big scenes take place at the bottom of the sea where the hero and his nemesis, in the weird costumes of deep sea divers, fight to the death on the ocean floor. Thus the thrilling portion of the production has the bottom of the sea for its background. For these scenes Mr. Tourneur employed the newest inventions of the Williamson Brothers, whose photographic devices make possible under water scenes.

Much of the story is laid in London, revolving between the financial district and the slums. In photography, lighting and special effects, the picture is said to be truly exceptional.

The cast was carefully selected and the work of the principals is said to be especially noteworthy. Ralph Graves plays the hero. In Mabel Ballin, who has the leading feminine role, Mr. Tourneur is said to have uncovered a genuine "find," while H. E. Herbert is more than satisfactory in the heavy part. Little Ben Alexander has much to do, and Jack Gilbert and Spottiswoode Aitken are also cast in important roles.

Issue Press Book on Universal Special.

Universal's fourteen page press book and advertising aid on "The Big Little Person" for exhibitors is now being sent to the many Universal exchanges throughout the country for distribution. Mae Murray is the star in this Special Attraction. The principal supporting stars are Clarissa Selwynne, Rodopho De Valentina and Allen Sears.

The press book contains a complete, short story and long ones for newspaper use, as well as advance stories. Special stories, chiefly biographical are included in this press book. In addition to the stories several black and white ad cuts are featured and the musical score is included.

"Happiness a la Mode" to Get Pre-Release View.

CONTRACTS were signed this week by Fred C. Aitken, branch manager of Select Pictures Corporation's Chicago Exchange, for a pre-release showing of Constance Talmadge's coming Select picture, "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, at the Ziegfeld Theatre in Chicago.

By the terms of the contract, the booking on "Happiness a la Mode" is virtually a pre pre-release, the play dates being a week in advance of the regular pre-release booking at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream. The production will start a week's engagement at the Ziegfeld Theatre on June 15. On June 22 it will begin its regular pre-release showing of two weeks at the Bijou Dream. This is the first time in the history of Constance Talmadge Select Pictures that a contract has been issued for an advance pre-release showing of her attractions.

Advance Bookings Show Popularity.

This advance booking on Miss Talmadge's coming attraction is only one indication of the eagerness of exhibitors everywhere to book this picture.

"Happiness a la Mode" is a comedy-plus-drama attraction in which Miss Talmadge will be seen as a young married woman who brings about domestic troubles by allowing her husband too much liberty. Harrison Ford plays the part of the husband who sues for a divorce, but before he can bring about his proceedings he is made the victim of a frame-up and the tables are turned.

The story is by Edwina Levin, and it was adapted for the screen by Alice Eyton. Walter Edwards did the directing.

Patricia Palmer in Mitchell Lewis Cast.

Patricia Palmer, who has been playing leads in many recent Christie Comedies, has been loaned by the Christie Company to play the leading role in support of Mitchell Lewis in a story being made at the Columbia River, in Washington.

Employ Novel Ways to Advertise "Red Lantern"

TWO more of the many big opportunities offered in the direction of advertising and publicity for Nazimova's "The Red Lantern" are described in the following account of the booking activities of the Metro offices.

Urlin Perrill, publicity director for the Dayton Theatre, at Dayton, hit upon an idea which turned out to be a veritable mint, viewed from the box-office angle. Perrill had one of his Chinese restaurant-owner friends to write in Chinese the words "the red lantern."

Taking the copy to a newspaper office, he had a "blind" two column by two-inch cut made of the inscription, and used it in all the dailies with the announcement that the first ten best answers to the name of this attraction would get a pair of free passes to the Dayton.

Swarms Came for Passes.

"Shanghaied," "The Midnight Patrol" and "The Perils of Chinatown" were neck-and-neck for first and second place when the bubble burst. It happened that an announcement had been shown on the screen at the Dayton giving the name of "The Red Lantern," and patrons, recalling this, began to swarm the place for their passes. The scheme resulted in heavy patronage.

No less productive was the scheme of John Kunsky, of Detroit. The week before the showing of the picture, Mr. Kunsky purchased several small signal balloons, which he sent up from the roof of his theatre. At intervals on the tie-ropes, Mr. Kunsky fastened great red Chinese lanterns lighted by electricity from cables hooked to his house wires. This was done every night, and the effect created by the lighted lanterns suspended above the city brought thousands of sight-seers to the location, and incidentally to the box-office of the theatre.

Outing-Chester Help Lift Morale of Fighting Forces

AT Camp Custer, Michigan, the Camp Morale Officer has ordered the continuance, at the cantonment theatre, of Outing-Chester pictures, as a result of the fine effect their beauty and humor has had on the soldier audiences.

So J. O. Brooks, manager of the theatre, writes to Arthur S. Hyman, distributor in Michigan.

"As you know, we have been running the Outing-Chesters each week for the past month, and they cannot be beaten. They are being run for the benefit of the soldiers through and in connection with the Morale Division of the U. S. Army at this camp, and from every point of view they are excellent, and win great applause. I wish to send on the June dates, as I have been urgently requested by the Camp Morale Officer to continue them."

Sennett to Make Satire on "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

FOLLOWING the success of the Paramount-Sennett satire, "East Lynne with Variations," Mack Sennett is directing a new Sennettized version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which threatens to be the funniest comedy ever filmed on the Sennett lot.

Ben Turpin will be the leading man; Charles Lynn is a ferocious Simon Legree, and Marie Prevost is the leading woman. Teddy, the famous dog of the Sennett forces, is to have at last a chance at real drama. And can you imagine Eliza crossing the ice with Teddy in pursuit? It is too early to give many of the details, but Mr. Sennett promises some surprises that will startle the most ardent Uncle Tom fans.

"Rowdy Ann"

Fay Tincher Uses Lariat, .44, Boxing Gloves and Boots in Laughing Christie Special.

Reviewed by William J. Reilly.

THE CHRISTIE SPECIAL, "Rowdy Ann," will stir up a rich vein of laughter and box office receipts. It is a sure-fire laugh and a special comedy in more ways than name alone. There isn't a dull moment in all its wild burlesque which develops from the fact that Fay Tincher is a wild Western damself, whom father sends to a fashionable Eastern seminary with a note saying: "Inclosed find $1,000 and my daughter. Keep the $1,000, and return my daughter a lady." He sent her to the school as a consequence of finding her laying out the villain cowboy of the ranch in a boxing bout. And Fay Tincher, besides being a good comedienne, is a good boxer.

Previous to this, Fay shows a new way of bringing father home from the Liquid Bar Association by persuading him to hearken to the call of the lariat and a .44. There is some good comedy at the dancing classes at the seminary, to which sessions in the classical filmy costume, Fay persists in wearing her gun and boots. Fay Tincher's work throughout is breezy with a touch of extravagance that makes her impersonation new and original. The feature cast includes Patricia Palmer, Eddie Barry, Katharine Lewis and Harry Depp. Al E. Christie directed.

"The Busher"

Paramount Presents Charles Ray at His Best in a Live Story of the National Game.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

STRIKINGLY human, amusing and interesting is Charles Ray's impersonation of the title role in the Paramount picture, "The Busher." A farm hand who is by force of circumstances narrow, awkward and self-conscious to a degree that promises all sorts of trouble for him, the boy's native ingenuity and determination inspire hope that he may achieve something "in spite of all." As such, the role is one bound to lay hold on the spectator's sympathetic interest when it is as brightly interpreted as in the Paramount production.

What furnishes Ray opportunity to be at his best is the fact that there is more than one interesting conversion of character, first from the Rube to the empty and pretentious idol of the baseball fans, so overpowered by his sudden popularity that he does not know his old friends, then to the defeated and discredited pitcher, almost despised by those who applauded him, then back again to the modest sanity of the real man who has been tried out in the crucible of experience and survived his fragmentary egotism.

This not only gives variety to the story itself, but lifts it far above the commonplace baseball narrative into a fascinating portrayal of human nature. This fine quality counted heavily with a crowded house at the Rialto, evoking one after another sympathetic outburst of laughter, and it should make "The Busher" a winner in small towns quite as much as in large ones. Added characterizations of beauty is that of the girl, by Colleen Moore, cheerful, modest and delicate and that of an enthusiastic old fan by Otto Hoffman, the whole a decided success.

The Story.

Ben Harding is "The Busher" who has a habit of pitching the local nine to success in the county tournaments. He practices in the leisure moments of a farm hand on an ingenious device of his own, the figure of a man holding a bat, the pitched balls returning automatically. His sweetheart, modest little Mazie Palmer, is so proud of him that she desregards suitors of wealth, but she is destined to have a very trying experience. A train stalled in the town releases a band of professionals, the "Pink Sox" of Minneapolis, and they unmercifully guy the rube when he comes along and proposes a game in "the lot" near by.

It is discovered by the manager, however, that his crack batsman can do nothing with the balls pitched by the Rube, and one day the village is excited by a telegram offering Ben a trial with the noted "Pink Sox." In spite of more guying he makes good so rapidly that he becomes an idol of the fans and the victim of a designing young lady after ball players with fat contracts. Devotion to her causes his downfall in an important game, and the now dandified and self-important Ben, who disdained to recognize a home-town delegation, finds himself thrown out on the mercies of a cold and unappreciative world.

Charles Ray
As the prodigal finds the old glove waiting for him in "The Busher."

In the course of time he gets back home by stealing a ride under a passenger car and returns to his old job as a farm hand through the kindly sympathies of Deacon Nasby, his former employer. He is a broken idol, determined never again to pitch a ball. Time comes, however, when the local nine is in sore straits during an important contest, and the brother of Mazie, who has bet more than his limit on the game, induces Ben to step into the pitcher's box, where he wins the game and the girl who has awaited his return to good common sense.

"When Fate Decides"

Sensational and Well Acted Fox Picture With Madlaine Traverse in the Lead.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Fox picture, "When Fate Decides," in five reels, with Madlaine Traverse in the leading role, tells a sensational "third degree" story in which the heroine to clear herself and a friend from the charge of murder wrings a confession from the real culprit. The characters stand out clear and convince the spectator of their reality in the setting of the story.

"When Fate Decides" lays bare the matrimonial skeleton of a very rich family. Miss Traverse as Vera Loudon and William Conklin as her drunken and perverse husband, enact this not pretty tragedy with an art so perfect that their impersonations serve as a wholesome relief to the sordid angles of the husband's character. Claie DuBray is as able in her character drawing of the other woman. Alicia Carteret. Her husband, who really commits the murder, is portrayed by Henry J. Herbert and this, too, is a fortunate choice.

The direction by Harry Milliard is excellent and brings out the dramatic story with full effect. There are some wonderful night scenes taken in rain and with flashes to simulate lightning that are certainly telling. The attraction stands up with other Fox pictures and that is praise truly.

Elaborate Exploitation Campaign on Hampton Film

ONE of the most elaborate exploitation campaigns ever planned for any picture has been inaugurated by Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual on the first Superior Picture starring H. B. Warner, "The Man Who Turned White." This production, which was made by Jesse D. Hampton, is expected to prove the biggest attraction ever released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual.

Every possible aid for exhibitors has been arranged for. The most pretentious exploitation book ever issued by Exhibitors Mutual has been published on the picture. It will be in twelve pages, printed in two colors, and contains a line of publicity which has been so arranged that it should pass the copy desk of any newspaper

The line of cuts will surpass in every respect any similar offering by Exhibitors Mutual. Instead of confining itself to the customary four styles of cuts for newspaper use, Exhibitors Mutual has arranged a series of twelve cuts, any one of which will give a splendid idea of the type of story.

Will Carry Special Lobby Displays.

Special lobby display sets, different and more elaborate than the usual line of displays, have been printed. The lithographs are beautiful.

Nearly half a million sets of postal cards, eight to a set, have been ordered and, properly used by exhibitors, will make a most valuable promotion angle.

Many other novel advertising features will go out with the production.

"The Man Who Turned White" will have its premiere showing in June. Last week it was screened for many of the leading first-run exhibitors. Bookings are now being accepted by the various Exhibitors Mutual exchanges.

Washburn in Role of Rube Joker.

In his latest Paramount starring vehicle, "Putting It Over," which is released June 1, Bryant Washburn is said to prove that the country boy is as clever and ingenious as the city man.

Mr. Washburn plans the role of Buddy Marsh, a young rube who get off all kinds of jokes on his townspeople. He goes to New York to make his fortune and gets work as a soda clerk in one of a large chain of stores, at a salary of ten dollars per week.

Donald Crisp directed the picture. It is from an original story by George Weston and the continuity was written by Marion Fairfax. The supporting cast includes Shirley Mason, Adele Farrington, Winifred Greenwood, Edna Mae Cooper, Casson Ferguson, C. H. Geldart, Edward Alexander, Robert Dunbar and Guy Oliver.

Kansas Showmen Praise "The Turn in the Road"

ONE of the greatest of the many tributes paid "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood picture which Robertson-Cole is releasing through Exhibitors Mutual, was given the production recently by Roscoe C. Cuneo, proprietor of the Isis Theatre, Russell, Kan. Mr. Cuneo is rated one of the most conservative exhibitors in the Middle West, and the following letter from him to the manager of the Kansas City branch of Exhibitors Mutual is deserving of attention:

"I want to tell you that 'The Turn in the Road' was the best buy ever. I have used quite a number of big features during the past eights years, and this one certainly got me the money. The great feature of it was that it was only in five reels, and the result was that I could give three shows each evening. Not a single objection was entered against the raise in prices."

Mr. Cuneo, like a number of other exhibitors, was skeptical about booking the picture because it had no star to advertise, but he exploited it as the most entertaining and cleanest picture he had shown this year and the results startled him.

Pushing Film Features in Brazil.

Advices from South America, received by the Fox Film Corporation, announced that an elaborate and extensive publicity campaign is under way in Brazil to give special exploitation to "Cleopatra," the Theda Bara superproduction; "Les Miserables," which features William Farnum, and "Queen of the Sea," the Annette Kellerman spectacle.

Panoramic Views of Circus Big Features of Metro Film

BERT LYTELL'S newest endeavor, "One-Thing-At-a-Time-O'Day" is a story of the big shows, of the life of circus people, and in particular, the life of Stradivarius O'Day, who does one thing at a time in a special sort of a way, and William Dudley Pelley, the author of the story, as originally published in a popular weekly magazine.

Metro announces that "One-Thing-At-a-Time-O'Day," with Bert Lyttel as its star, is the most comically appealing sort of a role ever written for him.

The novelty of a complete circus, staged for motion picture purposes, served to draw several hundred residents of Hollywood and vicinity to the grounds on which the tents were pitched. This property, an entire block of lots rented by Metro, constitutes the same area as used by Barnum & Bailey or Ringling Brothers shows in their Metropolitan quarters, and on it Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro, has supervised the setting of the big main tent, the side show canvas, the animal tent and the wagon top. John Ince, directed Mr. Lytell, with Webster Cullison assisting him.

Has Real Circus Lot Location.

For the scenes inside the main tent, Mr. Ince prepared a battery of cameras in such positions as to catch various angles of the tiers of seats which were crowded with onlookers, while the opening parade was in progress. One of the photographers shot a complete panoramic view of the crowd with the three rings in full swing.

With Bert Lytell are Eileen Percy, Joseph Kilgour, Jules Hanft, J. Carrol, Fred Heck and Bull Montana.

Latest Outing-Chester Has Zulu Marriage Customs:

"Here Comes the Groom," the latest Outing-Chester release, amply illustrates the marital emotions in the Zulu villages of South Africa emote about as they do at Atlantic City, Niagara Falls, or Reno, though with more abandon. The picture was played by Zulu tribesmen and women, who put their whole souls into recording the story of how a Zulu romance may develop. It holds a record of being the most difficult picture to arrange for that C. L. Chester Productions have turned out.

First the lover appears, bent on courtship, and, shaking his spear, does an earnest little dance to express his emotions. Then he stalks his young lady, and they strike hands together.

Here comes the rival, the chief's son, and after a fight between the men he perforce takes the woman for his wife, and the ceremony is performed.

All the ceremonies shown, laughable though most of them are, are simply parts of conventional Zulu marriage customs. The lover means every cavort he makes, and it's all a part of the way they arrange things over there.

Holmes Travelogue Shows Silk Industry of Japan

THE May 25 release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, "From Cocoon to Kimono," presents a marked contrast to the previous release, as it carries the spectator from sunny France to far-away Japan, where some of the wonders and entertaining features of the silk industry of that nation are revealed through the all-seeing eye of the camera.

One sees the skillful pickers stripping the leaves from the mulberry trees and cutting up the food for the worms. The hatching of the silk-worms from the eggs and the development of the cocoons from which the silk thread is taken is shown upon the screen.

He is bringing Mrs. Loudon home in an automobile during a thunderstorm. The auto breaks down near the Loudon lodge. They enter this to telephone to a garage. While they are there Loudon comes with Mrs. Cateret. They escape without being seen. While the garage man is fixing the car, Cavendish remembers that he has left his gloves in the lodge. He goes back for them. There's a tussle in a dark room. Cavendish comes away unrecognized but without the gloves.

Loudon is found killed in the lodge. The police find the gloves and a broken cuff button marked with a C. The chief questions Mrs. Loudon and puts Cavendish through a cross examination. The testimony of Mrs. Loudon's maid adds to the suspicion that Cavendish did it. Mrs. Loudon asks for twenty-four hours to find the real culprit. She invites Carteret to call and puts him through a third degree. He confesses to finding Loudon at the lodge with Mrs. Carteret and that he killed Loudon in the struggle. The police are hidden behind a curtain and hear the testimony.

"Leave It to Susan"

Goldwyn Presents Madge Kennedy in a Comedy of Charming and Fantastic Characterization.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SHOWING the cleverness, independence and originality of the American girl under decidedly trying circumstances, in which she relies upon the gallantry of some Western bandits, all with an air of blithe innocence very appealing to any American, bandit by nature or by occupation, charming Madge manages to keep the situations in the Goldwyn picture, "Leave It to Susan," above the farcical by some very bright and attractive revelations of the eternal feminine. A girl of wealthy parents and high social station, accidentally placed in the toughest kind of an environment, she displays such qualities as have caused her father to use the expression, "Leave it to Susan."

The intuitions of her sex, temporarily led astray, are quick to recognize in one of the toughest of her captors those qualities which enable her to blow out the light in a rude shack and go sound asleep among a band of hard characters. She sleeps soundly in the midst of danger because of a feminine confidence almost childish that there is one brave and true heart among the desperate crooks surrounding her. She is a woman to the core, even in her romantic love, and as such very fascinating to the spectator.

In addition to this bright characterization the Goldwyn production is a story of melodramatic ingenuity, well constructed, with settings ideally appropriate. It is a finished product, admirably typed, clean, optimistic and wholesome.

Later on, when the train is stopped on the rolling prairie because of a hot box, Susan descends to exercise her dog and follows him when he chases a rabbit, only to get left and wander vaguely until a rainstorm drives her to shelter in an old deserted shack, where she finds the same young man in different guise.

Before he has time to explain, some genuine bandits, who have gone through the same train, are driven to shelter in the shack, and the assumed young bandit has to keep up the role to protect her. He announces that he is a professional kidnapper and sends a note to her father demanding a large sum of money to be delivered at a rendezvous. The note is really a cipher signed "Co-Co-Co," and is correctly read by the father when received. He organizes a posse under the sheriff to rescue his daughter. She takes the situation philosophically, acutely, recognizing in the young kidnapper a real friend. He proves it when a peeping Tom attempts to look into her place of rest for the night, forcing the culprit to apologize on his knees before the entire band. There are exciting times soon after.

The Peeping Tom revenges himself by lassoing and tying his assailant and one other to posts in the shack. Susan learns the trick and accomplishes the same thing for the peeper. By the time her father reaches the scene with the sheriff and band, led there by the dog, Susan has the entire band either lashed to posts or held up at the point of her pistol. She does not learn until later on at her father's house, that the supposed bandit, for whom she feels a romantic passion, is a secret and trusted agent of her father, when mutual revelations bring them both to confessions of love.

"Playthings of Passion"

Kitty Gordon and Rich Apparel Featured in United Picture Theatres Production of Questionable Moral Responsibility.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

CONSISTENCY is often a forgotten element in "Playthings of Passion," but Kitty Gordon's beauty and her dazzling apparel form the keynote on which the director of the production has worked with untiring effort. The moral standard of the picture is below par—in fact it is totally without moral responsibility, and presents a fictitious idea of life. It shows in its opening scenes a brutal attack by a man on a beautiful woman, in which he almost tears her clothing from her back. This takes place in the supposedly respectable home of a wealthy American.

It also shows the woman in later years becoming fascinated by an evangelist of the slums, and actually performing the missionary work of the underworld attired in fashionable furs, silks, laces and diamonds. The effect of this discrepancy is a jar to the average sensibilities. Kitty Gordon does not measure up to dramatic requirements. Mahlon Hamilton does the best work of the cast.

"True Heart Susie" Is

NOT to the battle of cannons and of liquid fire has David W. Griffith turned in his newest Artcraft production, "True Heart Susie," which is released June 1, but to the everlasting warfare between the silken-ankled wielder of the powder puff and the plainly dressed, simple hearted sweetheart whose lips have known no rouge, whose eyebrows have never felt the touch of charcoal pencil. Then there is a minister. This eternal triangle forms the ground on which is laid the story of this Artcraft picture.

In the past it has been the custom to look to Mr. Griffith for spectacles. But this production contains no spectacle, such as people have come to expect from Mr. Griffith. Placed in a quiet country setting, with only here and there a glimpse of the larger city life showing, it resembles in some few points his earlier Artcraft production, "A Romance of Happy Valley." But where that picture drew its teaching through the contact of both the large and the small town with the boy who would make his fortune, "True Heart Susie" tells the age-old tale of a woman's sacrifice for the one she loves.

In no picture Mr. Griffith has made, it is declared, do his people reach a higher climax in the art of screen acting than they do in this production. Lillian Gish in one scene is said to portray emotion in a way never before attempted by any artist. And there are fragments of comedy that will bring laughter from every person who sees it, age, education or taste making no difference.

It is probably in the elementality of this picture, Mr. Griffith himself says, that its appeal lies, every woman in the world being able to see in Lillian Gish her own counterpart.

To Robert Harron is given the credit for creating a new style of serious comedy, It is a comedy that lingers, excites, and, while provoking laughter at the immediate moment, has a lingering seriousness that will be held in the memory of many who see it. And Clarine Seymour portrays the role of a milliner from the city. Kate Bruce, Loyola O'Connor, Walter Higby and Raymond Cannon complete the cast.

Prominent Players Support Miss Fisher in "Trixie"

MANY well-known players will be seen in support of Margarita Fisher when her next picture, "Trixie from Broadway," a comedy-drama of chorus-girl life, is released by American.

Emory Johnson appears as leading man. He plays the part of a young rancher from out California way, who out-Petruchios Petruchio in the brutal tests he applies to the loyalty and sincerity of his Broadway bride.

Olga Grey handles the supporting feminine role—that of a jealous, trouble-making Western girl who, having hoped to annex the bridegroom herself, proceeds to make life a difficult proposition for the ex-chorus girl.

George Periolat will appear as a theatrical "angel." Another character man is Frank Clark, who plays a shiftless rancher.

"Trixie from Broadway" was written by Agnes C. Johnston, and prepared for the screen by Frank Howard Clark. In spots it is a gay, slangy, rollicking comedy. In others it is intensely pathetic in its incidents. Throughout it is crammed with dramatic action and highly emotional situations, offering Miss Fisher's versatility the best chance it has had to prove itself for many months. An exciting fire, when a huge barn burns to the ground; a battle-royal between the two women; attractive stage and behind-the-stage scenes; striking costumes, and humorous subtitles in the vernacular of the chorus-girl, are among the high-lights of the picture which the fans will acclaim. Direction is by R. William Neill.

Additional Campaigns for Two Big Pathe Pictures

COMMON CLAY," adapted from Cleves Kinkead's prize Harvard play, and starring Fannie Ward has proved, in still increasing figures, to be the biggest money-getting feature ever issued by Pathe Exchange, Inc. There is a unanimity of exhibitor opinion concerning this picture that has expressed itself in liberal exploitation, and the results have borne out all expectations. Not content with merely exceeding previous records, Pathe has planned a second campaign for "Common Clay," with new advertising, new publicity and some entirely fresh ideas for exploitation.

The revival of interest in "Common Clay" is begun with the purpose of making it as near 100 per cent. as possible. And the same action will be taken with "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys. This production, made under the direction of Louis Mercanton, has met with great success. In some instances return showings have been booked. A careful exhibitor and popular survey has shown that the personality of Gaby Deslys has been the most potent factor of "Infatuation's" popularity, even admitting the unusual excellence of direction and setting, and the beauty of the spectacular investiture.

William Desmond Has Big Following in the West

THE popularity of William Desmond, starring in Jesse D. Hampton features released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors' Mutual, was put to a test right in the heart of his own baliwick—Los Angeles—last week, and the inevitable was the result—a triumph for Desmond.

At Ray's Garden Theatre "The Prodigal Liar," a breezy Western farce which has won favor everywhere, was played for an entire week with a different member of the cast appearing at each evening performance.

The play opened on Sunday night to a big audience and throughout the week the business held up beyond expectations, for it has heretofore been virtually an impossibility to hold over a picture for a week at the Garden.

In conjunction with the production three men dressed as cowboys added to the pleasure of the performance with songs of the West. The atmosphere of the production was maintained in the dressing of the theatre, even the girl ushers appeared in cowboy uniforms.

Desmond appeared at the opening performance on Sunday night and was loudly acclaimed. On succeeding nights Betty Compson, who was Desmond's leading woman, Frank Lanning and Walter Perry appeared in person and were warmly received.

Program Gives Names of Pictures for Full Month

This program booklet contains twenty pages of reading matter on white paper, the cover being gray. It is five and one-half by four inches in size. Star cuts, breezy type effects and snappy items are included in the book, which conveys information as to coming productions for a whole month—from Friday, May 2, to Saturday, May 31, in chronological order—each production occupying one page. On the inside of the front cover is an editorial. General information on the policy of the house is contained on the first page together with comment. Material of a similar nature appears on the second page. The third is devoted to a list of the house personnel, headed by the name of the manager, Jack F. Following pages are devoted to the individual productions and their dates of showing, together with interesting foot notes. Quite a comprehensive reader is given of "Married in Haste," starring Albert Ray and Elinor Fair. Another William Fox production, "The Man Hunter," which features William Farnum, is interestingly arranged with a subheading—"Big Moments"—mentioning in a few phrases the thrills in this production.

Studio lights were installed and a large company of players under the direction of Mrs. Drew worked in the theatre for several days.

The Story.

The theme of "Playthings of Passion" deals with a period in the life of a young woman of fashion who married a man for his money.

In the course of time, while she squanders his wealth on fine clothes and bridge, an evangelist of the slums calls on him for financial aid in an uplift scheme. The evangelist is invited to the rich man's home and is requested to try to interest his wife in his mission work for the purpose of diverting her mind from the frivolity. The experiment results in the woman and her spiritual guide falling in love. Called to task by the husband, the evangelist promises to cure the woman of her infatuation for him, and on her next visit to the mission he sets the scene for his own disgrace as a drunkard. The woman turns in disgust from the evangelist to her own husband, discovering that she has suddenly acquired an affection for the man she married.

"Full of Pep"

Metro Pictures Corporation Features Hale Hamilton In Breezy Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE title of this five-reel Metro picture, "Full of Pep," in no way misrepresents the character of the story. It gets into a first rate vein of humor, and maintains it to the finish, with several big laugh scenes thrown in for good measure. Hale Hamilton is in splendid comedy form in this, and is assisted by a cast which includes Alice Lake, Alice Knowland, Victor Potel, and others.

The opening scenes are laid in the United States, where the hero gets a smile from the heroine in a railroad station. She is just departing for Central America, where her father is president of a small country afflicted with a chronic tendency toward revolutions. Fate is kind, and soon sends the hero in the same direction, personally conducting a consignment of munitions, and carrying a side line of a wonderful tonic preparation, called "Pep."

The Central American end of the production has been nicely staged. The hero finds himself in the center of conflicting elements, and has to make a fight for the girl against a treacherous officer in her father's army. The story interest carries well, and certain of the comedy hits are unusually good.

The Story.

Jimmy Baxter is salesman for his father's munitions plant. He misses a train at a certain station, and while in the waiting room, gets an unexpected smile from a pretty girl. He learns that she is going with a companion to Central America.

Soon afterward, in New York City, Jimmy learns that his father is shipping a secret consignment of munitions to Santo Dinero, and Jimmy eagerly applies for the job of escorting the munitions thither, for it was to this town that his new acquaintance was bound. He takes along a friend, called "Beanpole," and their ostensible business in Central America is to sell a wonderful tonic called "Pep."

On arriving in Santo Dinero, Jimmy learns that Felicia, the girl of his heart, is the daughter of the president. He meets both the girl and her father, and later collides, in his love affair, with General Lopanzo, who also seeks the girl's hand.

Jimmy proceeds to endear himself to the natives by first selling them "Pep," and then giving it away in vast quantities. General Lopanzo makes a treacherous effort to gain the presidency, over the head of the present occupant, but Jimmy frustrates the effort in an amusing way, by promising the army plenty of "Pep," and also wins the girl.

Advertising Angles: Play up Hamilton, but make the fullest use of the title, ringing all the possible changes. Try such stuff as "The show for Monday and Tuesday is full of Pep. That's the big idea." Then a day or so later go on to explain that that is the title. Then get on the side angles, such as "He filled the army full of 'pep' and then they couldn't fight." "The Bishop's Emeralds"

Pathe Releases Six-Reel Virginia Pearson Photoplay Presenting Melodramatic Plot.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A PLOT of old-fashioned melodramatic flavor has been depicted in this six-reel subject, produced by the Virginia Pearson Photoplay, Inc. It was based on a novel, written by Capt. Houghton Townley, and carries a certain "bookishness" in the opening reels. It is told in narrative style, and perhaps some stronger dramatic effects would have been achieved by shortening the introduction.

However, once the plot gets going it develops some interesting situations of a typical melodramatic type. Virginia Pearson, who plays the leading role, finds herself an unconscious bigamist, having married a second time in the belief that her first husband and her daughter were dead. Both the first husband and the daughter turn up. Sheldon Lewis plays the role of Richard Bannister, the first husband, who is a crook. Some of the best acting in the film is contributed by Mr. Lewis, who appears in proper person, bereft of his usual equipment of whiskers, iron claws, and the like. He gives a polished performance as a villain of the black-mustached school.

This has been carefully handled in the matter of photography, subtitles and continuity. Despite its length, it is better than the average melodrama of its type.

"Bare-Fisted Gallagher" Is Something Different

THE search for the ever elusive "something different" in the way of picture material has been a particularly arduous one for William Desmond, who is starred in features released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual. But Jesse D. Hampton, who produces the Desmond photoplays, proved successful in the hunt with "The Prodigal Liar," "Life's a Funny Proposition," "Whitewashed Walls" and "The Mints of Hell." Now Desmond lays claim to having something entirely removed from the beaten tracks of motion pictures in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," in which he will be called upon to interpret a character never found in the "westerns" of the screen.

Recently the West Coast representative of Robertson-Cole had a little chat with Jesse D. Hampton regarding the merits and the nature of "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," and Hampton was serenly confident that with it Desmond would attain the acme of his success.

"'Bare-Fisted Gallagher,'" said Mr. Hampton, "gives Desmond an opportunity to play the parts that he is really best suited for—comedy with some drama.

"Desmond has a very distinct, very pleasing screen personality, and in Gallagher he simply smiles his way through five reels of film. It gives him an opportunity to ride and do some heroics, although not very much.

"'Bare-Fisted Gallagher' is really a melodrama, but played from a comedy angle, but not burlesque. His part never becomes a character slur. It is a picture which combines the big outdoors with a good active story. The story of 'Bare-Fisted Gallagher' is the type of story that might actually happen.

"Desmond is called Bare-Fisted Gallagher because he goes through the picture without a gun. He depends upon his smile and sometimes upon his bare fist to bring him through the many situations.

"This is a Western story that is different from the usual run of Western stories. No dance hall scenes, no saloons, and no heavy who is trying to kidnap the girl."

The picture starts with a bang and ends in a manner very satisfying to the audience.

Gives Page in Color to World Special.

The New York World for Sunday, May 25, gave to "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" a full page in color, illustrating the prehistoric animals that formed the motive much as a large number of papers of this unusual one-reel feature. Inasthroughout the country use this magazine section in their Sunday papers, it is estimated that in one day over ten million people were acquainted with Major Herbert M. Dawley's unique motion picture. World Pictures feels that this will be exceedingly valuable to the exhibitors of "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain."

Vitagraph Announces Its Third Anita Stewart Release

EXHIBITORS of the Vitagraph are underscoring June 16 in red ink. That date, they assume, is to be a memorable one to them—a faith founded on smashed box office records scored by two Vitagraphed Anita Stewart productions, thus far shown this season. The picture looked forward to is Vitagraph's third release of the Anita Stewart series.

"The Painted World" is the title of the picture which is arousing such high hopes. It was written by Jacques Futrelle.

The picture was directed by Ralph Ince, and, besides Miss Stewart, includes in its cast E. K. Lincoln, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Kent and Harry Northrup. It is a vivid page from the Book of Broadway, dealing, as its title infers, with that realm known as "backstage" and ramifications of that life.

Already a score of bookings of prime importance have reached Vitagraph offices in various parts of the country, from exhibitors who have "cleaned up" with the former Anita Stewart releases, "Two Women" and "From Headquarters."

Kinograms Shows Home of Sergeant York.

The current issue of Kinograms carries with it eleven interesting features. Foremost is that of Sergeant York, the greatest hero of any war in the annals of history. The Tennessean mountainer, who not until his captain and the major of his battalion established to his understanding by reading of the Scripture that he was justified in trying to kill the enemy did he go into battle as a business. Pictures are shown of his mountain home in Tennessee.

The same issue of Kinograms shows the first pictures of the landing of the American aviator in NC-4, at Ponta Delgada.

Also pictures of Hawker, specially posed for Kinograms a few minutes before he started on his attempt to fly across the Atlantic in an English aeroplane.

Bacon Starts Work on His First Production

GERALD F. BACON commenced work, this week, on the first of the series of eighteen productions to be released by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation. Mr. Bacon is using the Bacon-Backer studio, 230 West Thirty-eighth street, leased, recently, by Mr. Hall for his various producing activities.

The first of the Bacon series will be a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner," retitled "Sun-up," with Lucy Cotton, recently seen in "Turn to the Right," and now playing one of the principal roles in "Up in Mabel's Room," in the stellar role. George LeGuerre, who will be remembered for his work in the leading juvenile role in the stage production of "Business Before Pleasure," is Miss Cotton's leading man.

In the supporting roles, Mr. Bacon has such well known supporting players as Thurlów Bergen, Frank O'Connor, Morgan Conan, Charles Butler and Edouarde Durand. Oliver D. Bailey, prominent stage director, who will be remembered for his production of "The Whirl of Life," with Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, featured, is directing. Edward Earle, who was cameraman for Samuel L. Rothapfel and Charles Miller, is doing the camera work for the Bacon production. Mr. Bacon announces that his first feature will be ready for release in July.

Bridgeport Excited Over Progress of McClure Film

NEWS that McClure Productions are using the Bridgeport munition and gun plants as background for the big three-part serial, "The Yellow Eel," has stirred up considerable excitement among the inhabitants of the New England city. The Bridgeport papers are carrying stories daily about the progress of the picture. It is the first time Bridgeport's giant industries have figured in the movies.

Inside the factories, Director Charles H. France is using hundreds of workers as extras in many of the big scenes and securing eager co-operation from them.

Practically all the inside scenes for the episodes have been "shot," and production on the outside will soon start. For the exteriors a spot in New England, famous for its natural beauty has been chosen. The contrast between the bustling activity of a big munition plant and the placid calm of a New England lake is expected to be extremely effective. Several water scenes in Bridgeport harbor have already been taken.

"Strictly Confidential" Is Praised at Private View

AT the first private showing of Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," held in the Goldwyn projection room, it was agreed enthusiastically by the Goldwyn executives present that the picture was "the best yet" of the Madge Kennedy pictures. The audience, certainly sophisticated so far as the motion picture is concerned, broke into spontaneous applause at the end of the showing.

"Strictly Confidential" was originally written in play form, by Jerome K. Jerome. He called it "Fanny and the Servant Problem." It was produced in England as "The New Lady Bantock," and later appeared on Broadway. The scenario for Goldwyn was written by Rex Taylor. Clarence G. Badger directed it, while the exceptional photography which elevates the picture is credited to Marcel Le Picard.

Miss Kennedy plays the part of Fanny O'Gorman, a fascinating girl with a theatrical troupe which has "gone broke."

pleased by the match, though little is known of the girl's family. Lady Hester arranges to have the girl's father, Richard Bannister, come on a visit from London.

Richard Bannister is a gentleman crook, and at the moment has designs on the Cardew jewels. He hastily accepts the invitation to visit Ripley Manor, and Lady Hester is horrified to find in him her former husband, whom she had supposed dead. Mabel Bannister is her own daughter.

Such a situation, in which lady Hester finds herself suddenly with two husbands and a daughter, could scarcely end without disaster. This comes during the night, while Lady Hester is guarding the famous jewels, at the risk of her life. Richard Bannister is wounded by his alleged valet, Voss, who also seeks the jewels. Bannister, though fatally hurt, retaliates by shooting Voss. Both men die.

At the close Lady Hester's story is made known to the Bishop, who forgives all. Jack and Mabel also find happiness.
